Whereas it is believed that the development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project, now before the United States Senate in the form of ratification of a treaty with Canada, holds great possibilities for the further economic development of the State of Michigan and particularly for the industrial area centered around Detroit. This conclusion being based on facts that are so well known as to make repetition here unnecessary; and

Whereas it is known that forces are at work seeking to prevent favorable action by the Senate based on selfish objectives and designed to prevent the State of Michigan, and particularly the Detroit industrial area, obtaining the economic benefits that it was so clearly shown will result from this improvement, by the facts and arguments requesting favorable action on the treaty ratification in President Roosevelt's message to the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the commissioners of the Detroit Port District respectfully urge the Honorable JAMES COUZENS and the Honorable ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, United States Senators representing the State of Michigan, to use all influence in their power to have ratification of the treaty favorably acted upon by the Senate, to assure for their constituents the economic benefits which it is believed will be realized from the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence development; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary to President Roosevelt and Senators COUZENS and VANDENBERG.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before I take my seat I desire to allude in conclusion to one other phase of the argument which is rather inconsequential in reality, and yet which has apparently attracted considerable attention. That is the phase which deals with the commitment of the Republican Party as such and the Democratic Party as such in respect to this treaty, and the roll call which shortly will determine this vital issue.

My good friend the eminent Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] states that the President of the United States had no authority to include in his Albany broadcast of July 30, 1932, a statement that the Democratic national platform included a specific endorsement of the St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty. I think the Senator is correct in that statement insofar as the available record shows. I have been unable to find any copy of the Democratic national platform which states anything more than that the party is committed to waterways as indicated by the Senator from Illinois. But, Mr. President, that still leaves the mystery as to what happened to a plank which many members of the Democratic convention at Chicago seem to think was intended to have been included within it when the platform was adopted; and that does not alter the fact either that the President of the United States who became the spokesman for his party in a far greater degree than the platform ever spoke for the party, identified the St. Lawrence project as specifically included within the commitments of the Democratic Party.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator briefly, but I do not want to be diverted.

Mr. LONG. I merely wanted to know if the Senator is meaning to write our platform now?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; and I am going to have just as much to say about the Republican platform, Mr. President, as the Senator will see if he will remain in the Chamber.

Mr. President, the Democratic nominee committed his party to this undertaking in his Albany address, and, except as members of his party specifically dissented from that commitment, the members of his party are bound by the contract under which they sought the votes of the people of the United States. I shall never forget the campaign the late Senator Walsh, of Montana, made upon this particular proposition. I shall never forget that the Republican National Committee sent me a telegram, one hard-pressed hour, asking me to go into the Northwest to follow Senator Walsh and to indicate to the people of that great section that they could depend upon the Republican Party to build this seaway quite as much as upon the Democratic Party. I remember so well one great mass meeting in the city of Duluth. Senator Walsh had appeared the night before and had made the solemn statement to the people of this great area that Mr. Roosevelt and his Democratic associates would secure the enactment of legislation for the building of the St. Lawrence seaway if they got the chance. I was there the following night, and pointed out that there was no commitment in the Democratic platform, and that the only reliance was the word of the President himself.

Mr. President, the President of the United States has kept his word to the last period at the end of the sentence. The President of the United States has been as faithful and loyal to the St. Lawrence seaway project and to this specific St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty as any man in this world could be. The President of the United States is the chief proponent for the pending treaty at this moment, and if the President of the United States is followed by those of his partisans whom he at least undertook to commit to this project in his Albany speech of July 30, 1932, there will be no question about the outcome.

What is the situation on this side of the aisle, Mr. President? I have no right to censor the political consciences of the Senators yonder; but I do have a right to censor the political consciences of my own colleagues upon this side of the aisle in this particular circumstance. What is it that the Republican Party has said upon this subject as related to the pending treaty? This is what they said—and I am going to suspend until I can have the attention of all my Republican colleagues before I read it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No, Mr. President; but I should like the attention of my Republican colleagues.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I make a point of order. I ask for order in order that the Republicans may obtain the information, intelligence, and guidance the able Senator from Michigan now offers to give them, for I have long seen the necessity both of intelligence and guidance on their part.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his point of order. If he will be half as faithful to the leadership of his own party's President in this emergency as I undertake to be to the Republican platform and to the President, we shall ratify this treaty very shortly.

Now I will read the Republican commitment. There cannot be any equivocation about this language; there is no mystery about it. This plank of the platform did not disappear one day between the report of the committee on resolutions and the published announcement of the contents of the platform, as was the case with the Democrats at Chicago. There is no question about this commitment. It means what it says. Furthermore, I know of no Republican Senator who ever rose to say that he dissented from this commitment at the time it was made. What does the platform say?

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

The Republican Party stands committed to the development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway. Under the direction of President Hoover, negotiations of a treaty with Canada for this development is now at a favorable point. Recognizing the inestimable benefits which will accrue to the Nation from placing the ports of the Great Lakes on an ocean base, the party reaffirms allegiance to this great project and pledges its best efforts to secure its early completion.

Our best efforts upon this side of the aisle are pledged to the early completion of the St. Lawrence seaway; and so far as my estimate of the binding quality of a national platform is concerned, that commitment binds the Senators upon this side of the aisle, except as they may have indicated for themselves in advance that they did not intend to be bound.

Mr. President, I speak feelingly upon this subject for a very good reason. The Republican National Committee, through its headquarters at Chicago, asked me to campaign the great Middle Northwest. For what purpose? To prove that Republicans could be trusted to build the seaway. I responded to that call, and I told the citizens of that great area that they could depend upon Republicans to enact legislation to build the seaway. If Republicans will not help to build the seaway, I do not want to have to go back and explain to the people in those great centers of this Nation why it is that a solemn, unequivocal commitment of the Republican Party could not be depended upon in this aspect.

So, Mr. President, I care not whether we deal with the economics of the question or whether we deal with the international relationships involved or whether we deal with the power question or whether we deal with the political commitments, I can see no logical conclusion to this debate save the ratification of the pending treaty. I believe the best welfare of the Middle West hangs upon its ratification. I believe that if these hostile petitioners from Michigan could see the facts as I believe them incontrovertably to exist, they would approve the course which I shall take. If the seaway is rejected, no one will ever know the right or the wrong of this controversy. But if it is built, time and events will umpire the dispute; and my good Michigan friends will join me in hoping that the outcome will bring the boon of all these conjured advantages which I most profoundly believe to be involved. I speak intimately of Michigan, but what I say applies to the whole Nation and is addressed to the conscience of every Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, as the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] desires to address the Senate, and not anticipating any of his remarks, I should like to refer for a brief moment, by way of interpolation, to something said by the able Senator from Michigan.

I cannot say that I know exactly what transpired as to the platform in the Democratic National Convention touching the question of the St. Lawrence seaway. As there is nothing in the platform to give us information, I can only gather here and there, from those who were present, their viewpoint; but I want to say to the Senator from Michigan that whereas one platform, as he says, did advocate the waterway which he describes, as the Democratic platform has given forth reference to waterways, which we contemplate were the waterways under consideration through New York and from Illinois down by way of New Orleans to the Gulf, we must take into consideration that the reference meant waterways which were then under discussion in America. Mr. President, the fact that the Democratic platform does not say a word concerning the pending treaty, and does not refer to it at all, brings the able lawyers who sit around me to the thought that we lawyers have a maxim of construction that comes to us from our ancient profession—"Expressio unius est exclusio alterius."

In other words, that the expression of the one is the exclusion of the other; and therefore, since we expressed one and excluded the other, we literally denounced the other by refusing to mention it.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the senior Senator from Illinois yield to his colleague?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield first to my colleague, and then I will yield to the Senator from Louisiana, who desires to address the Senate.

Mr. DIETERICH. May I call my colleague's attention to the fact that not very many Senators sitting in this Chamber were elected on this particular platform which the Republican convention adopted in 1932.

Mr. LEWIS. That is a suggestion not unworthy to be considered.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, before speaking on the question before the Senate, I wish to send a statement to the desk and ask to have it read, and I am going to ask my colleagues to give a little more than usual attention to the reading of this document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

FEBRUARY 2, 1934.

I have been in the city of Washington pursuant to a call of the Secretary of Labor, Miss Frances Perkins, and further in connection with the work of the C.W.A. and E.R.A. in the State of Louisiana, with which I am connected as an officer of both organizations. I am further under appointment of the State Federation of Labor, and, while in the city of Washington on Thursday night, accepted and filled an appointment to speak at a function in the National City Christian Church at Thomas Circle. My regular vocation is a minister at King's Highway Church in the city of Shreveport, La., prior to which I was pastor at one of the largest churches in the State of Indiana, the University Church at Indianapolis.

In connection with my several duties while in the city of New Orleans, after having conferred with Mr. Harry L. Hopkins, head of the C.W.A., Mr. Roberts, attorney for the American Federation of Labor, and Congressmen and Senators, particularly from the State of Louisiana, I called to see United States Senator HUEY P. LONG at his room, 454, Mayflower Hotel, on Wednesday night. Upon being informed by the Senator that he would have to see me at a later hour in the evening, I was leaving his quarters when I was stopped and photographed; and, to my surprise, on the next morning, my picture appeared in a newspaper in the city of Washington as a bodyguard of United States Senator HUEY P. LONG. On the next morning I saw the picture and called upon Senator LONG in his room to ask if he understood the reason and purpose of such conduct, and, after some few words, he informed me that he was going to his office in the Senate Office Building and invited me to come along to the Capitol with him, which I did. Snow had just begun to fall, and the Senator and myself, accompanied by Congressman JOSEPH O. FERNANDEZ, left the hotel together and took an automobile, which I understand is owned by a friend of Mr. LONG'S and was waiting to carry him to the Capitol. As the Senator, Congressman FERNANDEZ, and myself entered the automobile, some reporters asked the Senator some questions, whereupon Senator LONG asked them to stand out of the way of the automobile door and allow him to close it, and that if they wished to ask any questions to visit him at the Senate Office Building. No motion of anyone to strike anyone else in any manner or particular was made, and there was no snow on the ground at the time, as it had just begun to fall. On yesterday afternoon, last night, and this morning I read the reports in the newspapers and heard them over the radio to the effect that Senator LONG and his companions, before boarding the automobile, had swung their fists at newspaper reporters, and that Senator LONG had struck one of them with a loaded cane, shoving one of them into a snow bank; all of which was about in keeping with the previous kind of news reports that I have read about Senator LONG, which, prior to my experience, I had no better understanding than to believe, at least in part.

In my calls on the other Congressmen and Senators of Louisiana and other States I have not received any such caricaturing as has been done in my call upon Senator LONG.

I am not a LONG partisan in the State of Louisiana; but, on the contrary, the church which I serve is in the more or less exclusive neighborhood of the city, and its membership is composed of the wealthier class of citizens, generally known to be political opponents of Senator LONG. Included in my membership is the mayor of the city of Shreveport, an elder of my church, who is the leader of the Long opposition in that city; as well as Mr. Val H. Murrell, the president of the Commercial National Bank, the largest bank of the city of Shreveport; and the president of the Continental American Bank, against whom Senator LONG, when a practicing attorney, engaged in a series of litigations well known to the State, and as to whom there is at least no political friendliness toward the Senator. There is also among this membership Mr. A. H. Tarver, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Shreveport. I am on friendly terms with all political factions in interest in Louisiana. I have never made a political speech or run for public office in my life; and if this character of conduct can be permitted even as to those calling upon a United States Senator in connection with their official work, then it has become dangerous for one from the State of Louisiana to pursue his philanthropic missions in the city of Washington.

GERALD K. SMITH,
Pastor King's Highway Church, Shreveport, La.; Chaplain, Louisiana State Federation of Labor; Member of the C.W.A. and E.R.A. Committees; Member of the Advisory Committee called by the Secretary of Labor for Correlation of State and National Labor Problems; Member of the Louisiana State Association for Social Advancement, a thoroughly nonpolitical and nonpartisan organization.

FEBRUARY 2, 1934.

I, J. O. FERNANDEZ, Congressman from the State of Louisiana, state that I was present on the morning of Thursday, February 1, at the time related by Dr. Gerald K. Smith in the signed foregoing statement, and I certify that the facts as stated by him are true. This however, is not my first experience in such reports and condemnation. In most of my recent efforts to be with the Senator in connection with the work I have in Congress and in Louisiana I have likewise been heralded as one of his bodyguards.

J. O. FERNANDEZ.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in connection with that matter I wish to read two or three paragraphs which appeared in the Washington Herald of February 2, 1934, in substantiation of my previous proof submitted to this body that a publicity organization has been set up here in this and in other cities with the purpose in view of preventing the advocacy of certain legislation inimical to certain interests. In connection with the fact that the Senate Privileges and Elections Committee had held that the kind of documents filed here against myself and my colleague were not valid or sufficient to warrant any consideration of them, there is printed on page 3 of this morning's Washington Herald the following:

Testimony given before a Senate committee is privileged. That is, it may be published in newspapers without fear of libel suits.

The anti-LONG people, knowing the Senate is a good sounding board, hope their charges, appearing in the newspapers of the country, will bring about such a revulsion to HUEY LONG that Louisiana will refuse to reelect him when his present term expires.

In other words, I not only have submitted to you the kind of evidence to which I have previously called your attention and the kind of evidence I gave the Senate the other day, but here is the document itself in the press which very philanthropically informs us that the sewage and filth of this gang can be spread through the Senate under privilege, and that the United States Senate is a sounding board.

I have offered a resolution to the Senate, which has been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, asking for an investigation. I have been assured by the Chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control that he would give a hearing on the matter not later than tomorrow, and I expect in due time to bring the matter back to this body.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I want to state to the Senator that this morning, while the Senator was absent from the Chamber, I believe, because I inquired as to his presence, I reported to the Senate, as Chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control, the fact that the committee, under the rule of the Senate having no jurisdiction to consider the question as to whether or not an investigation should be ordered and having only the power to provide funds for an investigation when a standing committee orders such investigation, was reporting to the Senate the fact that the resolution should be referred and must be referred first to a standing committee before the Committee to Audit and Control can provide the funds. The rule to that effect was adopted in the last Congress, being introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. Under that rule of the Senate the Committee to Audit and Control cannot yet act upon the Senator's resolution. Therefore the Senator from Louisiana should ask that his resolution be acted on by the Senate itself or that it be referred to the committee having jurisdiction.

Mr. LONG. I proposed, in the first place, that it should be done that way—that it should be acted on by the Senate. That is what I first proposed. I did not care for it to go to any committee at all. It was suggested that it ought to go to the Committee to Audit and Control on account of the fact that it would require some expenditure. I was willing for it to go to the Committee to Audit and Control on account of that feature. Otherwise I insisted and urged that it could be considered and should be considered by the Senate after laying over under the rule for 24 hours. That was my first purpose, and that is all I am asking now, to have it first acted on by the Senate. I do not want to get it into another morgue where it cannot be considered.

Mr. BYRNES. As I have stated to the Senate, under the rule the Committee to Audit and Control can act upon such a resolution only after one of the standing committees has considered and reported the resolution recommending an investigation. Then it is referred to the Committee to Audit and Control. Therefore I was simply suggesting to the Senator that there are but two ways for him to proceed, either by having the resolution referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections or by action on the floor of the Senate. The resolution has been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I suggest to the Senator that the only way——

Mr. LONG. I did not know the Senator had had it referred to the Privileges and Elections Committee in my absence this morning.

Mr. BYRNES. That is why I was advising the Senator that I inquired as to whether he was present this morning. I then reported to the Senate the facts as I have stated them, and I am advising the Senator now, so he can take up the matter as he sees fit.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I desire to correct an error into which I think my friend from South Carolina has fallen. The resolution cannot be acted upon by the Senate merely by referring it to the Committee to Audit and Control. There is a statute relating to the matter and not a rule of the Senate. It is a statutory law. Therefore we will have to have the resolution sent to a standing committee, and if that committee recommends the investigation, then the Committee to Audit and Control can act. The Senator from South Carolina said it can be done in one of two ways, either by sending the resolution to a standing committee and having it act, or by having the Senate itself act. The latter is not possible, because the requirement is a statutory requirement and not a rule of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is my recollection that the resolution was referred this morning to a standing committee.

Mr. FESS. That is the only way it can be disposed of.

Mr. LONG. Very well. I am submitting to the Committee on Privileges and Elections not only what has been adduced before the Senate, but I am submitting further facts which show that in consort with the officials of the Electric Bond & Share Co., which is over the New Orleans area, an official of that city has come up here into this area undertaking to avoid a campaign pledge which they made to reduce the highest rates in the whole of civilized America. He is up here today in consort with publicity being directed from a fountain head located in New York and located in Washington, D.C., in connection with the general publicity which they have been carrying on.

Further, Mr. President, there has never been heard of as low-down and licentious practices ever indulged in publicly by this convicted set of swindlers, as they have undertaken, from one end of the country to the other to employ in this particular instance. Nothing of its kind, no such combination, no such effort to use the Senate of the United States as a sewer for the paid-for vile publicity of this bunch of criminal culprits that comprise Electric Bond & Share combination of this country. If the Senate allows this kind of process to be used openly, such publicly alleged and published prostitution as they say they are making of the processes of the United States Senate that I have read here out of their own columns, then the Senate will have to protect itself and determine whether it is to be a legislative body or to be a target for the kind of filth and the kind of propaganda, even to the extent of filling their columns with statements that Senators and Members of the Senate do not even dare walk on the streets. The columns of the papers of yesterday and today are covered with pictures and headlines stating that a Member of the Senate does not even dare to walk the streets. In connection with the publicity that I have alleged in this resolution, I am in a position to offer records of proof.

Mr. President, I desire to say for the benefit of the Senate that there is nothing in the columns of the papers that is interfering with or depriving me of any of my rights in this city; and if that kind of calumny is to be indulged in against any other Senator I hope he will be no more affected by it than I am.

I desire to say further, Mr. President, in concluding my remarks on that question, that I believe that the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections will speedily report this resolution. It has been suggested to me by my friends here on the floor that the resolution could be simplified; but the resolution is purposely drawn so as to confer upon the Senate committee the right and power to compel the production of books and papers, and we shall need to have the resolution so drawn that there will be no question about the authority of the Senate committee. We shall need to have the right to examine into certain books and records of certain concerns to ascertain for what purpose they have made certain contributions, as well as to investigate the expenditures that have been made before by those agencies. I promise the Senate that I will produce before it witnesses who will testify as to the truth of everything I have said on this floor, and that much of it will be produced in documentary form. Those witnesses will testify to the abuse of the process of the Senate and of all interstate facilities, including the radio, including agents of the Senate and other agents of the Government who have been hired and have been prostituted either directly or indirectly, either by favors received or otherwise. Some of those agents have even stood up before a committee of the Senate and called its members yellow cowards, and called other members rats, and accused them of every vile thing that can be done. It will be shown that as a result of concentrated, organized publicity, financed by selfish and sinister interests, those characters have been extolled and held up as fitting examples, and the assertion has been made that through the fact that these agents have denounced members of Senate committees as rats and cowards, and every other name they could call them, they have been driven from their positions by such names that have been applied to them in public, and it has been heralded to the world through the newspapers that that has been the means by which they have been made to adopt an honorable attitude which otherwise they could not have been induced to do.

That has gone to this country over every leased wire and over every radio facility that we know about, and that fact will not be questioned. It will not be denied that they have extolled these agents, employed through the process of the Senate, who stood before the Senate committees day after day—not just 1 day, not just 2 days, but day after day—and denounced Members of the Senate, denounced members of the committee, called them yellow cowards, called them rats, called them everything they could be called. Their conduct has been extolled, and they have been praised as having compelled Members of the Senate who had in their minds sinister motives and purposes to disavow such purposes and to turn honest. In other words, according to their own statements, they have made the committees of the Senate turn and become honest through denouncing them publicly before the committees themselves and through the publications that have been sent out to the country they have made them turn from ill motives into good motives as a result of it. That is among the things this resolution covers as matters for investigation.

If the Senate will permit that to be done, if it will permit its own agents, to whom it has paid its money for services that ought to have been loyally rendered, to do a thing of that kind and never summon one of them before it for contempt, then the Senate has no process. If the Senate, with all of its lore of honor, the Senate in which have served the Clays and the Websters and the Calhouns, has now descended to the point where it can send out its own committee, hiring its own employees, to be denounced before the committee in every vile term that can be applied to them, and then have those vile terms praised and the utterers of them lauded to the skies, and have its own Members condemned by the assertion that through such condemnation they have been made to turn and become at least half honest—if that can be done, where is the dignity and the process of the Senate of the United States of America?

That is what this resolution purports to bring before the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to address myself to the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will proceed.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I thought we wrote the Democratic national campaign platform in Chicago, and I thought the Democrats wrote that platform; but apparently that was not true. I was one of the members of that convention, and I may state that I had the distinguished honor of designating one of the members who sat on the resolutions committee to adopt a platform for the party. When we had adopted the platform I thought that ended the matter; but if there were to be any amendments to the platform, I thought at least they would have called in the members of the convention, or at least Democrats, to amend it. But the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], sitting upon the other side of this Chamber, have been writing the platform for the Democratic Party ever since the Chicago convention adjourned. They have written it to embrace what the Republican platform embraced, upon which the Republican Party went before the people and was ingloriously defeated. I may say to you, Mr. President, that if the Democratic Party had adopted the same kind of a platform that was adopted by the Republican Party, although according to one of the delegates to the Republican convention it was rather hard to understand just what it meant, it is very doubtful that the kind of majority that the party had would have ever been given to it in the campaign last fall.

I have heard the defenses that are made for this treaty. We started out making treaties with England by trying to give England something from the day we whipped England in the War of 1776. What was the first gift that we made to England? How many Members of the Senate have ever read in the schoolbooks that we tried to give England the Louisiana Purchase and that Andrew Jackson would not let us do it? We started out negotiating with them in 1815 at Ghent. We started out to end the War of 1812, which the school histories have gone over all this country telling the people that America won, and America did not win—we started out in 1815 with our plenipotentiaries over at Ghent to negotiate a treaty with the King of Great Britain, just as we are trying to negotiate a treaty here for the St. Lawrence waterway with the King of Great Britain, as a result of which there was written into the minutes of the conference of Ghent that England declined to recognize any law of nations by which America was deeded the Louisiana Territory by Napoleon.

The United States was not in possession of the territory sufficiently to hold it at the time Pakenham's army had landed at New Orleans for the distinct purpose of taking possession of the Louisiana Purchase territory when the Treaty of Ghent arrived on American shores. When the Treaty of Ghent arrived here, had it not been for the greatest military upset that we know anything about since this country was founded, England would have remained in possession of the Louisiana Purchase territory. But the result of the battle of New Orleans was such that Jackson won a military victory. Pakenham's army evacuated the New Orleans territory. It went back to continental Europe; and, as a result of it, America has held the Louisiana Purchase territory ever since. What England could not win with arms, even though she had traded us out of it in a treaty, she immediately started out to try to get with treaties, England negotiated a treaty in the great controversy known as "54–40 or fight", I believe. She alleged that there had to be war unless there was a negotiation based upon the 54–40 basis. Even with our great statesmen, men of learned intellect and training, representing America, England wound up with everything that she claimed in the way of a physical boundary. In that treaty England was granted everything on the top-side face of the globe that she ever laid anything like a claim to, as a result of which the British have gerrymandered the map that we now see hanging on the wall so as to cut it from the east down to the southwest, and then they had to turn the map back up some other kind of a way, gerrymandering the area so that Great Britain would hold the ownership of certain parts of the Great Lakes that never ought to have been granted to her in the first place.

Then the British came along with treaty after treaty, and treaty after treaty, gradually preempting the waterways and the water rights of the United States. They made the Niagara Treaty, in which the United States surrendered a great part of the water facilities to Canada, and then they made various and sundry other concessions and interpretations of those treaties; and, as a final result of it, England has laid claim to the waterways of the United States.

This treaty does not mean that England has just laid claim to the waterways of the Great Lakes. I desire to inform my friend the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], whose great speech I read—it was made in my absence—that this treaty does not stop with the Great Lakes. This treaty does not stop with the water that is in Illinois. This treaty stops only with the waterways of the United States, and it affects the Missouri River, by reason of the fact that when we have internationalized Lake Michigan and traded with them for the control of our own domestic lake that is within the boundaries and the borders of the United States, we have actually given them the control over the Great Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway lying wholly within the United States of America.

Have I just my word for that, Mr. President? Is that merely my statement, that by this treaty we are ceding our waterways to England?—and I say "England" advisedly. This treaty is not made with Canada. This treaty is made by His Britannic Majesty with the President of the United States, Mr. Herbert Hoover, to be ratified by the United States Senate. According to the news articles that have appeared in Canada—and I read them on the floor of the Senate—according to the news articles that have appeared in Canada and have appeared in England, according to their own news articles that have been published, this treaty had as one of its cardinal points, one of its cornerstones, the purpose that they were going to have the waterways on the western hemisphere, serving the commerce of continental America, not controlled by the Congress of the United States; they were not going to have our commerce carried on the waterways of the United States; but they were going to deal a deathblow to the Mississippi and Missouri River waterway system, including the Ohio River, by giving to Great Britain a partnership in control of the waters of Lake Michigan.

One great trouble about the men sitting in the United States Senate, all of us, is that we know so little about one another's own particular business; that is, our own sectional business. What affects the country generally we know more or less about; but here is something that a large number of the Members of the Senate have never yet taken the slightest amount of time to consider.

The Mississippi River is not navigable the year around. It is not navigable now. The Mississippi River is not navigable even today. It is going to take still further work in impounding the waters of Lake Michigan during certain seasons of the year for the Mississippi River ever to be made navigable. I do not have to go to anybody else to find that out. I tell you, gentlemen of the Senate, on authority that no one can contradict—the authority of the Mississippi Valley Association, the authority of the State Board of Engineers of the State of Louisiana, which is probably the greatest authority we have, even upon the authority of the information that has been furnished by the War Department itself, as to some of which there is now a claim that they have rescinded their opinion to some extent—I tell you that on their own authority there is not now, and cannot be under this treaty, a possibility of the Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway ever being completed in its full stage, or ever being maintained after it is completed.

My friend the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], when we were debating this matter, had an opportunity to learn something that apparently he never had investigated prior to that time. He asked me to explain why I had said in a speech on the floor of the Senate that we were inundated by the surplus waters of the Mississippi River, and why I had said in another breath that there was not sufficient water in the Mississippi River to carry on commerce and navigation. Living up in Michigan, he has not learned about it. He had not been down there to Louisiana to see.

The facts are, Mr. President, that in the spring of the year the great melting process begins in the North. The rains begin in the North, and they begin in the South as well, and when that occurs there is a surplus of water through the months of April, May, and June, and sometimes even up into the month of July, so much water that it is impossible for the channel of the Mississippi River and its tributaries to carry it.

Louisiana is not overflowed by the water of Louisiana. Arkansas is not overflowed by the water of Arkansas. Mississippi is not overflowed by the water of the State of Mississippi. They are overflowed, Mr. President, by the water of Michigan, of Indiana, of Illinois, and some of it probably from Canada. They are overflowed by the water that comes from the Northwest through the Missouri River. They are overflowed by the waters of the Northeast that come through the Ohio River. They are overflowed by the snow that melts in the North during the season of melting, during the spring season—the dumping ground of the waters of the world, so far as America is concerned.

I have seen the city of Memphis overflowed—not entirely. I have seen the waters come up in the Mississippi River to where the city of Memphis was almost inundated. I have seen city after city, town after town, farm after farm entirely obliterated and wiped out as the result of the flood waters with which Congress is familiar, certainly, because it has dealt therewith.

Now, as the result of that, Mr. President, what was the trouble? There was a way to have taken care of that situation. Congress would not do it. There was a brilliant Member of Congress leading a fight in the lower House of Congress for flood control, and we had developed a program for flood control. It meant that we would establish gigantic reservoirs so that we would impound the big stocks of water in the springtime, so that when the summer season and the fall season arrived those waters could be gradually released for the purpose of supplying sufficient water for navigation and for the purpose of supplying power to this country.

We had that plan developed, Mr. President. It is known as the "Jacobs plan", which was made under my supervision. It received favorable consideration even up at the War Department.

A brilliant Congressman from the North came to me and told me, "I am sorry, I am not going to be able to advocate your plan any more." Why? Was it because he did not believe in the soundness of the plan? No. I found out, through a Congressman from the State of Arkansas, who is in Congress yet, that it was because the power interests had told them that they were not going to stand for the reservoirs and development of the power that this thing purported to do because it laid the properties of Insull at the mercy of the regulation of the power produced through the Mississippi River.

I have the Jacobs plan now. It has never been attacked from the standpoint of its engineering soundness. Had that plan been adopted, we would not be here today talking about this little beaver-board proposition running up through Canada. There would have been more power; there would have been more water; there would have been more navigation of every kind than could be told about. That plan had to go glimmering. Yet it has not gone glimmering. It is still before the War Department today. But when the spring season is over the water is gone. It has not been impounded. The silt has been allowed to collect and to gather in the bottom of the Mississippi River, where it gets heavier and heavier the nearer you get to the jetties and the nearer you get to the Gulf. When the season is over then there are no more snows to melt in the North, there are no more rivers to overflow up there, there are no more lakes to empty into the Missouri, the Ohio, or the Mississippi Rivers; and, as a result thereof, throughout the great portion of the year there is no navigation possible on the Mississippi River.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I agree with what the Senator from Louisiana has said about the control of the flood waters on the lower Mississippi. I desire to say to the Senator that the President appointed a committee last summer which is now working on such a plan as I understand the Senator to favor, investigating the possibility of it, with the idea of coming forth later with a program to control the waters of the upper Mississippi and its tributaries through the building of reservoirs to keep that flood water back in the spring, to protect the lower Mississippi Valley, and to conserve the waters for later seasons when there is not so much rain, and then let it come down the Mississippi.

Mr. LONG. We are to have that plan? I am glad to hear that the President assented to it. I had received some information to that effect here yesterday. I am glad to know that the President is interested in that plan.

That, Mr. President, is the first thing to consider; that is the first thing to do. The Father of Waters, the greatest system of waterways known either to the civilized or uncivilized world, the Father of Waters, with these marvelous tributaries leading practically into every nook and corner of the United States, should be properly developed. There is the Missouri River which goes clear up to Montana. There is the Ohio River which can be used for the transportation of steel that is made in Pittsburgh. There is every facility from the standpoint of waterway transportation, for the development of power that can be even desired in the United States, through the waterways of America, and today, instead of talking about making a trade by which we are going to give to Canada a partnership control over a lake that we in all probability must have in order that this waterway system may be made perpetual the year around, we ought not to be starting here with the cart before the horse. We ought to first survey and investigate and give to America such waters as this system is going to need, and then if there is anything left over, talk with Great Britain about giving them some of ours.

It is not time to do a thing like that, and I do not think when we have developed our own system that we will ever have in our mind giving any such control. And when we do, Mr. President, let us say for the sake of the argument—I do not admit it for a minute—let us say for the sake of the argument that we are going to want to make a better outlet from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean. Why do we have to go to Montreal to do it? Why do we have to deed any of Lake Michigan to Great Britain to do it? And we are not deeding it to Canada. It makes me tired when I hear talk about our treaty with Canada. We are not making a treaty with Canada. We are making a treaty with his Britannic Majesty.

Why should we have to put the cart before the horse and give Lake Michigan into a partnership control with Great Britain and spend—I do not know how much money it is. Figures vary. The Senator from New York claims it is going to be over $500,000,000. I am informed by my engineers in Louisiana that I used to run with down there, men that I appointed to office, that were carried on by the present Governor, that it will cost more than $500,000,000.

Why should we be talking about spending $500,000,000 on what is at best less than a secondary waterway route, when probably double that amount at the most would complete the entire waterway system that would give transportation and power and everything that could be had in America, through America, with American money, employing American labor for American commerce?

Let us say that after we get through with this we are going to define in our own minds, then that we will have completed, then that we will have protected a sufficient water supply to feed the main stem of the Mississippi River and the tributaries of the Mississippi River the year round, then that we will have held unto ourselves sufficient water for all the power needs of this country, then that we will have done that, let us say that after that has been worked out and thoroughly developed that we find out that we have enough water left that we can afford to open up a clear route to the Atlantic Ocean.

Then what are we going to do? My friend from Montana will say, "We want commerce." We will say to him, "You have got it. We have developed the Missouri River. We have made you a river route right up into the State of Montana. And are you going to go 1,000 miles to get to water, to go through Canada, when we have the Missouri River up to your door, and not spent as much capital for it?"

What will we do then if we are going to get this narrow strip from the Great Lakes over to the Atlantic Ocean? It is not necessary to go through Canada, Mr. President. It has been developed to my mind and satisfaction, and I cannot see why it has not been to the satisfaction of everyone else, that instead of having a route through Canada that at best is not good for more than 6½ months out of the year—and then very limited at that—that with less than half the expenditure America can stretch that waterway route from the Great Lakes through the State of New York, as shown by the red line on that map; they can dig it just as deep as the circumstances may require—I understand it is already 18 feet deep; it can be made 30 feet deep—they can develop the same water route that they claim they want to have from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean by connecting up with such water routes as already exist, and by deepening such water routes as already exist, right from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic seaboard, right through the State of New York, giving America its own waterway 100 percent in America, with American water, for American tonnage, with American money, to employ American labor, rather than giving American water to develop a Canadian port, and American money to hire Canadian labor, and American money to develop a Canadian seaboard.

That, Mr. President, is what we can do; and we can do it at the very lowest estimation at less than half the cost of developing the Canadian waterway system which the pending treaty provides for.

I have been unable to understand the kind of reasoning that my friends employ who are in favor of the bill. The mention of the word "power" is like a red flag in a bull's face to them. But this is not the way to do it. This is not the way to get it. I do not want to have power up there in Canada to be expended through the United States at a cost of $500,000,000 of American money, because it is too far away to ever do very many people much good. It is limited in its possibilities at the best. But if the main stem of the Mississippi River, the Missouri River, and the Ohio River were developed, it is all-sufficient. There is not a nook or corner in the United States, Mr. President, to which every power facility cannot be given as the result of our own power controls held in America.

I now desire to speak, Mr. President, about the platform in Chicago that our good friends have been writing for us. I wish to speak relative to this provision of the Democratic Party, that never was written into it, that my friends from Michigan and Wisconsin on the Republican side are helping us write into it now.

Of course I know that the President made some kind of a statement. It is argued by my learned friend from Illinois that that statement could well have been intended under the rule of reason to have meant one thing and have meant another thing. I have never given particular attention to what was the statement that the President made; but, of course, the President has a right to do what he wants to do; but I was in Chicago, Mr. President, when this question came up; I was at least in on the naming of one man who sat on the resolutions committee; I know that that same individual came to me about the St. Lawrence waterway matter; I was given to understand that it was not going into the platform to go on the floor, and that it did not go into the platform to go on the floor; that it was never read on the floor—not one line of it, not a word of it—and, much as I was interested in the nomination of Mr. Roosevelt at Chicago, and hard as I fought for it there, if they had ever come on that floor with a proposition that they were going to vote to ratify a treaty, which at that time had not been made, by which they were going to internationalize Lake Michigan, give away the water of Lake Michigan and use American money for Canadian labor, and use American money for Canadian materials and American money to build a Canadian port, taking away money that America needed in order to do its own work, taking away money that America needed in order to develop its own waterways, and taking away money that America needed to employ its own labor that was then idle—I can tell you, Mr. President, if that kind of proposition had ever been brought to the floor of the Democratic National Convention in Chicago, it would have torn that convention all to pieces, and it never could have been put through there. It was not in the cards that such a proposal could have been written into the national Democratic platform in Chicago.

I say it could not have been written into it. Why could it not have been written into it? I can take that map on the wall there [indicating] and show the Senate by the cards that it was not possible to get a majority of the members of the resolutions committee at the Democratic National Convention ever to stand for writing into the platform a plank giving American money and American water to Canada at the sacrifice of the waterway system of the United States. It could not have been done; it was not done; and was never intended to have been done. Some Senator has said that Mr. Hitchcock made some kind of an affidavit that they meant to do it. That might have been what Mr. Hitchcock meant to do, but that was not what other members of the resolutions committee meant to do, for had it been that plank in the platform could not have come out as it did.

Our friends of the Middle West have been very generous to us, Mr. President, and we are very much grieved to have to oppose anything for which they ask. A Senator said to me this morning, "We ought to be generous to the Middle West." So we ought to be and we are willing to be; we are willing to do anything that we can to build up the Middle West; we are willing to do anything we can to build up the waterways of the Middle West; we are willing to do anything we can to preserve the sovereignty of the Middle West, but we love the Middle West too well to have to start out ceding its rights to Great Britain at this stage of the game.

We fought to have secession in the South, but the Constitution later forbade it. What did General Sherman say when he left the Louisiana State University? General William Tecumseh Sherman, when the Civil War was almost ready to be declared, was the president of the Louisiana State University. What did he say when he left? He said, "There can be no division of this country because the source of the Mississippi River cannot allow the mouth of the Mississippi River to be in the control of anyone except a part of the Federal Government."

The one ground upon which he based his position that secession inevitably meant war was that a division of the source of the water of the Mississippi could not be allowed, for the country that controlled the route to the Gulf would be in control of its navigation and commerce. Yet, today we are proposing to make the Middle West, according to their own argument, servile to Canada for its own waterways and commerce. We are now proposing, Mr. President, not to help the Middle West, but we are proposing to take Lake Michigan, a body of water that, if we are going to say it belongs to any section, certainly belongs to the Middle West as much as it belongs to anybody else—we are going to take the source of all the power and waterway possibilities of that territory and, to a large extent, vest it in the international control jointly of Great Britain and the United States. We might just as well go one step further. The Canadians are not going to stop with this treaty; they do not have to stop with it. They have come on down until they have preempted such a control over the Great Lakes that we have not got anything much left there except Lake Michigan that is not under international control—there is very little of it that is not—and then, when they shall have preempted Lake Michigan, along with the other lakes; when they shall have taken, in a benevolent and patriotic manner, from $500,000,000 to $600,000,000 of American money to develop the greatest port on the Western Hemisphere for the benefit of Canada, with perhaps such little accretions here and there as are going to be given to the Middle West, then they will negotiate a treaty the next time to internationalize the Mississippi River.

If, after having negotiated this treaty to internationalize Lake Michigan, we ratify it, the next thing the Canadians will do will be to negotiate a treaty to internationalize the Mississippi River. Why? Because they will control the water that is necessary, according to their own statements and estimates, to navigate the Mississippi River. It is now proposed to do just exactly the opposite of what General Sherman counseled. We are going to commit the very act that General Sherman said would bring on a civil war, and which did bring on a civil war. We are going now to give them the control of the water that is just as necessary to navigate the Mississippi River as is a steamboat itself; and then we are going to have to go bend ourselves on our knees and say to the great Canadian provincial ruler, who is his Britannic Majesty, George the—what is his number?

Mr. LEWIS. I hope the Senator will "get his number", if necessary.

Mr. LONG. George the V! We always have our trouble with the Georges. This one is slicker than the others, although he is a good man, I understand; but when we get ready to say here we have decided that we want power in the United States on the main stem of the Mississippi River, we have decided that we want power not only in the month of April, May, June, and July, but we have decided that we want power the year around; we have decided that we want navigation on the Mississippi River the year around; we want navigation on the Missouri River from Montana into the Mississippi and the Gulf or from the Mississippi to Chicago and the Great Lakes, and when we say to his Britannic Majesty we want navigation from Pittsburgh to Memphis, what will his Brittanic Majesty say? His response will be, "In order to do that, you have got to have a grant from me allowing you to draw water from Lake Michigan for 7 months out of the year; you cannot run the Mississippi River as a navigable stream unless you have got the right to draw water from Lake Michigan, and I will not let you draw the water from Lake Michigan for American commerce unless I am given some part of the ownership of that commerce."

Mr. President, we have already internationalized the Niagara River; we have internationalized the other Lakes, and now we are going to internationalize Lake Michigan; Lake Michigan waters being just as necessary in order that the commerce may float from Pittsburgh to New Orleans or Pittsburgh to Chicago or through the Missouri River on to Chicago and New Orleans as is the water that is now in the river. It is going to mean that Great Britain will in time be just as much in control of the commerce that sails on the Mississippi River, if it is allowed to sail—and they will not allow it to sail—just as much as it is in control of the commerce that today goes from Montreal to Winnipeg.

I cannot understand why my friends cannot see that. It is so plain to me that I cannot see why, with all their learning and skill, Senators in this body have—my friend from the State of Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who has studied this waterway problem, and my friend from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who sat on the Commerce Committee when we were appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars for the Mississippi, its main stem and its tributaries—I cannot understand, for the life of me, how any living man can fail to see that if we go another step further and internationalize Lake Michigan and place the waters that are needed by the Mississippi River under the control of Great Britain as a joint partner with America we can never expect to escape internationalizing the balance of the waterways of the United States. I cannot see why they cannot see it.

If they want it, if anybody says it is going to be a great help to them to have joined the Great Lakes and the Atlantic seaboard, we are willing to start that work tomorrow. We are willing to start out, Mr. President, digging right in America with American labor and using American materials to build up an American port and to provide an American waterway. We are willing to start at a good spot any day, although it is not the first thing that ought to be done, for we ought first to develop the Mississippi River. However, we are willing to start tomorrow morning with whatever dredging is necessary, if it will do any good, and build whatever is necessary to join the waters of the Great Lakes to the waters of the Atlantic seaboard in the State of New York. It can be done for less than half the expense of the St. Lawrence waterway; it can be done with the labor of American people, and they need the labor; it can be done with the materials produced by the American people, and they need to sell them; it can be done for the benefit of American commerce, and it may need it; and it can be done for the glorification of the continent of America, not, Mr. President, to place under the charge of Great Britain the water facilities not only what they now own, but the water facilities that are owned at present by the United States.

I do not pretend to be so familiar with this question as are others on this floor, but I do think I understand it well enough to answer any question that has been presented by the opposition. I do not pretend to understand it nearly so well, in its infinite details, as do others who have studied it later than have I. At one time I was much better informed upon this question than I now am, because I studied it considerably before I formed any opinion on it, and I had the advantage of splendid engineers and splendid consultants who were working on not only a flood-relief program but a power-relief program, if I may so designate it. I had the reports, I had the statistics, I had all the information obtainable by the work of these men, and I studied the question with them through several nights and several days, and, I might say, through several months and probably over a period extending for 3, 4, 5, or 6 years.

I could not at that time, I cannot now, and I do not think I can at any time see the possibility or probability of any opinion ever being formed by me or by anyone understanding this situation as I think I understand it such as would induce an agreement to internationalize Lake Michigan and deprive the waterways of the Mississippi and its main stem of the water that is necessary in order to use American money to build up a port for Americans.

I am not one of the British haters; I am not one of those who abuse Great Britain and the King of England; but I want to say one thing, that the British are about the smoothest set that we have ever had anything to do with in our lives. I at one time said that I never did want to see another American mission go over to England to negotiate another treaty; that I never wanted to let them leave here to negotiate another one, for I thought it was too bad to let American diplomatic commissioners go across the Atlantic Ocean, 3,000 miles away from home, to negotiate a treaty with Great Britain, because I was afraid that they would take what the Americans had with them; but, lo and behold, when this gang came to America this time they not only took what the commissioners had with them over there but they came pretty near taking all we had left in the way of waterways in the United States. I do not want them ever to come back to America. If we ever have to meet with them to negotiate a treaty, I do not want to ever have them come here again, because they will not see as many things and know as many things that they will get their hands on as apparently they saw this time unless they come here. They seemed to have second sight. Who on the living earth ever thought they would come here for anything like this? Do you take my word for that? You do not have to; you can take the word of a Canadian newspaper read on the floor of the Senate.

One of those newspaper editorials said, "We had no idea that they were going to get any such thing out of America as they came back with." It said, "They exceeded their instructions in what they received." It said, "They have brought home the bacon." Those are the exact words they used. They said, "Think of it. Think what his Britannic Majesty has got through this treaty. He has not only got the Port of Montreal, he has not only got business from the United States that is to go through that port, but he has actually got the money of the United States with which to build up the Port of Montreal; he actually got the money from the United States with which to hire Canadian labor; he actually got the money from the United States with which to buy Canadian material; and lo and behold, they were not satisfied with that, but they took away America's own water to keep them from using it to build up a waterway to the Gulf of Mexico."

They said, "He brought home the bacon." He not only brought home the bacon, but he brought home the whole hog. [Laughter.] He could not have obtained any more; it would not have been possible to get more than he got that time. He got the United States of America into what might be called a diplomatic conference, and he said, "You are wanting a waterway. We are going to build it through Canada."

If they had stopped and said, "You are going to build it in America and Canada is going to build it in Canada" that would have been one thing. But no, they did not say that. They said, "America is going to build it in America and America is going to build it in Canada." If they had said "America is going to build it in Canada with American labor", that would have been one thing; but no, they said "America is going to build it in Canada and Canada will build it with American money and Canadian labor."

They were not satisfied with that, but they fixed it up to the point where America is not only going to build up the Port of Montreal and a waterway to the Atlantic Ocean to take away the commerce that ought to flow through American waters, but they are going to take the water of the people of the United States that they need to promote their own commerce and build up the States of the Union, and use that to build up Canada and keep the United States from having anything.

This editorial went on to say that the great thing about it is that they killed the one great enemy of the development of Canadian commerce that has always menaced them, and that is the Great Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway. "That is one great thing we have done", they said. They said, "We have succeeded in killing the hopes and possibilities of freight being diverted from Canada that America might float upon her own waterways to the Gulf of Mexico through New Orleans."

What is the use of keeping up the Mississippi River after that? There is no use. Congress will not do it. The reason why they kept up the Mississippi River as they had is that every time we wanted to build a little bridge across the Mississippi River we had to come up here and go through every one of the departments with a spirit level and compass to get any authority, and it is difficult to get authority to build even in that way. If we want to span a little stream down there with a bridge, we find that it is a navigable stream under control of the United States, and that we have to get a bill through Congress and get the signature of the President of the United States before we can do it. Then we have to build that bridge with our own money in the final analysis.

When the flood waters come down into that country through the same system over which they exercise such supreme sovereignty, and that has been the case for over 100 years under the United States Government, the Federal Government did not for many years contribute anything to take care of the people of America who were injured and wiped out and harmed by the flood waters that came down upon them from the North and from other territory than their own.

The only way we have been able to get any relief from the Congress is on the theory that it is a matter of navigation; that for the protection and development of the navigable facilities of these rivers the Federal Government takes a hand. It has been done on the theory that protection and development of the navigation facilities of the Mississippi River and its tributaries and the Missouri River and its tributaries are interwoven with the flood-control program. That is how we manage to get anything done.

But now we do not propose to have it done in that manner. We propose to center our activities, so far as investigation is concerned, up through Canada. We propose to take $600,000,000 that is needed today to build up our ports and use it for the inland waterways of another country. Oh, I am not greedy about it. There ought to be some money spent at the port of Savannah and at the ports in Texas. There are to be moneys spent on the ports in California. There ought to be moneys spent on the ports farther up along the Pacific coast. There is considerable work to be done on all the ports on the ocean, and there is need of plenty of work being done on the main stem of the Mississippi River and its tributaries and the Missouri River.

For that reason, and for other reasons, we certainly hope the treaty will be defeated. We hope, further, not only that will the treaty be defeated, but insofar as concerns that particular project that the President will keep in mind the development of a Mississippi River waterway and a Missouri River waterway. If he has that in mind, we will give him every assistance and help in every way we can. I thank the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I must inform the Chair that in the general interest of debate we have overlooked the fact that we are in legislative session; that there is a bill pending in charge of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]; and that we are not really in executive session.

At this point I feel that I owe it to Senators who expect to speak on this question or desire to do so, thinking that time will possibly be shortened by presentation of an agreement for a vote, to say to them that we who sought to negotiate a vote at a certain time have failed. In the last few minutes information has come to us that those interested in the addresses they desire to deliver, or for whatever reason they have, cannot agree to any vote this week. Consequently the question of agreement for a vote will have to go over until Monday, and therefore I inform Senators so they may be free either to resume this afternoon, if that is their purpose, or to wait until Monday.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. Is the Senate in legislative or in executive session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is in legislative session.

INVESTIGATION OF DISTRIBUTION OF MILK AND DAIRY PRODUCTS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, during the special session of Congress, by authority of the Senate, the Committee on the District of Columbia was authorized to make certain investigations bearing on the subject of milk distribution and dairy-products distribution. That inquiry was carried on during the summer months with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and myself present. The inquiry developed some very interesting matters, so much so that within the last few days the inquiry and evidence adduced therein, together with other evidence, has brought forth certain public statements from the Secretary of Agriculture, most interesting in themselves, in which he states that a Nation-wide inquiry should prevail upon this subject.

With that in mind, and having in mind the disclosures made before the Committee on the District of Columbia, I now send to the desk and offer a resolution calling for the appointment of a special committee of this body to make the Nation-wide investigation on the subject of milk and dairy products and the distribution thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What disposition does the Senator desire made of the resolution?

Mr. McCARRAN. I think possibly it might well be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was about to suggest, in view of the fact that the functions of the Committee on the District of Columbia are limited and this transcends the duties and responsibilities of that committee, the resolution ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The resolution (S.Res. 168) was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Whereas on the 15th day of May 1933, Senate Resolution 76, Seventy-third Congress, first session, was agreed to, authorizing and directing the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, to investigate conditions with respect to the sale and distribution of milk, cream, ice cream, and other dairy products within the District of Columbia with a view to determining particularly whether any individual, partnership, or corporation, residing in the District of Columbia or elsewhere was operating in restraint of trade or commerce, or was in any way monopolizing the dairy industry within the District of Columbia; and

Whereas, pursuant to said resolution, an investigation was held by a duly authorized subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia and many witnesses were heard, including representatives of both producers and distributors; and

Whereas the testimony adduced at the hearings held in pursuance to the resolution aforesaid abundantly sustains the contention that over a period of years the producers of milk in the District of Columbia milk shed have been receiving far less than the cost of production, due to attempts by large distributors to monopolize the milk market within the District of Columbia; and

Whereas the testimony so adduced further tends to prove that this condition is not confined to the District of Columbia milk shed, but likewise exists in all the principal milk sheds in the United States; and

Whereas such testimony tends to substantiate complaints received from other localities to the effect that competition in trade in dairy products has likewise been stifled and that the cost to the consumer of such dairy products exceeds the cost to the producer by more than a fair margin of profit to the producer; and

Whereas such testimony tends also to establish that the sale of dairy products in the District of Columbia milk shed and the milk sheds of the principal cities of the country has been monopolized by large holding companies; and

Whereas such testimony tends also to show that the said holding companies are continuing to merge and consolidate in order further to monopolize and control the milk markets of this country; and

Whereas the continuation of the practices now engaged in by these large milk holding companies will in the end destroy the already sorely pressed agrarian populace: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to investigate conditions with respect to the sale and distribution of milk, cream, ice cream, and other dairy products within the Territorial limits of the United States by any individual, partnership, association, or corporation with a view to determining particularly whether any such individual, partnership, association, or corporation is operating within any milk shed of the United States in such a manner as to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the sale or distribution of such dairy products, or is a party to any conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in any such dairy products, or is in any way monopolizing or attempting to monopolize such trade or commerce within the United States or any part thereof, or is using any unfair method of competition in connection with the sale or distribution of any such dairy products. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the result of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary remedial legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress and succeeding Congresses until the final report is submitted, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $100,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few days ago the so-called "District liquor bill" passed both bodies and was sent to the President for his approval. He signed the bill, but in announcing his approval he transmitted statements submitted by the Attorney General and Mr. Choate, head of the Federal Alcohol Control Administration. The statements to which I have referred, as well as the message from the President, suggested supplemental legislation to correct alleged ambiguities or uncertainties and certain policies carried in the law. I desire to submit a few observations by way of reply to the statements of the Attorney General and Mr. Choate.

Recommendations or suggestions made by the President are entitled to serious consideration, and should be treated with the utmost respect.

The views of the Attorney General upon matters coming within the sphere of his activities are also to be given serious consideration by Congress, and the same may be said of the views of Mr. Choate regarding questions arising in the performance of his duties.

First, may I say that questions of policy concerning District legislation are primarily dealt with by Congress. Of course, the President's approval is essential to give validity to legislative measures. He may make recommendations to Congress regarding the District of Columbia, but the responsibility rests upon Congress to legislate for the District and to determine legislative policies. If measures passed by the Congress are not in harmony with the views of the President they may be vetoed by him. Policies adopted by Congress may be unwise, but, if enacted into law, they must prevail. The President and the Attorney General, with respect to the law under discussion, were within their rights in suggesting changes in the bill passed by Congress and, if the suggestions submitted possessed merit or were necessary to improve the law, Congress should promptly act upon the same.

In my opinion, the questions raised by the Attorney General and Mr. Choate were fully considered, both by the House and Senate Committees on the District of Columbia, and upon such consideration the provisions of the law discussed by them were written into the law.

I respectfully dissent from the positions taken by the Attorney General and Mr. Choate, and therefore do not believe additional legislation is required to supplement the act to which they refer. The following comment is made by the Attorney General:

> The bill contains a number of provisions which would seem to require clarification and correction.

The report then proceeds to enumerate the several provisions referred to, which I shall briefly discuss. The Attorney General states:

> (1) The bill contains no saving clause subordinating its provisions to codes of fair competition where there is an inconsistency between them. Such a safeguarding provision seems desirable in view of the fact that codes of fair competition for various branches of the alcoholic-beverage industry have already been adopted.

Mr. President, with respect to this suggestion, it involves primarily a question of policy, and in this respect it is suggested that perhaps codes of fair competition for all branches of the alcoholic-beverage industry have not been adopted. That seems very clear.

Because such codes may be modified and changed, there is no certainty that the codes dealing with alcoholic beverages have canvassed the whole situation and are so comprehensive as to meet all present and future conditions. The control of the sale of alcoholic beverages is now a local matter; it is for the States and their political subdivisions to determine whether alcoholic liquors shall be manufactured or sold and what regulations shall be devised and enforced. What will meet the views of one State may not be approved by the people of other States. The District of Columbia has the responsibility of dealing with this important question, and codes now existing dealing with the liquor question, if there be any, or codes hereafter proposed, may not meet the wishes of the people of the District of Columbia. Whether or not Congress would want to subordinate the provisions of a bill regularly enacted into law to any provision that might hereafter be adopted in a code of fair competition raises a serious question.

Suppose that after the passage of the so-called "liquor bill" a code should be adopted by the N.R.A., or by some other organization, Nation-wide in character; is it proper for Congress to now bond the District by its unknown provisions? It might conflict with the views of the people of the District or of Congress. They might be unwilling to submit to a code of the character to which I have referred. If a code shall be formulated by the N.R.A. which deals with the liquor question, and its provisions are such as to meet the views of the residents of the District and Congress, and legislation is essential to bring the District within its terms—then legislation may be sought for that purpose.

In any event, the codes are subject to change. Moreover, I respectfully submit the provision suggested by the Attorney General is of doubtful constitutionality. On its face it is a delegation of power by the Congress. The Congress solemnly enacts a provision and in the same breath declares it subject to the provisions of certain codes of fair competition, some of which may not even have been adopted and, if and when adopted, are subject to change.

To permit the provisions of the code of fair competition to modify the Liquor Control Act would in effect permit modification of provisions of the act fixing tax rates, among others, thus perhaps even removing the tax altogether on certain articles or subjecting articles to tax which are not taxable under the act. This could be brought about by means of definition of the various beverages in the codes, at variance with the act, certainly a far-reaching delegation of power by the Congress and to an uncertain agency at best; it being a fair assumption that codes, which must of necessity be flexible, are not given the same rigidity from a legal standpoint with which acts of Congress are endowed.

In other words, it is suggested, as understand, that the act of Congress dealing with alcoholic beverages within the District, should be subject to codes whether in existence or not in existence, regardless of whether they are appropriate to the District of Columbia. The second point made by the Attorney General is as follows:

> (2) Section 9, subsection (b), paragraph 3, of the bill, if literally construed, would seem to require that every purchaser and consumer of liquor should obtain a license. Clearly that is not the intention of the bill.

Of course the Attorney General is right when he says that is not the intention of the bill. In suggesting that the bill might be so construed, I believe a number of considerations have been overlooked:

First, the provision in question appears in a subdivision devoted exclusively to solicitors. Senators will recall that a provision of the act deals with persons who obtain licenses to solicit the purchase of beverages from corporations or companies represented by them; and the section referred to by the Attorney General deals exclusively with solicitors.

Second, it is couched in substantially the same language as the first paragraph of the subsection, which refers specifically to the holder of a solicitor's license.

Third, the second paragraph in the subsection, immediately preceding the paragraph in question, provides specifically that nothing in the subsection shall apply to any offer for sale or solicitation made upon the premises designated in the license of the vendor.

Fourth, there is no provision in the act for the issuance of a license to a purchaser or consumer suggested by the Attorney General.

Fifth, disregarding all the foregoing considerations, the adoption of the possible—or impossible—construction placed upon the language by the Attorney General produces the result that "An act to control the manufacture, transportation, possession, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia" has failed utterly of its purpose, inasmuch as it would require a license by purchaser and consumer and makes no provision for those persons to obtain a license. To strain the language and context of a provision to attain such a result can scarcely be said to be a justifiable treatment of a legislative enactment.

The next criticism—if I may use that word—of the act is as follows:

> (3) Section 14 (c) provides that except for certain limited types of retail licenses no place shall be deemed appropriate for a license "if the owners of a majority of the real property" within a radius of 600 feet shall object to the granting of the license. It is not clear whether the phrase "owners of a majority of the real property" is intended to mean a majority of the owners of real property within the prescribed radius or the owners of the major portion of the area within the prescribed radius. This is an ambiguity that is likely to give rise to litigation.

By what process of reasoning the words "owners of a majority" might be construed to mean "majority of the owners" does not appear from the report of the Attorney General, and apparently the suggested ambiguity is, Do the words mean what they plainly say, or shall they be construed to mean something else?

The fourth comment in the Attorney General's report is as follows:

> (4) The provision in section 5 prohibiting members and employees of the board from having any indirect interest in the liquor business is too broad in that, as framed, it might be construed as preventing them from owning any stock in railroad companies, warehousing companies, etc.

In all fairness there might be adduced here a technical argument such as the Attorney General offers. It is submitted, however, that the provision would not be construed as suggested. The language obviously is designed to prevent the members and employees of the board being interested in the liquor business as such.

The next comment made by the Attorney General is as follows:

(5) Section 12 prevents chain stores from selling beverages, as no person is permitted to have more than one retail license, while every license appears to be limited to a single place.

Undoubtedly section 12 means exactly what the Attorney General declares it means, and apparently what the Congress intended when the bill was passed. Wherein lies the need for clarification is not pointed out. Apparently the objection is to the policy of the provision.

The committees having the bill in charge gave due consideration to this question and determined that the number of licenses to be issued should be limited. There was no misunderstanding of the terms of the measure or the object to be attained. Some persons may not approve this policy, but Congress did and wrote it into the law.

Speaking for myself, the fewer licenses issued the better. I should be glad to see a limited number of licenses, and strict regulations, to the end that temperance might be promoted. But at any rate, whether we quarrel with the policy announced in the bill or not, that policy was declared; and, so far as I am concerned, I do not feel like amending the bill in order to change that provision.

The next comment made by the distinguished Attorney General is as follows:

(6) Section 15 excludes stores and restaurants in residential districts, unless located within a hotel, apartment house, or club, from obtaining any retail licenses.

Making the same comment as above, the construction placed upon the provision by the Attorney General is correct. He has not enlarged upon the bare statement of what the provision means, and apparently his objection must be to the policy.

Undoubtedly the President had the right to veto the bill because policies were expressed in the bill with which he was not in sympathy. He had the right to submit objections for the consideration of the Senate and the House, if he felt that there were objections to policies announced, with a view to having the bill amended. Speaking for myself, and I think for the committee, the policy announced in the provision to which attention has been challenged by the Attorney General was one which was reached after considerable discussion by the committee. I see no reason, at least for the present, to adopt a different policy from that announced in the act after consideration by the committees of both the House and the Senate.

The Attorney General makes further comment as follows:

(7) I have conferred with the Secretary of the Treasury and with the Federal Alcoholic Control Administration. The Secretary has authorized me to say that he concurs with the views expressed in this communication. In addition to the matters presented here, Mr. Choate has pointed out that the provisions of section 36 of this bill, relative to labeling, may not be in accord with the policy of the Federal Alcoholic Control Administration. This involves an important matter of policy. I am enclosing Mr. Choate's letter.

The Attorney General admits that the question presented in the above paragraph is a question of policy. Doubtless the Congress differed with the Alcohol Control Administration with respect to the desirability of having such a labeling provision in the act. I may add that that question was considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate and, I am sure, by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House. There was evidence before the committees that some of the alcoholic beverages that were being sold, particularly distilled spirits, were, shall I say, misrepresentations. Liquor was being sold as whisky that was largely alcohol and a variety of juices and compounds.

The committee believed that distilled spirits offered for sale should be labeled so that the persons purchasing the same would know what they were purchasing. They believed that it was necessary in order to protect the public.

Mr. President, we have enacted measures dealing with food and food products. We have a very important act, known as "the Pure Food and Drugs Act", and, may I say, that act has been found inadequate to meet the evasions of many people who have palmed off upon the public deleterious and, in some instances, poisonous substances.

The committee, as a matter of policy, believed that certain of the products described in the bill should be labeled; that the bottles in which they were sold should be labeled, should accurately state their contents for the protection of the public.

That is a question of policy. If Mr. Choate, or anybody else in some other jurisdiction, believes a different policy should be pursued, that is for them to determine, but so far as the District of Columbia is concerned, the District Committee believed in the policy to which I have referred, and therefore inserted in the bill the provisions to require an honest labeling.

I have gone over the suggestions made by the able Attorney General and by Mr. Choate, with a view to determining whether or not they were of such compelling force as to require additional legislation. Up to the present, after giving to these communications the most respectful and serious consideration, I have been unable to conclude that supplemental legislation is required in the particulars suggested by the two distinguished officials of the United States.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I inquire if the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] wishes to proceed now?

Mr. JOHNSON. I dislike exceedingly to proceed at this late hour, Mr. President. I can do so if desired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. President, if the Senator from California does not care to go on at this time, in view of the lateness of the hour, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. Samuel McRoberts, Auxiliary Reserve, for reappointment in the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army, under the provisions of law, from September 27, 1933.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. Harold Benjamin Fiske, United States Army, to be a major general from August 1, 1933, vice Maj. Gen. Campbell King, United States Army, retired July 31, 1933; and also the nominations of several general and bureau officers and sundry other officers of the Regular Army and the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Joseph B. Poindexter, of Hawaii, to be Governor of the Territory of Hawaii, vice Lawrence M. Judd.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR also (for Mr. BLACK), from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

James R. Worley, of Tennessee, to be United States marshal, eastern district of Tennessee, to succeed Inslee C. King, resigned;

Horace Frierson, Jr., of Tennessee, to be United States attorney, middle district of Tennessee, to succeed A. V. McLane, resigned; and James R. Jetton, of Tennessee, to be United States marshal, middle district of Tennessee, to succeed R. Q. Lillard, resigned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

THE CALENDAR

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar is in order.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Jefferson Caffery, of Louisiana, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Cuba.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that the first nomination on the Calendar be passed over for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be passed over.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Ewing Y. Mitchell, of Missouri, to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of George J. Love to be register of the land office at Anchorage, Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Arthur J. Ewing to be register of the land office at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Ira H. Masters to be register of the land office at Blackfoot, Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Thomas F. Corbally to be register of the land office at Great Falls, Mont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Mrs. Mary G. Rose to be register of the land office at Carson City, Nev.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William H. Canon to be register of the land office at Roseburg, Oreg.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of George E. Stone to be register of the land office at Spokane, Wash.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Theodore Wanerus to be register of the land office at Buffalo, Wyo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William G. Johnson to be register of the land office at Cheyenne, Wyo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Loraine Rollins to be register of the land office at Evanston, Wyo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters will be confirmed en bloc.

TREATY OF EXTRADITION WITH TURKEY

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now consider Executive AA (68th Cong., 1st sess.), a treaty of extradition with Turkey, signed at Lausanne, Switzerland, on August 6, 1923.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada if the treaty in question has any relation to the treaty which the Senate rejected a number of years ago when Senator Swanson was in the Senate and led the fight against it? If it traverses ground that was covered in that treaty, I shall ask the Senator to let it go over until Monday, so that an opportunity may be afforded for its examination.

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly, if the Senator wishes that done.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is my understanding that this treaty and the one on the calendar following it are entirely limited to the subject matter of extradition.

Mr. PITTMAN. Entirely so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And they are in the usual form.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator is referring to the Lausanne Treaty, it is not the same as the treaty to which former Senator Swanson objected in the sense that that treaty dealt with extraterritorial rights or any of those questions. The treaty now under consideration is purely and simply an extradition treaty in the usual form, with one exception, that it allows 2 months after ratification to take effect, so notification can be given to all countries.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that the Lausanne Treaty was general in terms. It was not only a commercial treaty but, as I recall, it dealt with substantially all matters that are usually covered by treaties between sovereign nations. After a long and protracted struggle the Lausanne Treaty was defeated. Subsequently the Department of State, by protocols, communications, and various methods, attempted, as I believe and as many others believe, to evade and disregard the action of the Senate, and put into effect some, if not all, of the provisions of the treaty which had been rejected.

I concede that very much water has run under the bridge since then; and in view of what I have denominated—and I do not say it in any disrespectful way—the evasions made by previous State Department administrations of the action of the Senate in defeating the Lausanne Treaty, it may be that the relations between the two Governments should be fully regularized by the ratification of this treaty.

I beg of my distinguished friend, however, to let the Turkish Treaty go over until Monday, and I shall offer no objection then to its being considered.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the Senator from Nevada? Would the proposed treaty with Turkey, if ratified, permit the return of Mr. Insull if he should go from Greece into Turkey?

Mr. PITTMAN. I am so advised by the legal division of the State Department.

Mr. COPELAND. Is it that fact, Mr. President, that has made the confirmation of the treaty urgent?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it is not that fact.

Mr. KING. If that were the only object, Mr. President, I should be glad to have the treaty ratified.

Mr. PITTMAN. We have received advice from our State Department that the treaty has been favorably reported to the Council of Turkey, which is acting on the treaty; and we felt that we should not delay action upon it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I add to what has been said by the Senator from Nevada, and also to what I said a few moments ago, that the treaty is limited to the subject of extradition? As is common in such cases, it defines the crimes for which extradition may be obtained, and is in the usual form of extradition treaties. It has no relation to the subject matter of the treaty which I think the Senator from Utah has in mind.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada permit an interruption?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that a number of European countries still maintain the system of dual citizenship. Under this policy aliens who have come to the United States and have taken out their naturalization papers are still regarded as citizens and nationals of the countries from which they came, and when they visit such countries, not infrequently they have been arrested. During the war a number of naturalized citizens who were visiting the countries of their birth were arrested and forced into military service.

We have in the United States a large number of people who came to this country from Turkey and who have obtained their naturalization papers. They were Turkish nationals, though they may belong to the Greek or the Armenian races. It has been claimed some naturalized American citizens who visited Turkey were arrested or subjected to harsh and cruel treatment.

I desire to inquire into the question to determine as to whether or not persons who were born in Turkey of Greek or Armenian descent, or, for that matter, Turkish descent, and who came to the United States and obtained their naturalization papers, may, if they shall return to Turkey, be arrested, or their egress and ingress to and from that country impeded, by reason of the fact that it may be claimed they are still Turkish nationals. I desire to look into that phase of the question, and I ask the Senator from Nevada to let the matter go over until Monday.

Mr. COPELAND and Mr. BONE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield first to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I observe that the date of the treaty is August 6, 1923. May I inquire why it has been pending for 11 years?

Mr. PITTMAN. It has been pending for 11 years because of inaction, I take it, on the part——

Mr. COPELAND. Of the Republican Party?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I would not say that, but inaction possibly on the part of the diplomats of the two countries.

Mr. COPELAND. Is it properly a matter of concern now? Is Turkey anxious to have the treaty ratified?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; the situation is this: The question involved has been under diplomatic consideration for a long time. There have been changes made which meet with the approval of both Governments as a result of discussions which have been going on since 1923. We are informed now that the council of Turkey, which has jurisdiction of such matters, is ready to ratify the treaty, that it is before the council for final ratification; and it has been so long delayed that we felt it ought to be acted upon promptly by our Government, considering the fact that Turkey is acting on it promptly.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to acquit the State Department, at least in part, of any lack of diligence. This treaty was negotiated in 1923 and was presented from time to time to the Senate. A number of Senators upon this side of the Chamber and some upon the other side of the Chamber believed that the Lausanne Treaty contained provisions which were unfair and unjust, and—after repeated efforts to have it ratified, efforts that were renewed from time to time for a number of years—in 1926, as I recall, the treaty was defeated. The State Department then attempted to put into effect the terms of the treaty that had been defeated, by methods which I think were improper and unfair.

If this is a part of that old treaty, which was defeated, and it would seem that it is, although I supposed from what the Senator said when he arose this afternoon that it was a new treaty, dealing exclusively with the question of extradition, that inclines me more than ever, Mr. President, to ask that this treaty go over until Monday, so as to give us a chance to examine it and to understand exactly its scope and its relation to the treaty which was defeated, and just what implications may arise from it if it shall be ratified.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there are several governments that still maintain what we term "dual citizenship", that is, citizens or subjects born under a foreign government, although naturalized in another country, such as the United States, and becoming citizens of the other country, are claimed by some governments still to be citizens of the country of their birth. That creates confusion.

Mr. KING. Is Turkey one of those countries?

Mr. PITTMAN. Turkey is one of them. In most instances separate treaties have been negotiated with regard to that subject. All the treaties have not been exactly the same, but they all deal with that question.

It would seem to be very difficult in a purely extradition treaty dealing with the crimes which will subject a defendant to extradition to try to work that subject out with any government. It is a matter that should be settled, and we are all trying to settle it, but I think it would be unfortunate if criminals were allowed to escape prosecution by reason of the failure of an extradition treaty.

I may say here that, while the urging of action on this treaty has not for its motive the Insull case, the treaty has been dragging along through diplomatic channels so long that now that Turkey, which has become such a progressive Government, as we know it to be, has substantially ratified this treaty—at least the steps looking to its approval have been taken—our State Department felt that after all this delay we should not ourselves add to the delay but should ratify the treaty as quickly as possible.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Can the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee advise us what the present passport status of Samuel Insull is? I note by the newspapers that the State Department has renewed his passport. It may be a mistaken statement on the part of the newspapers, but I am wondering if the chairman can enlighten us as to that?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no authoritative information on that subject, but I can say to the Senator that I have advices from the State Department that these treaties of extradition are, in a sense, retroactive in their effect, and if this treaty, for instance, should go into effect 2 months from now and Mr. Insull should be in Turkey and subject to extradition at that time, this treaty would affect him, although he had entered Turkey before its ratification. That is the construction given all extradition treaties except where it is expressly provided to the contrary.

Mr. BONE. Is it customary for the State Department to renew the passport of a fugitive from justice?

Mr. PITTMAN. I cannot speak as to the custom of the State Department, but I suppose that, out of courtesy to Greece having passported him into Greece, we would passport him out of Greece. I do not know about that, but I may say that, even if such action has been taken, whether or not he may enter another country depends upon a visa.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the able Senator from Nevada knows that for a century or more the United States has been hospitable to political refugees. Some of the noblest citizens who have come to our shores were nationals from Germany and——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is an express provision in article III of this treaty, as follows:

> Extradition shall not take place for political crimes or offenses nor for acts connected with such crimes or offenses.

Mr. KING. I assumed that there would, of course, be that rather curative provision. We know, Mr. President, as I was about to observe, that not only persons from Germany but from other countries have been indicted in their respectice countries for alleged crimes and that the indictments were improperly, if not fraudulently, procured for the purpose of getting control of them to punish them for alleged political offenses. We know that in a neighboring country—and I do not wish to mention names unless I am compelled to do so—persons who were political refugees fled because of their political views rather than by reason of the commission of any criminal act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator to allow me to complete the sentence, and then I will be happy to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is on that point that I wish to interrupt the Senator. Not only is there a clause in this treaty expressly providing that extradition shall not take place for political crimes but in the same article there is also a provision that—

No person surrendered by one of the high contracting parties to the other party shall be prosecuted or punished for an offense committed before the demand of extradition other than that for which the extradition has been granted.

I think if the Senator will examine the treaty closely, he will find that it is pretty well safeguarded.

Mr. KING. I was observing, Mr. President, that there are examples, not a few, where persons have been indicted for some alleged breach of municipal law but whose offense, if there were any offense, was a protest against tyranny and oppressive laws and policies when they were extradited, as I am advised, for alleged offenses they were tried and punished for political views and activities.

I have no doubt the State Department has attempted to protect, so far as it could, American citizens who were formerly nationals of the Ottoman Empire, but I am informed that naturalized American citizens who have property in Turkey have been afraid to return there; some who have gone there have been arrested or their egress has been impeded, and their efforts to secure their property have proven abortive.

This treaty has been slumbering since 1923, and obviously was a part of another treaty more comprehensive in terms. I see no particular reason for now lifting it out from that treaty and rushing it through without giving us an opportunity to examine it. I ask the Senator to let it go over until Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the treaty going over until Monday?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, of course, I could not be so discourteous as to object if the Senator insists upon it, but I will say that while the treaty does not contain a definition as to what constitutes a man a national of a particular country, it does expressly provide that each government may decline to surrender under extradition its own nationals, which means that we may refuse to surrender under extradition a naturalized native of Turkey, and, on the other hand, Turkey may refuse to surrender a naturalized American in Turkey. So that condition is protected for the time being, at any rate.

Mr. KING. I make no further comment, in view of the consideration extended to me by the able Senator from Nevada.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the treaty going over until Monday? The Chair hears none, and the treaty will be passed over until Monday.

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH ALBANIA

Mr. PITTMAN. I now ask the Senate to consider Executive A, being a treaty of extradition with Albania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive A, a treaty between the United States of America and Albania, signed at Tirana on March 1, 1933, providing for the extradition of fugitives from justice, which was read, as follows:

TREATY OF EXTRADITION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE KINGDOM OF ALBANIA

The United States of America and Albania, desiring to promote the cause of justice, have resolved to conclude a treaty for the extradition of fugitives from justice between the two countries and have appointed for that purpose the following Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: Herman Bernstein, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Albania;

His Majesty the King of Albanians: His Excellency M. Djafer Vila, Minister for Foreign Affairs;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE 1

It is agreed that the Government of the United States and the Government of Albania shall, upon requisition duly made as herein provided, deliver up to justice any person who may be charged with or may have been convicted of, any of the crimes or offenses specified in Article 2 of the present Treaty committed within the jurisdiction of one of the High Contracting Parties, and who shall seek an asylum or shall be found within the territories of the other; provided that such surrender shall take place only upon such evidence of criminality, as according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offense had been there committed.

ARTICLE 2

Persons shall be delivered up according to the provisions of the present Treaty, who shall have been charged with or convicted of any of the following crimes or offenses:

1. Murder, including crimes designated by the terms parricide, poisoning, and infanticide; manslaughter, when voluntary.

2. Malicious wounding or inflicting grievous bodily harm with premeditation.

3. Rape, abortion, carnal knowledge of children under the age of 15 years.

4. Abduction or detention of women or girls for immoral purposes.

5. Bigamy.

6. Arson.

7. Willful and unlawful destruction or obstruction of railroads, which endangers human life.

8. Crimes committed at sea:

(a) Piracy, as commonly known and defined by the law of nations, or by statutes;

(b) Wrongfully sinking or destroying a vessel at sea or attempting to do so;

(c) Mutiny or conspiracy by two or more members of the crew or other persons on board of a vessel on the high seas, for the purpose of rebelling against the authority of the Captain or Commander of such vessel, or by fraud or violence taking possession of such vessel;

(d) Assault on board ship upon the high seas with intent to do bodily harm.

9. Burglary; housebreaking.

10. The act of breaking into and entering the offices of the Government or public authorities, or other buildings not dwellings with intent to commit a felony therein.

11. Robbery.

12. Forgery or the utterance of forged papers.

13. The forgery or falsification of the official acts of the Government or public authorities, including Courts of Justice, or the uttering or fraudulent use of any of the same.

14. The fabrication of counterfeit money, whether coin or paper, counterfeit titles or coupons of public debt, created by National, State, Provincial, Territorial, Local or Municipal Governments, bank notes or other instruments of public credit, counterfeit seals, stamps, dies and marks of State or public administrations, and the utterance, circulation or fraudulent use of the above-mentioned objects.

15. Embezzlement.

16. Kidnaping of minors or adults, defined to be the abduction or detention of a person or persons, in order to exact money from them, their families or any other person or persons, or for any other unlawful end.

17. Larceny, defined to be the theft of effects, personal property, or money, of the value of twenty-five dollars or more, or Albanian equivalent.

18. Obtaining money, valuable securities or other property by false pretenses, or receiving any money, valuable securities or other property knowing the same to have been unlawfully obtained, where the amount of money or the value of the property so obtained or received exceeds two hundred dollars, or Albanian equivalent.

19. Perjury.

20. Fraud or breach of trust by a bailee, banker, agent, factor, trustee, executor, administrator, guardian, director or officer of any company or corporation, or by any one in any fiduciary position, where the amount of money or the value of the property misappropriated exceeds two hundred dollars, or Albanian equivalent.

21. Crimes and offenses against the laws of both countries for the suppression of slavery and slave trading.

22. Willful desertion or willful nonsupport of minor or dependent children, or of other dependent persons, provided that the crime or offense is punishable by the laws of both countries.

23. Bribery.

24. Crimes or offenses against the bankruptcy laws.

25. Crimes or offenses against the laws for the suppression of traffic in narcotics.

26. Extradition shall also take place for participation in any of the crimes or offenses before mentioned as an accessory before or after the fact, or in any attempt to commit any of the aforesaid crimes or offenses.

ARTICLE 3

The provisions of the present Treaty shall not import a claim of extradition for any crime or offense of a political character, nor for acts connected with such crimes or offenses; and no person surrendered by or to either of the High Contracting Parties in virtue of this Treaty shall be tried or punished for a political crime or offense committed before his extradition. The State applied to, or courts of such State, shall decide whether the crime or offense is of a political character. When the offense charged comprises the act either of murder or assassination or of poisoning, either consummated or attempted, the fact that the offense was committed or attempted against the life of the Sovereign or Head of the State of one of the High Contracting Parties, or against the Sovereign or Head of a foreign State, or against the life of any member of his family, shall not be deemed sufficient to sustain that such crime or offense was of a political character, or was an act connected with crimes or offenses of a political character.

ARTICLE 4

No person shall be tried for any crime or offense, committed prior to his extradition, other than that for which he was surrendered, unless he has been at liberty for one month after having been tried, to leave the country, or, in case of conviction, for one month after having suffered his punishment or having been pardoned.

ARTICLE 5

A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered under the provisions hereof, when, from lapse of time or other lawful cause, according to the laws of the demanding country, the criminal is exempt from prosecution or punishment for the offense for which the surrender is asked.

ARTICLE 6

If a fugitive criminal whose surrender may be claimed pursuant to the stipulations hereof, be actually under prosecution, out on bail or in custody, for a crime or offense committed in the country where he has sought asylum, or shall have been convicted thereof, his extradition may be deferred until such proceedings be determined, and until he shall have been set at liberty in due course of law.

ARTICLE 7

If a fugitive criminal claimed by one of the two parties hereto, shall be also claimed by one or more powers pursuant to treaty provisions, on account of crimes or offenses committed within their jurisdiction, such criminal shall be delivered to that State whose demand is first received unless the demand is waived.

This article shall not affect such treaties as have previously been concluded by one of the contracting parties with other States.

ARTICLE 8

Under the stipulations of this Treaty, neither of the High Contracting Parties shall be bound to deliver up its own citizens, except in cases where such citizenship has been obtained after the perpetuation of the crime for which extradition is sought. The State appealed to shall decide whether the person claimed is its own citizen.

ARTICLE 9

The expense of transportation of the fugitive shall be borne by the government which has preferred the demand for extradition. The appropriate legal officers of the country where the proceedings of extradition are had, shall assist the officers of the government demanding the extradition before the respective judges and magistrates, by every legal means within their power; and no claim other than for the board and lodging of a fugitive prior to his surrender, arising out of the arrest, detention, examination and surrender of fugitives under this treaty, shall be made against the government demanding the extradition; provided, however, that any officer or officers of the surrendering government giving assistance, who shall, in the usual course of their duty receive no salary or compensation other than specific fees for services performed, shall be entitled to receive from the government demanding the extradition the customary fees for the acts or services performed by them in the same manner and to the same amount as though such acts or services had been performed in ordinary criminal proceedings under the laws of the country of which they are officers.

ARTICLE 10

Everything found in the possession of the fugitive criminal at the time of his arrest, whether being the proceeds of the crime or offense, or which may be material as evidence in making proof of the crime, shall so far as practicable, according to the laws of either of the High Contracting Parties, be delivered up with his person at the time of surrender. Nevertheless, the rights of a third party with regard to the articles referred to, shall be duly respected.

ARTICLE 11

The stipulations of the present Treaty shall be applicable to all territory wherever situated, belonging to either of the High Contracting Parties or in the occupancy and under the control of either of them, during such occupancy or control.

Requisitions for the surrender of fugitives from justice shall be made by the respective diplomatic agents of the High Contracting Parties. In the event of the absence of such agents from the country or where extradition is sought from territory included in the preceding paragraphs, other than the United States or Albania, requisitions may be made by superior consular officers.

The arrest of the fugitive shall be brought about in accordance with the laws of the respective countries, and if, after an examination, it shall be decided, according to the law and the evidence, that extradition is due pursuant to this treaty, the fugitive shall be surrendered in conformity to the forms of law prescribed in such cases.

The person provisionally arrested, shall be released, unless within two months from the date of arrest in Albania, or from the date of commitment in the United States, the formal requisition for surrender with the documentary proofs hereinafter prescribed be made as aforesaid by the diplomatic agent of the demanding Government, or, in his absence, by a consular officer thereof.

If the fugitive criminal shall have been convicted of the crime or offense for which his surrender is asked, a copy of the sentence of the court before which such conviction took place, duly authenticated, shall be produced. If, however, the fugitive is merely charged with crime, a duly authenticated copy of the warrant of arrest in the country where the crime was committed shall be produced, together with the evidence of criminality mentioned in Article 1 hereof.

The present Treaty, of which the English and Albanian texts are equally authentic, shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in accordance with their respective constitutional methods, and shall take effect on the date of the exchange of ratifications which shall take place at Washington as soon as possible.

ARTICLE 13

The present Treaty shall remain in force for a period of five years, and in case neither of the High Contracting Parties shall have given notice one year before the expiration of that period of its intention to terminate the Treaty, it shall continue in force until the expiration of one year from the date on which such notice of termination shall be given by either of the High Contracting Parties.

In witness whereof the above-named Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Treaty and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate at Tirana this first day of March, nineteen hundred and thirty-three.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive A, Seventy-third Congress, first session, a treaty between the United States of America and Albania, signed at Tirana on March 1, 1933, providing for the extradition of fugitives from justice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty, with the resolution of ratification, is in the Senate, and the question is, Shall the treaty be read the third time?

The treaty was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty having been read the third time, the question is upon agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is adopted and the treaty is ratified.

LOAD LINE CONVENTION WITH CANADA

Mr. PITTMAN. I now ask the Senate to consider Executive A, a convention with Canada proposing certain exemptions from provisions in the International Industrial Load Line Convention, signed at London July 5, 1930.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive A, a convention with Canada proposing certain exemptions from the provisions of the International Load Line Convention, signed at London July 5, 1930, which was read, as follows:

ARTICLE 1

The Government of the United States of America, being satisfied that the waters of Puget Sound, the waters lying between Vancouver Island and the mainland, and east of a line from a point one nautical mile west of the city limits of Port Angeles in the State of Washington to Race Rocks on Vancouver Island, and of a line from Hope Island, British Columbia, to Cape Calvert, Calvert Island, British Columbia, the waters east of a line from Cape Calvert to Duke Point on Duke Island, and the waters north of Duke Island and east of Prince of Wales Island, Baranof Island, and Chicagof Island, the water of Peril, Neva, and Olga Straits to Sitka, and the waters east of a line from Port Althorp on Chicagof Island to Cape Spencer, Alaska, are sheltered waters of the nature contemplated in Article 2, Section 2 of the International Load Line Convention, 1930, agrees to exempt from the provisions of the International Load Line Convention, and existing load line statutes of the United States, Canadian vessels, and vessels of the United States, when engaged on international voyages originating on, wholly confined to, and terminating on the above-defined waters.

ARTICLE 2

The Government of the Dominion of Canada, also being satisfied of the sheltered nature of the waters defined in Article 1 agrees likewise to exempt vessels of the United States and Canadian vessels from the requirements of the aforesaid convention and existing load-line statutes of Canada, when engaged on international voyages originating on, wholly confined to, and terminating on the said waters.

ARTICLE 3

The present convention shall be ratified in accordance with the constitutional methods of the High Contracting Parties. It shall take effect on the day of the exchange of ratification, which shall take place at Washington as soon as possible, and it shall remain in force thereafter, until six months from the date on which one of the High Contracting Parties shall have given to the other notice of an intention to terminate it.

In faith whereof the above-named Plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention and affixed thereto their respective seals.

Done in duplicate at Washington, the ninth day of December, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-three.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS. [SEAL]
W D HERRIDGE. [SEAL]

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have no particular objection to this treaty if it is carefully worded so as to make certain that the requirements regarding load lines shall be limited, as stated in the calendar, to certain specified sheltered waters of the west coast of North America. Of course, the load-line arrangement is a very necessary one with respect to safety at sea.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say that the only modification of or other exemption from the load-line treaty is in Puget Sound and in certain inland passages of Alaska.

Mr. COPELAND. Which are protected from rough waters.

Mr. PITTMAN. Which are protected from rough waters and which are defined very accurately by metes and bounds. The treaty was submitted to both Senators from Washington, who are particularly interested in it, and they had no objection to it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask what is the intention of the chairman of the committee or of the committee regarding the safety-at-sea treaty which has been pending so long in the committee?

Mr. PITTMAN. That treaty has not as yet been brought before the committee at this session. It is on the calendar of the committee, and any member of the committee may ask to take it up at any meeting.

Mr. COPELAND. I urge the Senator to secure early action on the treaty, because it has to do with the welfare of those who sail the seas. I know that in the past certain objections have been interposed to it, but I think, in the interest of humanity, the treaty should be considered and brought before us at an early date. I hope it may have action at this session of the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator that there were certain legal questions raised as to the construction of the treaty, which were informally submitted to the Solicitor of the State Department. They had reference to construction of the language and its legal effect.

Mr. COPELAND. Has no reply been made as yet?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; no reply has as yet been received.

Mr. COPELAND. May I urge the Senator to ask the State Department to hurry the matter, because it would be unfortunate for us to let the treaty go over a longer time if we can find any way to secure action this year.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to say that I was a delegate at the London Conference which dealt with this particular matter. There has from time to time since then arisen, as the chairman of the committee well said, a question as to whether the obligation of the treaty that imposes on the United States certain duties was within the jurisdiction of the conference and whether in attempting to impose those duties upon the United States they were within their proper jurisdiction. It is that which has caused the long delay.

As the Senator from Nevada has intimated, the question has gone to the legal branch of the State Department. I think our next move if we desire to expedite the matter would be to have the legal branch of the Department make its reply as to wherein the United States would be affected and whether the provisions or obligations could be enforced, or whether we should seek amendment of the treaty or some subsequent treaty omitting those legally objectionable provisions.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Illinois, I am sure, joins with me in the belief that we ought to have such a treaty. If there are insurmountable legal difficulties relative to certain minor provisions of the treaty, as the Senator has suggested, they might be corrected by amendment here. At any rate, I do feel there should be action upon the treaty. It ought not to be delayed longer.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will, on behalf of the committee and with their approval, submit a formal request for an opinion.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The resolution of ratification was read, as follows:

Resolved (two thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive A, Seventy-third Congress, second session, a convention signed between the United States and Canada, on December 9, 1933, by which vessels of the United States and of Canada operating solely on certain specified sheltered waters of the west coast of North America will be exempted from load-line requirements as contemplated in article 2, section 2, of the International Load Line Convention signed at London, July 5, 1930.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suppose I should have been giving better attention, but may I inquire what this is?

Mr. PITTMAN. We now have a convention or treaty between various governments, adopted at London in 1930, with regard to what is called the load line of ships, and the Senate is now considering a convention with Canada making certain exemptions from the provisions of that treaty.

Mr. LONG. It has nothing to do with the St. Lawrence waterway?

Mr. PITTMAN. Not at all.

Mr. LONG. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty with the resolution of ratification is in the Senate, and the question is, Shall the treaty be read the third time?

The treaty was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty having been read the third time, the question is upon agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is adopted and the treaty is ratified.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas if we are going to resume legislative session this afternoon?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] has a privileged matter which he desires to present in legislative session, and it is my intention, when the opportunity affords, to move that the Senate resume legislative session.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The object of my inquiry is to ask unanimous consent that on next Monday, upon the convening of the Senate, the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval construction bill. The bill was reported to the Senate this afternoon with certain suggested amendments on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Unless some prior commitment may prevent, I should like very much to have the privilege of having the bill laid before the Senate for consideration on next Monday. I am going to ask unanimous consent to that end in legislative session this afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the request ought to be submitted and considered in legislative session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed legislative session.

CONSTRUCTION OF NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, a House bill relating to the building of the Navy to treaty strength reached the Senate 3 days ago. Two important amendments were placed upon the bill on the floor of the House changing very materially the House text in those particulars from the text of the Senate bill which had previously been reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs.

The Senate committee deemed it advisable that those particular features should be given some consideration and that the bill should not be reported immediately to the Senate without giving any thought or consideration whatever to them or to amendments which had been inserted on the floor of the House. Consequently the Senate committee met day before yesterday. We did not reach any agreement then, but met again yesterday and thought we had reached an agreement as to amendments which we wished to suggest, but had to adjourn over until today when we did, after a session of some 2 hours or more, agree upon the amendments which we desired to submit.

The hearing was necessitated not only because certain Members of the Senate felt that the questions involved were of such importance that they should not be passed over with little or no consideration, but it was also requested of the chairman of the committee that the Navy Department be heard upon those particular features of the bill. We accorded the Department that courtesy. We tried to give some deliberate thought to those important features, one of which was to make a first step toward trying to eliminate the excessive profits which are made out of shipbuilding, and another of which was to endeavor to submit a provision which would require that construction of the vessels to be authorized under this bill shall be apportioned as much as 50 percent to the Government navy yards and 50 percent to the private shipyards of the country. Those are the problems with which we dealt. For that reason we took several days to report back to the Senate this very important measure and these very important features.

Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent, if that is required, that on Monday, upon the convening of the Senate, the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6604, being the bill providing for the building of the Navy to treaty strength.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not object to the consideration of the bill in its proper course. However, I am not going to consent to make it a matter of special privilege on Monday. The program has been arranged for Monday. The able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has announced that we will adjourn this evening so that we may have a morning hour on Monday and probably a call of the calendar. The unfinished business of the Senate at this time is in charge of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. If the opportunity occurs on Monday or Tuesday the Senator from Florida may move to proceed to the consideration of his bill.

For these reasons I object at this time to his request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I renew the request for Tuesday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill on Tuesday. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there is no reason why we should start at this time to ask unanimous consent for bills to be considered at some time in the future. The Senator can pursue the course which should be pursued and with which he is familiar. I shall object constantly to the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon objects.

WILLIAM P. M'CRACKEN

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I send to the desk a report from the special committee of the Senate acting under Senate Resolution 349 and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the report, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the report (No. 254), as follows:

President of the Senate and the Senate of the United States, Seventy-third Congress:

Your committee, appointed and selected by the Senate under Senate Resolution No. 349, Seventy-second Congress, second session, reports as follows:

(1) The committee has been engaged in public hearings, and did on the 31st day of January 1934 cause to be served on William P. MacCracken, of Washington, D.C., a summons, a copy of which is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit A", and which exhibit is made a part of this report.

(2) The said William P. MacCracken has appeared before this special committee, but has failed, refused, and declined to bring with him to the committee, or to make available for inspection, his correspondence and memorandums relating to air mail contracts.

(3) The said William P. MacCracken has not only failed, declined, and refused to bring such correspondence and memorandums to the committee, or to make it available for the committee's use, but has declined in an open session of the Senate committee, room 318, Senate Office Building, held on January 31, 1934, and has again declined at a public session of the committee, held on February 2, 1934, to bring said papers and correspondence to the committee; and the said Mr. MacCracken admitted in open session of the special committee hearing on February 2, 1934, that between the date of the serving of the subpena and the time of his testimony two certain files of correspondence concerning air mail had been removed from his office with his knowledge and consent.

(4) The said William P. MacCracken has based his refusal upon the claim that he is an attorney, and as such attorney has a right to determine for himself whether or not correspondence and memorandums with reference to air mail contracts, or what he designates as private and confidential communications, between himself and air mail operators whom he designates as his clients.

(5) The committee makes a report to this Senate and requests that the Senate, by proper resolution, take such action as the Senate deems wise to bring the said William P. MacCracken before the bar of the Senate and to require that William P. MacCracken produce papers and correspondence herein set out in order that the committee may have available this material evidence to carry out the duties imposed upon your committee by the terms of the resolution under which it is acting.

Respectfully submitted.

EXHIBIT A

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

To WILLIAM P. MACCRACKEN, JR.,
1152 National Press Building, Washington, D.C.

GREETING: Pursuant to lawful authority, you are hereby commanded to appear before the Senate Committee on Ocean Mail and Air Mail Contracts of the Senate of the United States, on instanter, 1934 at 12 o'clock 30 p.m., at their committee room, 101 Senate Office Building, then and there to testify what you may know relative to the subject matters under consideration by said committee.

Bring all books of account, bank passbooks, canceled checks, check stubs, deposit slips, papers, memorandums, correspondence, maps, copies of telegrams relating to air mail and ocean mail contracts.

Hereof fail not, as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties in such cases made and provided.

To J. A. Bradley, L. L. Rittelmeyer to serve and return.

Given under my hand, by order of the committee, this 31st day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-four.

HUGO L. BLACK,

Service accepted 12:20 p.m. 1/31/34, William P .MacCracken, Jr.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I should like to add that since this report was drawn up, another fact has come to the attention of the committee which would have been placed in the report if it had been known earlier.

Reference is made in the report to the fact that two files have been removed. Those files, according to the evidence, or those parts of the files, were delivered to one Colonel Brittin, of the Northwest Airways, and Mr. Given, as I understand, who is connected with the Western Air Express. An instanter subpena was issued to these two gentlemen to bring that correspondence to the committee. Both of them have appeared at the committee room.

The investigator tells me that Colonel Brittin states that he cannot bring the correspondence because he has already destroyed it, making the claim that there was nothing in it except purely unimportant personal matters—a phrase which the committee has heard before.

The other gentleman appeared and stated that the papers he received had been mailed to New York. Of course, we do not know what will happen to the papers that have been mailed to New York. We assume that probably the gentleman who receives them will recognize, if the others have not, that they are part of the evidence which has been desired by the Senate.

The committee has very reluctantly brought this matter to the Senate after having endeavored to obtain the correspondence it desired without coming to the Senate.

In keeping with the request which has been made, I have a resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S.Res. 169) was read, as follows:

Whereas the select committee of the Senate, elected pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 349, Seventy-second Congress, second session, has submitted a report to the Senate; and

Whereas it appears from such report that William P. MacCracken, of Washington, D.C., was on January 31, 1934, duly served with a subpena to appear forthwith before such committee, in Washington, D.C., and then and there to testify relative to subject matters, and to produce specified files, records, and books, pertinent to the matter under inquiry; and

Whereas it appears from such report that the said William P. MacCracken has failed, declined, and refused, in disobedience of such subpenas, to produce all files, records, and books; and

Whereas the appearance and testimony and correspondence, records, files, and books are material and necessary in order that the committee may properly execute the functions imposed upon it and obtain information necessary as a basis for such legislation as the Senate may deem necessary concerning ocean and air mail contracts: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant, commanding the Sergeant at Arms or his deputy to take into custody the body of the said William P. MacCracken before the bar of the Senate and to bring with him the correspondence, memorandums, books, files, and records referred to, and then and there to answer such questions pertinent to the matter under inquiry with reference to facts regarding correspondence, memorandums, books, and files as the Senate may propound, and to keep the said William P. MacCracken in custody to await the further action of the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to make the record clear as to my position in this matter.

I am not persuaded that the law required this witness to obey the subpena, in view of his testimony that the matters which he withheld were communications between him and his professional client with respect to the contracts in connection with which they employed him. Therefore I should not want to have my assent to this resolution interpreted to mean that I assent to that part of the charge upon which the resolution is based, because I believe we are making a precedent here which may guide others in the future.

However, I shall favor the resolution because I regard it a contempt of the Senate of the United States for a witness, pending the decision and action of a Senate special investigating committee upon a question raised by the witness, to interfere and impede whatever judgment might come out of the consideration of the question he presented by destroying the subject matter.

I merely desire to make this record at the present time.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to say a very brief word about the situation.

I think I am very closely in accord with the views expressed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. The fact is that when this attorney raised the question of privilege, some members of the committee, at least, were in much doubt as to how far that right or that duty of privilege extended; and at the request of some of us—I do not know whether it was at my request or not—the committee gave consideration to the question of privilege. It was pending that consideration of the matter in the committee, before we had reached a settled conclusion as to whether the attorney was or was not obligated to bring the papers before the committee, that some of the papers were permitted to go out of his possession into the hands of his client, and, as I now understand, to be ultimately destroyed.

So far as I am concerned, without meaning to express an opinion as to the sound and right principle of law involved, I am free to confess that when this action by the attorney took place I lost in substantial degree my interest in the principle, and I was concerned with the fact that while the matter was under consideration the Senate and the committee of the Senate were, as I viewed it, defied. I am supporting this proceeding because of that, and without intending to indicate my belief or my disbelief as to whether or not there was a privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beg to give notice that on Monday the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and I will again ask the Senate to arrive at a date—as immediate a date as possible—for a vote upon the pending treaty that is now under discussion, known as the "St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty."

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I simply wish to add to what the Senator from Illinois has stated that no agreement as to the date for a vote has been reached; that he and I are to confer with regard to a date to see whether or not those who are interested in the matter on both sides will sustain us in the matter.

Mr. LEWIS. I thought we would submit the matter to the Senate and the Senate itself would agree on a date.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 38 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 5, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, how manifold are all Thy works! In wisdom Thou hast made them all; the earth is full of Thy glory. O may this minstrel of the old world move our thoughts, uniting them in this holy chorus. We praise Thee that throughout the ages one increasing purpose runs. We would be still and know that Thou art God, the Almighty and the Everlasting Father. We pray that Thou wouldst disclose unto us a goodly measure of Thy wisdom. We would have it direct us, filling us with understanding, working in us a living righteousness, kindling in us a burning charity, and inspiring in us a boundless hope. Father, help us to hold on each day, to the very best sense of our manhood, keeping it strong and clear, recognizing the claims of the public service and the obligations that we owe our times and place, and unto Thee be all the glory. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT OF POWER PLANTS AND FLOOD CONTROL PROJECTS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a resolution adopted by the Progressive Farmers' Club of Baldwin County, Ga., on January 20, 1934, in reference to flood control in the Southeast.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolution of Progressive Farmers' Club of Baldwin County, Ga., January 20, 1934:

To the President and Congress, and especially the Senators and Members from Georgia and Southeastern States:

Whereas for more than a quarter of a century vast sums of national money have been spent by our Government to put water on desert lands in the West, where rather severe climatic conditions exist, which lands for the most part were barren of trees and grass, away from cities, towns, and even rural communities, not on navigable rivers with tidewater connections and few highways or railroads; said money having been spent for the laudable purpose of making said lands habitable and profitable and for the general improvement of our Nation, and which action by our Government we commend; and

Whereas in the Southeast and East Gulf States of this Nation there are millions of acres of land that can be made the most productive in the world, when the surplus water is drained from them and they are protected by flood control, said lands being in a delightful climate and in a section that abounds in trees and grass, near present centers of population on rivers that are navigable and that have tidewater connections, adjacent to improved highways and railroads and a population that now needs and will need more electric power for home and industrial consumption and eventually for our railroads;

Whereas the Government of the United States is now establishing flood control and power plants in other sections and lending money to private interests, such as railroads and banks for the general good of the people: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Progressive Farmers' Club of Baldwin County, Ga. (a club which has been in continuous existence over a period of 30 years), That we most earnestly call the attention of our President and Congress to the claim of these Southeastern States to some consideration in the national development of power plants and flood-control projects, and especially to the fact that the Altamaha system, including the Oconee and Ocmulgee Rivers (with about 500 miles of navigation, the longest in the Union, which has its watershed confined within the borders of one State), offers superior opportunities for power and flood-control development, and we particularly ask Government aid to finish the Furman Shoals Dam in this, Baldwin County, either as a private or Government-owned unit of a power and flood-control system for this section, and it is resolved that a copy of these resolutions be sent to President Roosevelt personally and to our Senators and Congressmen with the request that they be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and that copies be also supplied the press.

JAMES LONGSTREET SIBLEY,
President.
F. E. PENUEL, Secretary.

STATE OF GEORGIA,
Baldwin County.

I, F. E. Penuel, do certify that I am secretary of Baldwin County Farmers' Club and that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution passed by the club at its regular meeting on Saturday, January 20, 1934.

F. E. PENUEL, Secretary.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

HERBERT GREEN

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I asked for recognition at this time simply to mark the passing of one who was the devoted friend and admirer of every Member of this House.

For 25 years Herbert Green, who was buried here in the city of Washington yesterday, was a waiter in the restaurant downstairs. He thought that this was the noblest body of men and women in all the world. There was nothing but goodness in the love that he gave each and every one of us. It followed us into places where he could not go, but it followed us nevertheless. Herbert was an honorable man and well deserved the confidence and esteem in which he was held, and in his passing we are poorer in that we have left that which counts when it comes to appraise the estate of man.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that I speak the sentiments and the hearts of every Member of this body when I say that we are all saddened in that he has left us.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, supplementing the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], I want to inform the House that a committee of the House consisting of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] attended the funeral services of our late friend and colleague, Herbert Green.

CONTESTED ELECTION—JOHN J. CASEY v. C. MURRAY TURPIN

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3 and ordered printed:

FEBRUARY 1, 1934.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I transmit herewith for reference to the committee having jurisdiction a letter from Dr. John J. Casey, contestant in the contested-election case of John J. Casey v. C. Murray Turpin from the Twelfth Congressional District of the State of Pennsylvania to the Seventy-third Congress.

Respectfully yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House convenes next Monday morning, after the reading of the Journal, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes on the world depression in India and China.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

RATES OF POSTAGE ON ADVERTISING PORTIONS OF SECOND-CLASS PUBLICATIONS

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Ways and Means Committee from further consideration of the bill (H.R. 7303) to continue until July 1, 1935, the rates of postage on the advertising portions of second-class publications prescribed by the Revenue Act of 1932, which I introduced a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. I will ask the gentleman to see the Speaker about that later on.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

House Resolution 248

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the House of Representatives a comprehensive plan for the improvement and development of the rivers of the United States with a view of giving to Congress information for the guidance of legislation which will provide for the maximum amount of flood control, navigation, irrigation, and development of hydroelectric power.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if he is requesting the same information to be sent here as was requested by another body. Does the gentleman want the same information to come to both bodies at the same time?

Mr. WILSON. Yes. This is identical with the resolution the Senate passed yesterday.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman thinks it is necessary to have a similar one pass the House today?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this information that has been compiled by someone in the Government, or does it require new investigations and surveys?

Mr. WILSON. The greater portion of it, I think, has been prepared. It is identical with what the Senate requested, and I desire the same information for the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point upon the resolution which has just been passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I heartily favor this resolution. It is a further step in the direction of the development of our inland waterways.

From the public expressions of the President, I am sure that he is in favor of a deeper study of and a more comprehensive plan for the improvement and development of the rivers of the United States. His report will be welcomed and looked forward to with great interest. I feel sure the report will recommend the appointment of a general committee to make a study of all the data collected; and may I express the hope that it may provide for a separate subcommittee or an authority to make a detailed study of and report on all the great water systems of the country, including the Arkansas River, which so vitally concerns the people of the Southwest.

Congress has made appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River and also for the improvement of the Ohio River. Under the leadership of the Senator from Nebraska, who on yesterday sponsored in the Senate a resolution similar to the one under consideration in the House, Congress passed the bill to create the Tennessee Valley Authority.

We have improved the upper Mississippi, and money has been allocated from the C.W.A. to the building of a dam on the Columbia River in the far Northwest, and large sums are being expended on Boulder Dam on the Colorado River. Sizable sums have been expended on the Missouri River.

Under the act of May 15, 1928, $5,000,000 was authorized to be expended in making surveys of all the tributaries of the Mississippi River, including the Arkansas, and during the past 5 years approximately three quarters of a million dollars has been expended in the survey of the Arkansas River and its tributaries, and a great mass of data has been collected which should be carefully studied and analyzed and, let me say, utilized in the improvement of the Arkansas River.

A few days ago I introduced a bill—H.R. 6224—to create a body corporate by the name of the "Arkansas Valley Authority" to study the data collected and reports made under the direction of the Corps of Army Engineers and all other available data that may be submitted with reference to the Arkansas River; to carefully analyze the same and report to Congress the feasibility of improving the Arkansas River and its tributaries from the standpoint of flood control, drainage, irrigation, power development, and navigation.

It is my hope that the resolution presented by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON], Chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, will result in the submission by the President of a plan, and that Congress will enact it into law, providing for the improvement and development of all the rivers of the United States, including the Arkansas River and its tributaries. This river is 1,460 miles in length and drains an extensive area. I know that no plan submitted by the President will overlook the development of the Arkansas River and its tributaries. For these reasons I am glad to support the resolution.

HOSPITALIZATION OF VETERANS

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes in which to present to the House a question in which I think the House is immediately concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I want to direct attention at this time to a very controversial feature of the economy act regarding hospitalization of veterans, and to the construction and operation that has been placed on that provision of the act by the Veterans' Administration.

I want to make my position very clear. I want to make the broad statement that there is no warrant in the economy act, as it now reads, for refusing hospitalization to all veterans for all injuries or diseases regardless of service connection. On the contrary, as the law now reads, the veterans' hospitals of this country are open to all veterans suffering from any injury or disease, regardless of service origin.

This is a pretty broad statement, and if I am wrong in this statement I want the experts on veterans' legislation in this House to set me right.

I may say, first, that my interest in this question is due to the fact that from the close of the war until I came here to Washington last March, I believe that fully one fourth of my time was given to veterans' affairs, and this without any thought that I would ever again be a candidate for their suffrage or be a Member of Congress or be confronted with the choice of voting for or against the Economy Act.

During all these years I was instrumental in securing hospitalization for many disabled veterans, and I came to understand thoroughly the great necessity for such hospitalization if these men were to be kept off the streets and out of the poorhouses of the country; and my legislative interest in this matter of hospitalization, which began with the passage of the Economy Act in the last Congress, to which I will call your attention shortly, was revived the other day by the remarkable speech of the very able Congresswoman from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY], in which she graphically depicted the conditions in the splendid veterans' hospitals of Arizona prior to the operation of the Economy Act, where these veterans were being cared for, and then the conditions afterward, the conditions now, with the great, vacant wards and with hundreds of veterans out on the highways and byways in a disabled or diseased condition, trying to pick up a living for themselves and their families.

I am sure that no one who heard that picture drawn here the other day will forget it very quickly.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Pardon me, but I have only 10 minutes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I was going to help the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I know where the gentleman's heart is.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield for one question and I shall try to have the gentleman's time extended?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Before the enactment of the economy act a veteran could remain in the hospital and draw the full amount of compensation that he would draw if not in a hospital. The President's regulations reduced the compensation of service-connected veterans who were receiving hospitalization to $15 a month, and non-service-connected to $6 a month. This caused many veterans to leave hospitals who were really not able to leave in order that their families may have the benefit of the full amount of their compensation. This also caused many vacant beds.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to say to the gentleman now that I have in my district, and I think they are in every district in the country, many who have not any compensation or pension and cannot get into any hospital either.

I want to take this question up chronologically and briefly. It may as well be admitted that it was the intent of the authors of the economy act to exclude veterans with non-service-connected diseases or injuries from hospitalization. This intent was carried out in the framing of the law, and as that law came to this House last March there is not any question but what it excluded veterans with non-service-connected diseases or injuries from hospitalization.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield there? Was that in the economy bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, sir; that exclusion.

Mr. FISH. Was not that in the regulations?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No, sir; that was in the act; that is, the act as it came to and passed the House.

I am going to quote that law in a moment, but if you get to interrupting me, my time will be up before I really get started.

Let me repeat that it was the intent of the authors of the economy act to cut out such hospitalization, and the act as it came into the House did cut it out, and as it left the House and went to the Senate.

Now, I want to read the language of section 6 of the Economy Act as it passed the House of Representatives, omitting some matters that are not important to the question at issue. It reads as follows:

> The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized, under such limitations as may be prescribed—
> and within the limits of existing Veterans' Administration facilities, to furnish the veterans of any war * * * medical and hospital treatment for diseases or injuries incurred or aggravated in line of duty in the active military or naval service.

Mr. Speaker, there is the language that excluded all veterans with non-service-connected diseases or injuries from hospitalization.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER and Mr. PATMAN rose.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Colorado may be extended 10 minutes. This is an important subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Now, Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer any further questions. I want to get this matter before you as I understand it.

I knew perfectly well when this bill left the House and went to the Senate that it cut out veterans with non-service-connected injuries or diseases. I understood perfectly well what this meant.

In the Senate an amendment was proposed and adopted, and that amendment, leaving out superfluous matters, reads as follows. All but the last line reads as I read from the House section a moment ago:

SECTION 6 OF THE ECONOMY ACT AS AMENDED IN THE SENATE AND NOW IN THE LAW

The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized, under such limitations as may be prescribed by the President and within the limits of existing Veterans' Administration facilities, to furnish to veterans of any war * * * medical and hospital treatment for diseases or injuries.

Now, when the bill passed the House the press commented on the bill as having cut out hospitalization for non-service-connected disabilities. I watched the reaction of the press carefully to this Senate amendment, and they treated it the same way. If you turn to the files of the local papers you will find that they treated the hospitalization provision as it passed the Senate just as they did when it passed the House.

I decided that I was going to clarify the matter when the bill with the amendments came back to the House. The bill came back to the House, and on March 15, page 508 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, you will find this debate:

Mr. TABER. If the Members will turn to amendment no. 8 on page 5, they will see that the Senate amendment liberalizes the hospitalization of veterans, so that it covers all disabilities of a permanent character, plus tuberculosis and neuropsychiatric trouble, regardless of whether it is service connected or not.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to set my mind at rest on that point, because in my opinion, if this language is as I construe it, this is the most important and beneficial amendment made to the bill in the Senate. As I read the amendment, although it is rather confusingly worded, this still continues hospitalization for all diseases or injuries, whether service connected or not.

Mr. TABER. That is correct. However, under regulations of the President. That is, the President can prescribe, just as is done now, that those with service-connected disabilities have priority of treatment.

Power, that is, to prescribe regulations, not to cut these non-service-connected classes out of the law, because if these classes could cut out all other classes could be cut out because the language giving the President power to prescribe limitation is identical in both sections, the original House section and in the section as amended by the Senate.

Now, I had the Senate amendment in my files as it came before the Senate, but I cannot find it. Still I think it can be found.

They took the House section, and after the words "permanent disabilities", they inserted the words "tuberculosis and neuropsychiatric trouble." Then they struck a black line through the following words, "incurred or aggravated in line of duty in the active military and naval service."

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I want to say that my understanding of the law now is as I suggested it did on the floor, and I believe it has not been properly construed.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If that is still the gentleman's understanding, he knows it is not being carried out in the administration of the law.

Mr. TABER. I do.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. They have vacant veterans' wards in every hospital in the country, and diseased veterans are not able to obtain hospitalization. I have not much more to add to this. This has been on my mind ever since we passed the Economy Act. Hospitalization of veterans is a part of the four-point program of the American Legion that is being so pressed on every Member of Congress, and which I am in favor of, and I am here to claim that under the exact language of the law as it is on the statute books today that demand has already been taken care of and only needs to be carried out by the Veterans' Administration. I have no more doubt than that I stand here that if the language of this act were submitted to any competent court in the land it would hold that section 6 of the Economy Act reads for hospitalization of veterans of all wars for all diseases and injuries, regardless of service connection. If I am wrong on that point, I want somebody to rise and point out where.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is a distinguished veteran and held high office in the American Legion in his own State. Has the gentleman taken this matter up with the American Legion executive committee or the national commander? Evidently they are under a misapprehension. They are advocating the very thing that apparently now exists, namely, to give hospitalization to the non-service-connected cases.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Apparently at the time this point was raised by me it was not given very serious consideration. So far as I can learn, it has never been given consideration since, and all lawyers know how long something can lie dormant in a law for years and yet be a vital, living part of the law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The administration has failed to give it legislative interpretation.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. Because the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] at the time this matter was before the House in March, in explaining the position of the committee and conferees, was legislative interpretation.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Absolutely.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. TABER. That was the understanding of the members of the committee that had that up for consideration, and the conferees that represented this House. It was also the construction put on the Senate amendment by Mr. Roberts, the counsel to the Veterans' Administration, in his appearance before our committee.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I could not understand the colloquy between the gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman on the other side of the aisle. Just what was his statement with reference to hospitalization in connection with these non-service-connected cases?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I made this statement, that as section 6 of the Economy Act, covering hospitalization, now reads, the veterans' hospital facilities of the country, if available—and they are available—are open to veterans of all wars for all diseases or injuries, regardless of service connection.

Mr. RANKIN. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the hospitalization of these veterans was effected in the order issued by the President on January 19?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. My claim is this, that after the adoption of the Senate amendment the veterans' hospitals of this country were thrown open to veterans just the same as if no Economy Act had ever been passed. Is that the case under the new regulations? I claim that the authorized hospitals of this country are open to veterans of all wars just as if the Economy Act had never been passed.

Mr. RANKIN. If not, they should be under the President's Executive order.

Mr. KELLER. What about that Executive order?

Mr. RANKIN. It was issued on the 19th of January.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If it does, it will eliminate one of the most important points in the four-point program.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has again expired.

RATES OF POSTAGE

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House Committee on Ways and Means be discharged from further consideration of the bill H.R. 7303, to continue until July 1, 1935, the rates of postage on the advertising portions of second-class publications prescribed by the Revenue Act of 1932, and that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], and I am sorry that he has just left the room, rose to defend former President Hoover. I commend him for that. I have no objection to Mr. SNELL defending his friend, but in the course of that defense he criticized some of the Members on the Democratic side of the aisle for the way they had handled the recommendations that had been submitted to Congress by President Hoover. I do object to that criticism. Mr. SNELL criticized me and the Committee on Expenditures, of which I am the chairman.

He said that we took the President's recommendations and threw them out of the window, stating the committee did not even hold hearings. I told the gentleman from New York at that time that we held hearings on the President's recommendations. I now have a copy of the hearings with me and I am going to present them to the gentleman from New York, and ask the gentleman from New York to read the statement of Mr. Hoover's Budget Director, Colonel Roop. The colonel in reply to a question of mine stated that he thought the reorganization of the Government should be left to Mr. Roosevelt. Was he a Democrat? I want the gentleman to read the statement of a former majority leader of this House, Mr. Frank Mondell, who came before the committee and criticized the President's recommendations. He also submitted a lengthy brief. I want him to read and explain why Mr. Williamson, of South Dakota, the ranking Member on the minority, and Mr. Colton, of Utah, the next in rank on the committee, also Republicans, opposed the President's recommendations. I want him to read how Mr. Addison Smith, a former Member of this House, the chairman of an important committee at one time, came before our committee and opposed the President's recommendations, and also why Mr. BRITTEN, of Illinois, his able assistant, opposed the President's recommendation in reference to the transfer to the Geodetic Survey of the Hydrographic Office, Naval Observatory, and other important activities of the Navy.

Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York will remember it was not until I had taken this floor and criticized members of the President's Cabinet for opposing Mr. Hoover's recommendations that they discontinued their criticism. The opposition came from his bureau chiefs who sought to save their jobs. However, when the committee heard President Hoover's Budget Director, Colonel Roop, say it was his opinion that reorganization should be left to President Roosevelt there was not a corporal's guard to be found in support of his recommendations.

I do not object to fair criticism, but I do object when we are criticized for something that the Republicans themselves are largely responsible for.

If the gentleman from New York will read the hearings, he will find that the members of his own party were more forward in trying to defeat the President's recommendations than were the members of the Democratic Party. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has expired.

AID TO HOME OWNERS AND UNEMPLOYED

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to insert in the RECORD a copy of my bill dealing with aid to home owners and unemployed, and along with that a letter which I addressed to the President and to the Chairman of the Home Loan Bank and a letter to the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, in the interest of the distressed home owners and the unemployed, I have addressed communications to the honorable President of the United States, the Honorable John H. Fahey, Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and the Honorable James P. Buchanan, Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, which communications I am here inserting in the RECORD for the information of the Congress. I am also including a copy of my bill H.R. 6214, which, if adopted by the Congress, will bring adequate relief to the home owners and to our worthy unemployed without one single cent of cost to the taxpayer.

The matter is as follows:

JANUARY 30, 1934.

The honorable PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: According to the newspapers, it is noted that your administration is reported favorable to a proposition which I advanced before the Civil Works Administration in the proceedings of the general meeting and executive meeting held in Washington on November 15.

I there proposed direct loans to citizens to rehabilitate their homes, and I congratulate your administration in adopting this idea under the home-loan bank organization, as reported by the press.

For this reason, I would personally favor unusually large appropriations for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and very little, if any, to the C.W.A., which latter is a distinct loss to the National Treasury, whereas the former will be repaid in time.

Lending direct to the individual to rehabilitate his home or for new construction will also in equal measure eliminate the graft under the C.W.A., which never can be adequately effaced or controlled. Furthermore, the work under the C.W.A in most instances is of an unnecessary nature, whereas the rehabilitation of homes and new construction of homes is of paramount necessity. The prime objective of the American citizen is the opportunity to work at a liveable or saving wage, of which he will be assured if you will authorize a national building program as I indicate.

I read in a circular now before me that the House Ways and Means Committee reports that the annual interest payment on the existing $40,500,000,000 of tax-exempt bonds is $1,805,000,000. Unless you intend to inflate the currency to an abnormal amount or repudiate national indebtedness, I cannot subscribe to the further issuance of tax-exempt bonds, regardless of purpose, and for that reason I submit to you for your consideration a copy of my bill H.R. 6214, which will positively bring relief to the American people without one cent of cost to the taxpayer.

I have sent out a large number of copies of this bill and the response is overwhelmingly in favor of the plan as proposed in my bill. Outstanding endorsements come from church organizations, which are also in an unfortunate mortgage and building dilemma and which espouse my measure.

My bill will positively relieve the unemployment situation, it will rehabilitate our citizenship through the modernization of their homes and the construction of new homes, and will add impetus to the forward movement now taking place under the N.R.A. The new deal will actually be a real new deal, which was the objective the American people voted for in November 1932.

I hope you will kindly spare the time to read this bill with a view to adopting this idea, in any form, in the interest of the American taxpayer.

Thanking you for your consideration, I am,

Sincerely yours,

J. H. HOEPPEL.

JANUARY 30, 1934.

Hon. JOHN FAHEY,
Chairman Federal Home Loan Bank Board,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. FAHEY: Kindly see copy of letter herewith which I have addressed to the President in connection with the press reports on the loans contemplated under your organization for rehabilitation of existing homes and the construction of new homes. If you care to, kindly refer to page 23 of the circular printed by the Federal Civil Works Administration, proceedings of the general meeting and executive meeting, dated November 15, which will give you a brief outline of the suggestion I made to Mr. Hopkins.

I congratulate you, even though you have not gone as far as I in my H.R. 6214, a copy of which is enclosed, and which I hope you will take time to read. Your plan is immeasurably superior to bring relief to our unemployed than is the waste of funds under the C.W.A.

Thanking you for your favorable consideration, I am,

Sincerely yours,

J. H. HOEPPEL.

P.S.—I am also enclosing herewith for your information copy of my letter to the Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee.

JANUARY 30, 1934.

Hon. JAMES P. BUCHANAN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. BUCHANAN: Kindly see copy of letter herewith which I have addressed to the President in connection with today's press reports which indicate that the President and Mr. Fahey are in sympathy with extending loans to citizens to rehabilitate their homes and for new construction of homes.

This idea, as announced in today's press, will be infinitely more beneficial to the citizen than is the squandering of funds under the C.W.A.

By lending money directly to the present and future home owner you will eliminate the graft which is existent in the C.W.A. and which can never be thoroughly eradicated. At the same time you will be extending funds which will be repayable into the Treasury, whereas the C.W.A., as testified by Secretary of Labor, Miss Perkins, also quoted in today's press, is absolutely nothing other than a dole. You know the dole is repugnant to the honorable worthy American unemployed who demand the opportunity to work and maintain themselves with the fruits of their toil.

Let us go forward in the New Deal along common-sense lines such as proposed by Mr. Fahey rather than under the abortive plan of the C.W.A., through which we are expending funds needlessly, wastefully, and improperly.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely yours,

J. H. HOEPPEL.

H.R. 6214

A bill to create jobs for millions of unemployed and to liquidate frozen assets in financial institutions, without the issuance of tax-exempt bonds, through the establishment of county loan agencies to extend credit direct to the individual, companies, firms, associations, institutions, municipalities, schools, churches, and other public agencies for mortgage relief and repair, construction, and development purposes

Whereas under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other agencies the Government is extending credit to railroads, banks, and insurance companies at as low as a fraction of 1-percent interest, notwithstanding the security offered and accepted is based on debt and collateral of a doubtful value; and

Whereas under the Federal Emergency Relief and Public Works Acts the Government is expending $3,800,000,000, which amount is all tax exempt and carries a high rate of interest, thus adding to the tax burden of the citizen while it enriches the money lender; and

Whereas the new deal is the same old deal as far as tax-exempt securities are involved, which not only puts a millstone around the necks of our youth but even mortgages generations yet unborn because of our inherent stupidity of catering to the financial ring of Wall Street; and

Whereas the United States is virtually financially, if not also intellectually, bankrupt as far as leadership is involved, through failure to pay as we spend in public disbursements by the levying of adequate taxes on entrenched, unearned, and inherited wealth and the consequent reduction or elimination of taxes to the worker, small home owner, and farmer whose income is less than $2,000 per annum; and

Whereas under the Public Works Administration the Government is granting as high as 30 percent of the project free to the municipality or other agency, which gift must be paid by the taxpayers; and

Whereas the National Economy League, the agent of corrupt bankers and plutocrats, is now issuing propaganda, stating:

"We believe, however, that the people are willing to make great sacrifices in submitting to new taxation, on condition that they are assured that their sacrifices will accomplish the desired result"; and

Whereas the National Economy League, which struck so inhumanely and unfairly under the new deal at our veterans and Federal employees, does not advocate increased taxes for those most able to pay; and

Whereas the American citizen desires honest labor at a just wage, freed from the stigma of charity and cheap or inefficient politics as is evidenced in the Federal Relief and Civil Works Administration; and

Whereas immediate, positive, and direct relief is available to our distressed citizens by the exercise of common sense and courage if the Government will free itself from the incubus of monopolistic entrenched wealth and issue credit based on its own security: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue not less than $10,000,000,000 in United States notes, which shall be deposited in the United States Treasury, subject to the order of the Secretary of the Department of the Interior as hereinafter prescribed.

SEC. 2. In addition to other duties incumbent on the Department of the Interior, that Department is hereby charged with organizing a county loan agency in each county of the United States and/or the territorial possessions of the United States where the board of supervisors or county commissioners of such counties have voted to agree to and abide by all orders and regulations as may be issued by the Secretary of the Interior in connection with direct loans as provided in this act.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is directed to establish in the county seat of each of such counties a county loan agency which shall operate under a directorate of five individuals. Two members of the directorate shall be appointed by the county supervisors or county commissioners to serve for a term of 4 years They shall not be subject to removal from the directorate except by a unanimous vote of the county supervisors or county commissioners. When appointed, they shall not be of the same political affiliation. Two members of the directorate shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior from a United States civil service register which shall be created for this purpose. The chairman of the directorate shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. All other personnel required within the county loan agency shall be equally provided from the county civil service register and the United States civil service register from present or newly created registers in accordance with requirements.

SEC. 4. Salaries paid to directors and employees of the county loan agency shall be equivalent to salaries for similar positions within the Department of the Interior: Provided, however, That no salary paid shall be in excess of $10,000 per annum.

SEC. 5. Non-interest-bearing county bonds, or county notes or pledges of indebtedness, if voted unanimously by the county supervisors or county commissioners, shall be accepted at face value by the Secretary of the Interior in extension of credit to a county loan agency as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 6. County entities as recognized in this act may be extended credit by the Secretary of the Interior subject to orders, rules, and regulations of that office at not to exceed 10 percent of the average assessed valuation of the county during the years 1926 to 1931, inclusive.

SEC. 7. Not more than 40 percent of the credit extended to any county may be utilized in granting mortgage relief to distressed farmers and home owners. Loans for this purpose may be made in an amount equal to 100 percent of the present mortgage where mortgagors are bona fide residents of the property mortgaged. The remainder of the credit extended to any county must be applied in direct loans by the county loan agency to individuals, companies, firms, associations, institutions, municipalities, schools, churches, and other public agencies for mortgage relief and repair, construction, and development purposes. Loans for repairs, remodeling, construction, or development purposes for homes, farms, or other agencies, as authorized herein, shall not exceed 80 percent of the value of the property when purchased, remodeled, or constructed.

SEC. 8. The rate of service charge for loans extended shall be at cost, and in no event to exceed 1 percent per annum. Service charges and a payment on principal of an amount equal to 2 percent of the loan shall be paid annually. Larger amounts may be paid at option of the borrower. Payments received on principal of loans made shall be returned to the United States Treasury and retired from circulation. All moneys received on service charges in excess of cost of operation of this branch of the public business shall be returned to the United States Treasury as profit and deposited in the general funds.

SEC. 9. All acts or parts thereof inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

TENNESSEE RIVER—TOMBIGBEE CANAL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss briefly at this time the proposition of connecting the Tennessee with the Tombigbee River by canal and of constructing and maintaining a navigable inland waterway down the Tombigbee to Mobile Bay.

This proposition has been discussed for more than a hundred years. With the developments now being wrought by the Tennessee Valley Authority, the prospects are brighter for the consummation of this long-considered plan.

Four great purposes can be accomplished by this improvement:

First. Control floods on the Tombigbee River.

Second. Control floods on the Tennessee and Mississippi Rivers.

Third. Shorten the water route from Muscle Shoals to the Gulf of Mexico by 648 miles, and shorten the water distance from other points on the Tennessee to the Gulf in proportion.

Fourth. Develop a sufficient amount of hydroelectric power to supply the surrounding country.

The Tombigbee River and its tributaries have long been neglected by the Federal Government, and, as a result, the people in that great valley have suffered.

From the standpoint of soil and climate, the Tombigbee is one of the richest valleys in the world. It not only comprises the great hardwood and pine timber belt of northeastern Mississippi and northwestern Alabama, but it also includes the great prairie or lime belt areas of those two States.

Four hundred years ago Hernando De Soto, in the first and most dramatic expedition into the wilds of North America, explored this wonderful valley. He was directed to it by the Indians, who told him that he would find in that country a wealthy tribe who possessed vast fields of maize, or Indian corn. He came and found the Chickasaws, the most prosperous and enlightened of all the American tribes. There he spent the winter of 1540–41. The Chickasaws entertained him and fed his enormous expedition through the winter, until a misunderstanding arose in the spring, which resulted in his hasty and unceremonious departure from their domain. De Soto called the beautiful Tombigbee the "Rio de Los Angeles"—the River of the Angels.

For more than a hundred and fifty years the Tombigbee and its tributaries supplied the highways of commerce for this area. In 1736, Bienville, the Governor of the French territory in Mississippi, transported his entire army up the Tombigbee to Cotton Gin Port to engage in the disastrous battle with the Chickasaws on the fatal field of Ackia.

In 1815 Lorenzo Dow, one of the great pioneer figures of America, visited the Tombigbee country and made this entry in his journal:

> The river Tombigby, like the Nile, overflows once a year, is also a flood-tide river only once in 24 hours; it is navigable for vessels, and will one day become the glory of the south part of the United States, as the trade of Tennessee, etc., will pass through it.

During the Civil War the Tombigbee Valley was known to both sides as the "granary of the Confederacy." Numerous expeditions were sent by the Federals to destroy its cornfields, in order to cut off Confederate supplies. They resulted in some of the bloodiest battles of the Civil War.

Strange as it may seem to people who are unfamiliar with that section of the South, the upper stretches of the Tombigbee Valley are one of the most thickly settled portions of the new world, with white people living in the rural districts. There are many places where the rural colored population is more dense, and there are many places where there are more white people per square mile, living in towns and villages, but there are few, if any, areas more densely populated with rural white people.

Yet, this river has been neglected and permitted to fill up, until today it is overflowing and destroying vast areas of fertile lands. I am reliably informed that there are 25,000 acres in Itawamba County, Miss., alone, where the crops have been destroyed by overflows from this stream for the last several years.

They are entitled to the same protection afforded people along the Mississippi, the Ohio, the Missouri, and other navigable streams.

This development will protect those people from these periodic overflows and at the same time help to control the floods on the Tennessee and the Mississippi Rivers.

We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in our attempts to control the floods on the Mississippi River, yet we have not been able so far to take a single gallon of water out of the Mississippi Basin. By the construction of this canal up Bear Creek, from the point where it empties into the Tennessee River, and then across through a low sandy ridge to Mackeys Creek in Tishomingo County, we can divert a sufficient amount of water from the Tennessee River to control the floods on that stream, especially with the assistance of the various dams which have been, and are now being, constructed for impounding flood waters on the Tennessee. In that way we can control the influence of the Tennessee on the flood crests on the Mississippi. One former Member of the House who has made a study of this project asserts that we could lower the surface of the Mississippi at Cairo 10 feet. His estimate may be exaggerated, and probably is, but there is no doubt that we can reduce the flood level on the Mississippi to a large extent. One man who is intensely interested in flood control on the Mississippi says that if we can lower the flood crest on it 6 inches, we can prevent such horrible disasters as befell the people along the Mississippi River in 1892 and in 1927. One engineer says that if we can even lower the flood crest on the Mississippi 3 or 4 inches, it would be worth every dollar this great project will cost, from the standpoint of flood control on the Mississippi alone.

I know some men will say that the diversion of this water in this way will increase the floods along the Tombigbee River, but that is not necessarily true. The floods on the Tombigbee seldom, if ever, synchronize with the floods on the Tennessee and the Mississippi. The floods on the Tombigbee are caused by local rains, or rains that fall within the Tombigbee Basin. It is never affected to amount to anything by melting snow and ice. On the other hand, the floods on the Tennessee and the Mississippi are produced largely by waters from melting snow and ice along their tributaries. Therefore, as a rule, when they are on a rampage, the Tombigbee has spent its force and receded within its banks. I have seen the Tombigbee at almost its lowest level, when the Mississippi and the Tennessee were at their heights. In 1927 people were plowing on the banks of the Tombigbee while steamboats were being piloted over some of the richest farm lands along the Mississippi.

It is entirely probable that in the ages past the Tennessee River flowed down the Tombigbee Valley. Look at the map which I am inserting as a part of these remarks, and you will note that the Tennessee River turns north about the time it passes the mouth of Bear Creek, which is on the boundary line between the States of Mississippi and Alabama.

An Army engineer testified at a hearing held at Muscle Shoals some years ago that the bed of the Tennessee River at the mouth of Bear Creek is about 150 feet higher than the bed of the Tombigbee River at the confluence of Brown and Mackeys Creeks, about 40 miles south of that point.

It is now proposed for the Tennessee Valley Authority to construct a dam across the Tennessee River just north of the city of Iuka, Miss., either at Cooks Landing or at Pickwicks Landing. This will raise the water level at the mouth of Bear Creek 50 feet, making the water level at that point approximately 200 feet higher than the bed of the Tombigbee River at the confluence of Brown and Mackeys Creeks, which is the head of navigation on the Tombigbee.

It is proposed to construct a canal connecting Bear Creek with Mackeys Creek, as shown on the map which I am inserting, and to establish a barge line down the Tombigbee to Mobile Bay. This project has been surveyed several times and has been pronounced entirely feasible. A recent report of the Engineering Corps of the War Department says:

> It is also true that the waterway and the Tombigbee River could serve as a spillway for diverting Tennessee River flood waters from the Mississippi River.

There is absolutely no question about the feasibility of diverting water from the Tennessee River down the Tombigbee in this way. As I said a moment ago, it is the only place we have yet found where a gallon of water can be diverted from the Mississippi Valley to control the floods on that stream with anything like a reasonable amount of expenditure and assurance of success. In fact, it is the only place I recall where the water from one major stream can be diverted into an entirely different watershed with anything like a reasonable amount of expenditure.

It will give the people in the Tombigbee Valley water transportation and thereby help to lighten the enormous burdens they are now bearing in the way of transportation charges.

It will shorten the water distance between Muscle Shoals and all other points on the upper Tennessee River and Mobile 648 miles. It will shorten the water distance from Muscle Shoals to New Orleans 488 miles. It will shorten the water distance from the Ohio River to the Gulf of Mexico 195 miles, and from points on the Mississippi River above Cairo to the Gulf 102 miles. It will shorten the distance of traffic on the upper Ohio clear to Pittsburgh, Pa., to the Gulf of Mexico 195 miles.

It will give us another great inland waterway for commercial use in times of peace and afford us additional protection in times of war. Let it be remembered in this connection that one of the primary objects of the construction of the great Muscle Shoals plant was to supply nitrates for our forces in case of war. If war should come again, we would then have this additional inland waterway over which to transport our supplies and explosives as well as troops and other munitions of war.

In addition to all this, a power site would be afforded on this cut-off that would generate a sufficient amount of electricity to supply the surrounding country.

I submit that from every standpoint this is one of the most feasible, most practical, most deserving, and most necessary projects this Government could develop at this time.

One great engineer, who has made a study of this proposition, said recently that this would one day be one of the greatest inland waterways in the world, surpassing in importance the St. Lawrence Canal. He said that the time would come when even ocean-going vessels would traverse this route all the way up to Cincinnati and that it would be the outlet for traffic on the Tennessee River up to the head of navigation, on the lower Tennessee to where it empties into the Ohio, and on the Ohio all the way up to Pittsburgh, Pa. He also said that a great deal of the traffic on the upper Mississippi River and the Missouri River would follow this route because it would be shorter, safer, and more desirable, since it would be controlled.

The only objection offered to this development now is the contention that the traffic load is not sufficient to justify it.

Men who advance this argument ignore the element of flood control. They ignore the element of soil conservation or protection. They ignore the element of power development.

They also underestimate the present traffic load, and attempt to measure the traffic load of the future by the antiquated conditions of the past. They overlook the fact that this is one of the richest valleys in the world, producing in great abundance corn, cotton, cottonseed, hogs, cattle, hay, potatoes, poultry, dairy products, strawberries, and other farm commodities to be shipped to other sections of the world. They seem to be unconscious of the fact that this area, comprising the Tennessee-Tombigbee Valley, contains the reserve supply of the world's timber. They do not take into consideration the fact that this area contains a large portion of the world's reserve supply of coal, iron, and bauxite, and overlook the fact that it contains deposits of practically every other mineral known to America.

They overlook the fact that in this area is to be produced the country's supply of fertilizers in times of peace, as well as its nitrates for explosives in times of war.

They fail to take cognizance of the fact that in this area lies Muscle Shoals, where we have just put into operation the greatest hydroelectric power plant on earth, and which we are reenforcing by the construction of several other large dams. The great wealth of power which they produce will be sent pulsing through this area throughout the years to come, to light the homes, supply the farms, and turn the wheels of industry to transform these raw materials into finished products.

This load is now growing by leaps and bounds, and will continue to do so as this great Tennessee-Tombigbee area is developed into the Ruhr Valley of America.

Men who raise this question also overlook the enormous load that would pass over this route from the upper Tennessee River, from Muscle Shoals, Florence, Sheffield, Tuscumbia, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Bristol, and all the territory they supply, as well as the enormous load from the lower Tennessee, and from the Ohio River all the way from Cairo to Louisville and Cincinnati, and even on to Pittsburgh, Pa. They do not take into consideration the load that would pass over this route from the upper Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, as well as practically all the traffic from the Cumberland, up as far as Nashville, Tenn., and even beyond Nashville.

They overlook the fact that in addition to the enormous local load, to which I have just referred, this route would, in all probability, carry one of the heaviest loads of through traffic of any inland waterway in the world.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, a number of the Members of the House requested that I have printed the statement in relation to the railroad pension law, which I gave yesterday. I shall, therefore, have copies printed, and those who need them can come and have them at their pleasure.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the majority leader about when and how it is proposed to bring up the relief appropriation measure?

Mr. BYRNS. That bill will not come up today, but it is understood it will come up on Monday.

Mr. TABER. Under suspension of the rules?

Mr. BYRNS. I understand so. Of course the Speaker can answer that better than I can, but I understand the Speaker will recognize someone to move to pass the bill under suspension of the rules on Monday. At the same time, the Consent Calendar will be called.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Of course if that bill is passed under suspension of the rules, the gentleman will be able to give us a little more time for debate than the regular 20 minutes?

Mr. BYRNES. I should hope so. Of course, I should not want to make any agreement about that in the absence of the chairman of the committee, who will have charge of the bill, but I am sure he will be willing to get together on some kind of an agreement with the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. I think we ought to have additional time at least on this important measure.

Mr. BYRNS. I feel very sure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] will be agreeable to that idea, but, of course, I cannot commit him.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will there be no opportunity when that bill is before the House to offer amendments?

Mr. BYRNS. If it is taken up under suspension of the rules, as the gentleman knows, amendments will not be in order.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman does well know that. I should like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that is fair, in view of the complaints that have been uttered here; that amendments or suggestions such as instructions as to the necessities and resources of States and municipalities are concerned, should not be taken into consideration?

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman is asking me a personal question, which, of course, involves only my personal views, but I will say frankly to the gentleman that if he has in mind the question of allocating that fund to particular enterprises, I do not think this House is in a position to act intelligently upon the matter.

How do we know how it should be allocated or divided?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SNELL. Do not get so excited about the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. We will have plenty of time to debate this later.

Mr. SNELL. We will get along better if we are given a chance to ask a few questions.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. It is of the greatest importance to the Membership of the House that they shall have opportunity to offer constructive criticism or suggestions in regard to this legislation. In view of the many years' work in this House by the gentleman from Tennessee and his careful watching over all expenditures, he must agree that it is a fair proposition that this House, which appropriates the money, should have an opportunity to offer a constructive suggestion along the line I have mentioned.

Mr. BYRNS. I have just stated to the gentleman from New York that in my judgment the gentleman from Texas, who will have charge of the bill, will be willing to afford a reasonable time for its discussion. Of course, no amendments could be offered to this bill, an appropriation bill, except to allocate the funds; and I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts in all fairness whether he or any other Member of this House is in a position to say that a certain sum ought to be designated for a project in his district or some other district.

Mr. GIFFORD. Why, that is so unfair it ought not to be uttered by the gentleman. He knows we have no personal interest in favor of any particular district.

Mr. BYRNS. I am very sure of that. I only said that by way of illustration. For the sake of the discussion let us say in my own district.

Does the gentleman from Massachusetts believe this House is in a position to pass upon the allocation of a particular part of this appropriation for a project in my district, we will say?

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman knows that is not my thought at all.

Mr. BYRNS. We cannot do that on the floor of the House. What other amendment, I ask the gentleman, could be offered to an appropriation bill?

Mr. KELLER. I should like to offer an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. We have an appropriation bill to take up as the unfinished business of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the majority leader a question in regard to the program. I think that is the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is the gentleman's purpose, I withdraw my demand for the regular order.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the majority leader whether it is the purpose, if we complete this appropriation bill this afternoon, to adjourn over tomorrow?

Mr. BYRNS. The program is to adjourn over tomorrow.

PROGRAM

Mr. SNELL. Is it any part of the program of the majority to give us some time the early part of next week to consider the Private Calendar? It is getting quite large now; there are several bills on it which individual Members would like to have considered.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from New York that it is the hope that we can get to the Private Calendar at an early date; we will do so at the earliest possible moment. I am not able to answer the gentleman definitely for the one reason that we do not know just when the tax bill will be presented to the House.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that when the tax bill is reported to the House it will have priority.

Mr. BYRNS. When the tax bill is reported I hope the House will agree to consider it at the earliest possible moment and dispose of it and send it to the Senate.

If the tax bill is not before the House next Friday, so far as I know I am quite sure it would be expected that we should consider the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, under our new rules, the Private Calendar comes up on a Friday; but we could take it up on any other day by unanimous consent.

Mr. BYRNS. I am aware that there are about 180 bills on the Private Calendar. Of course, it will take more than a day to dispose of them.

Now, it is the expectation as soon as these major bills are out of the way, the House will have ample opportunity to take up and consider all these bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is what we ought to do.

Mr. BLANTON. And we will have plenty of time to do that while the Senate is deliberating the bills we shall have sent to it.

Mr. BYRNS. At the present time I cannot make any definite statement as to what particular day we can take up the Private Calendar. Whether or not we can do so next week depends upon the legislative situation.

Mr. SNELL. If we are going to have the early adjournment some people think we are, we ought to get these private bills over to the other body so we can get some of them back.

Mr. BYRNS. I agree with the gentleman. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the majority leader a question. The other day I made a statement that it seemed the policy was going to be to provide further C.W.A. funds to take us through the month of May only. I expect to offer an amendment to make it possible to continue them through many months. I should like to know if the bill will be brought up under such circumstances that I could offer such an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on that bill I ask for the regular order. We will take that up later.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman from Texas ought to let the question be answered.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may insert in the RECORD the instructions and regulations of the administration concerning the hospitalization of veterans and also the Legion hospitalization program. I think it is obvious the Members do not understand wherein the difference between the two programs lies; and I think it very important for all of us to have this information. Adequate and prompt hospitalization of the disabled veterans is a vital matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER

VETERANS REGULATION NO. 6 (B)—ELIGIBILITY FOR DOMICILIARY OR HOSPITAL CARE, INCLUDING MEDICAL TREATMENT

By virtue of the authority vested in me under section 6 of title I of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933 (Public, No. 2, 73d Cong.), as amended by section 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes" approved June 16, 1933 (Public, No. 78, 73d Cong.), the following regulation amending Veterans' Regulation No. 6 (a) is hereby prescribed:

1. Paragraph I of Veterans' Regulation No. 6 (a) is amended to read as follows:

"I. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, within the limits of Veterans' Administration facilities, is authorized to furnish domiciliary or hospital care, including medical treatment, to the following persons and in the specified order of preference:

"(a) To honorably discharged veterans of any war, including the Boxer rebellion and the Philippine insurrection, who are suffering with injuries or diseases which were incurred or aggravated in line of duty in the active military or naval service when in need of hospital treatment for such injuries or diseases; and

"To those persons included in paragraph III of part I of Veterans' Regulation No. 1(a) who are suffering with injuries or diseases which were incurred in line of duty, when in need of hospital treatment for such injuries or diseases;

"(b) To persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard for disabilities incurred in line of duty, who are suffering with injuries or diseases which were incurred or aggravated in line of duty in the active service when in need of hospital treatment for such injuries or diseases;

"(c) The veterans of any war, including the Boxer rebellion and the Philippine insurrection, who served in the active military or naval service for a period of 90 days or more and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, or who, having served less than 90 days, were discharged for disability incurred in the service in line of duty, who have no adequate means of support, and who are suffering with permanent disabilities or tuberculous or neuropsychiatric ailments, or such other conditions requiring emergency or extensive hospital treatment as may be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, which incapacitate them from earning a living;

"(d) To persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard for disabilities incurred in line of duty in the active service, who have no adequate means of support, and who are suffering with permanent disabilities or tuberculous or neuropsychiatric ailments, or such other conditions requiring emergency or extensive hospital treatment as may be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, which incapacitate them from earning a living."

2. Paragraph 3 of Veterans' Regulation No. 6 (a) is amended to read as follows:

"III. Reasonable traveling and other expenses of the person to a Veterans' Administration facility may be paid in the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs only when the person is granted prior authority to report to a Veterans' Administration facility for medical treatment or when, in the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, transfer from one Veterans' Administration facility to another is deemed advisable. Upon completion of such treatment as may be prescribed and regular discharge by the Veterans' Administration, reasonable traveling, and other expenses of the person, from the Veterans' Administration facility to the place from which hospitalized may be paid in the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. In the event of the death of any person prior to discharge, transportation expenses (including preparation of the body) for the return of the body to the place of residence or the nearest national cemetery may be paid in the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs when deemed necessary and as an administrative necessity."

3. Paragraph VI of Veterans' Regulation No. 6(a) is amended to read as follows:

"VI. Pension for disability the result of injury or disease incurred or aggravated in the line of duty in the active Coast Guard or military or naval service, and emergency officers' retirement pay, of any person who is being furnished hospital treatment, institutional, or domiciliary care by the United States, or any political subdivision thereof, shall not exceed $15 per month: Provided, That where such person has a wife, child, or dependent mother or father so much of the difference by which the amount to which such disabled person would otherwise be entitled exceeds $15 may be paid in the discretion of the Administrator to the wife, child, or dependent mother or father in such amounts as he may prescribe. Where any disabled person having neither wife, child, nor dependent mother or father, is being maintained by the Government of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof, in an institution and shall be deemed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to be insane, the pension or emergency officers' retirement pay for such person shall thereafter not exceed $15 per month so long as he shall be maintained by the Government of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof, in an institution: Provided, however, That in any case where the estate of such person derived from funds paid under the War Risk Insurance Act, as amended, the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, the several pension acts, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, or Public, No. 78, Seventy-third Congress, equals or exceeds $1,500, any payments of pension being made will be discontinued until the estate derived from such funds is reduced to $500. The provisions of this paragraph shall also be applicable to pensions for disability the result of injury or disease incurred after active military or naval service, except that the amount payable while the veteran is in the institution shall be $6 per month instead of $15 per month. As to pension payable on account of service prior to the Spanish-American War, the amount payable while the veteran is in the institution shall be $15 per month in all cases."

4. Paragraph VII of Veterans' Regulation No. 6 (a) is amended to read as follows:

"VII. Where a disabled person entitled to pension under Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, or Public, No. 78, Seventy-third Congress, or emergency officers' retirement pay is a patient in a Veterans' Administration facility, or where for any other reason the disabled person and his wife are not living together, or where the child or children are not in the custody of the disabled person, or in the custody of the widow, the amount of the pension or emergency officers' retirement pay may be apportioned as may be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs."

5. The amendments contained in this regulation shall be effective as of the date of promulgation.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 19, 1934.

(No. 6566)

VETERANS' REGULATION NO. 6 (B)—INSTRUCTION NO. 1

Subject: Domiciliary or hospital care, including medical treatment.

For the purposes of veterans' regulation no. 6 (b), the following instruction relative to domiciliary or hospital care, including medical treatment, is issued, canceling and superseding veterans' regulation no. 6 (a). Instruction no. 1:

I. ELIGIBILITY

Veterans who served during a period of war as defined in paragraphs I and IV, veterans' regulation no. 10, or in any war prior to the Spanish-American War; persons included in paragraph III, part I, veterans' regulation no. 1 (a) and persons discharged from the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard for disabilities incurred in line of duty, when applying for domiciliary or hospital care authorized under the provisions of veterans' regulations no. 6 (b), must meet the following requirements:

(1) Under paragraph I, subparagraph (a) of veterans' regulation no. 6 (b):

(a) An honorable discharge from the last period of war service.

(b) Be suffering from injuries or diseases which were incurred or aggravated in line of duty in the active military or naval service, and be in need of hospital treatment therefor.

(c) As regards persons included in paragraph III, part I, veterans' regulation no. 1 (a), the whole requirement will be that the applicant is suffering from an injury or disease for which he is in receipt of a disability pension.

(2) Under paragraph I, subparagraph (b):

(a) An honorable discharge from the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard for disability incurred in line of duty. The official records of any such service relative to findings of line of duty for its purposes is to be accepted in determining eligibility under this paragraph.

(b) If discharged from the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, be suffering from injuries or diseases which were incurred or aggravated in line of duty in the active military or naval service, and be in need of hospital treatment therefor. If discharged from the United States Coast Guard, be suffering from injuries or diseases which were incurred or aggravated in line of duty, and to be in need of hospital treatment therefor. Provided, that if an applicant's only service was peace time and his last discharge was not honorable, hospital treatment may be furnished only for a disease or injury incurred in line of duty in a period of service from which he was honorably discharged for disability incurred in line of duty.

(3) Under paragraph I, subparagraph (c):

(a) An honorable discharge from the last period of war service.

(b) Ninety days or more of active military or naval service, commencing or extending into a war period; or less than 90 days of such service if discharged therefrom for disability incurred in line of duty.

(c) Be suffering from a permanent disability, or a tuberculous or neuropsychiatric ailment, or other condition requiring emergency or extensive hospital treatment which incapacitates from earning a living.

A permanent disability will be taken to mean an impairment of mind or body which may reasonably be expected to continue throughout the remainder of the applicant's life, or any condition listed in veterans' regulation no. 1, instruction no. 2. A permanent disability must be such as would materially interfere with the following of any substantially gainful occupation. This must be for medical determination, which shall not be influenced by the applicant's inability—due to industrial conditions, lack of personal initiative, personality defect, or any reason other than disability due to disease or injury—to secure substantially gainful employment. The infirmities resulting from advancing age taken collectively, though not considered a disease entity, may be interpreted to be within the meaning of "disease" as used herein. A person who, at the time of his application for domiciliary care, is rated as 75 percent or more disabled for pension purposes will be held to be prima facie incapacitated within the meaning of this subparagraph.

A permanent disability, as contemplated, is exemplified in chronic, severe types of general medical conditions such as myocarditis, valvulitis, cardiovascular disease, nephritis, arthritis, etc., and in blindness, loss of parts or use of parts, etc. But injuries or diseases such as hernia and chronic types of appendicitis, cholecystitis, cholelithiasis, nephrolithiasis, etc., are not essentially permanent disabilities, as contemplated, in that surgical intervention may remove the disability. Applicants suffering from these latter types of diseases or injuries should be considered for admission under the provisions relating to "conditions requiring emergency or extensive hospital treatment", and not under the definition of "permanent disability."

"Such other conditions requiring emergency or extensive hospital treatment which incapacitate from earning a living" will comprehend the following:

Emergent hospital treatment will be provided for conditions endangering the life or health of the applicant and requiring immediate treatment. The provisions of paragraphs 7226 and 7232, Regulations and Procedure, will guide in individual determinations of this kind.

"Extensive hospital treatment" will be provided for acute, subacute, or chronic diseases or for surgical conditions which may be cured or improved by operation or other therapy, when such diseases or surgical conditions require extended hospital treatment. Such admissions will not be authorized for treatment of conditions usually treated on an outpatient basis, nor for dental or minor eye, ear, nose, and throat conditions, such as tonsillitis, deviated nasal septum, etc.

(d) No adequate means of support. When an applicant is receiving an income of $50 or more per month from any source, this fact will be considered prima facie evidence that he has adequate means of support, except when he is in fact contributing in whole or part from this income to the support of a wife, child, father, or mother. If the applicant alleges he is contributing to the support of dependents other than those just specified, the full circumstances will be submitted to central office for decision as to eligibility for admission under this subparagraph. However, if the medical care and treatment will be needed for a period so extensive that the applicant could not possibly pay for such services for such time in a private hospital, this $50 income provision may be waived.

Persons applying for treatment of conditions requiring extensive hospital treatment and which incapacitates them from earning a living, who are potential beneficiaries for hospital treatment by reason of membership in a lodge, union, fraternal organization, insurance company, community medical-treatment plan, workmen's compensation commission, or State industrial accident board will not be determined as eligible for admission to a facility under the provisions of I, eligibility, paragraphs (3) and (4) hereof, and will be instructed to secure treatment from any such organization or agency from which they have entitlement to treatment.

(4) Under paragraph I, subparagraph (d):

(a) An honorable discharge from the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps for disability incurred in line of duty in the active military or naval service; or an honorable discharge from the United States Coast Guard for disability incurred in line of duty. If the applicant's only service was in peace time, the discharge from his last period of service must have been honorable.

(b) and (c) Same requirements as for paragraph (3), (c) and (d) of the foregoing, as to types of disabilities and no adequate means of support.

II. APPLICATION

(a) An "Application for Domiciliary or Hospital Care" (form P–10) will be executed by the veteran and forwarded to the nearest Veterans' Administration facility. If suitable domiciliary or hospital accommodations are available at the Veterans' Administration facility receiving the application, that facility will determine the eligibility of the applicant and the necessity for domiciliary or hospital care, and will make the necessary arrangements for admission, including notice to the applicant. If the Veterans' Administration facility receiving the application is not equipped to furnish the necessary domiciliary or hospital care the application will be forwarded to the nearest available and suitable Veterans' Administration facility, and the applicant will be notified of such forwarding of his application, with the advice to await further information from the facility to which the application was forwarded. The Veterans' Administration facility having suitable domiciliary or hospital accommodations and to which the application has been forwarded will determine the eligibility of the applicant and the need for domiciliary or hospital care, and will effect arrangements for admission, including necessary notice to the applicant.

III. ADMISSIONS

Approved applications on form P–10 will be the authority for direct admission to a Veterans' Administration facility and the execution and distribution of form 2557, hospital admission card, will not be necessary in such admissions. But form 2593, report of domiciliary or hospital care, will be executed and distributed promptly after such admissions, in the manner provided in Veterans' Administration service letter, administrator's office, July 21, 1933, "Procedure for reporting admissions and discharges for hospital or domiciliary care."

This is vital, not only for medical statistics purposes but to make possible compliance with the provisions of paragraph VI of Veterans' Regulation No. 6 (b). However, regional offices and facilities will continue issuance of form 2557 to contract hospitals. Government or civil, when authorizing admissions thereto under the controlling provisions of Veterans' Regulation No. 10 (b), paragraph XIX, and Veterans' Regulations No. 10 (b), Instruction No. 1. Form 2557 will also be continued in use in authorizing admission to Veterans' Administration facilities of pensioners of allied nations, applicants for retirement from the United States Civil Service, beneficiaries of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, ill or injured members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, injured employees of the Civil Works Administration, United States Navy patients (under the act of January 1929), and claimants or beneficiaries for physical examination and observation for pension or insurance purposes. Form 2557 will also be used to cover interfacility transfers and form P–10 will not be transferred in such cases, as eligibility will already have been determined at the facility making the patient's transfer.

IV. TRANSPORTATION

Provided prior authority for the travel has been granted by the Veterans' Administration in every instance, transportation expenses (which may include travel requests, Pullman accommodations when necessary, meal and lodging requests, and an attendant, when required in careful medical judgment) will be supplied at Government expense, under the following circumstances: (a) To cover travel of the applicant to a Veterans' Administration facility for treatment; (b) to cover travel involved in interfacility transfers; (c) to cover return travel from a Veterans' Administration facility to the place from which the patient proceeded to the said facility; or when a patient had been transferred from one Veterans' Administration facility to another, to cover return to the facility from which he was transferred, if he requires further hospital or domiciliary care at the latter facility; or to cover return to the place from which he proceeded to the facility which transferred him to another, should it be decided he does not require further domiciliary or hospital care thereat. This latter decision will be made at the facility to which he was transferred from another. Transportation expenses to cover return travel from a Veterans' Administration facility will not be supplied unless all necessary treatment has been completed and regular discharge made.

Prior authority for all interhospital transfers must be obtained from the Medical Director. Form 2649 will be used in making such requests for authority.

Transportation and other necessary expenses incident thereto will not be supplied to cover admissions for straight domiciliary care (that is, without medical treatment). Transportation, etc., to cover interfacility transfers of such cases or to cover their return upon discharge from a facility, will not be supplied unless and until prior central office authority is obtained therefor.

V. CLOTHING

(a) Clothing will be furnished beneficiaries in Veterans' Administration facilities only under the following conditions:

(a) When necessary for the protection of health or for sanitary reasons.

(b) When the beneficiary is in receipt of less than $6 per month from any source; or when the manager of the facility personally authorizes the furnishing of clothing because of special need in any case.

An "Application for furnishing clothing" (form P–11), will be executed by the beneficiary and filed with the manager of the Veterans' Administration facility.

VI. PROSTHETIC APPLIANCES

(a) Prosthetic appliances and supplies will be furnished to honorably discharged veterans of any war, including the Boxer rebellion and the Philippine insurrection, and to persons honorably discharged from peace-time service for disabilities incurred in line of duty, in receipt of domiciliary or hospital care, when such appliances and supplies are required as an incident of the medical care or treatment furnished.

(b) Such special clothing as is made necessary by the wearing of a prosthetic appliance can be furnished.

VII. BURIALS

(a) The bodies of honorably discharged beneficiaries who die while receiving domiciliary or hospital care in Veterans' Administration facilities may be transported at Government expense to the place of residence, or to the nearest national cemetery, or to such other place as the next of kin may direct, where the expense so incurred is not greater than the ascertained cost of transportation to place of residence, and an administrative necessity, within the intent of paragraph III, Veterans' Regulation No. 6 (b), will be considered as existing if the above conditions are met.

(b) Exclusive of cost of transportation as provided in (a) above, the maximum allowance for burial and funeral expenses, including preparation of the body, will be $100. Not to exceed $100 will be allowed for a local burial, including all necessary services; and not to exceed $80 for the casket, embalming, and clothing will be allowed when the body is shipped, unless it is found impossible to secure the necessary enumerated services within the $80 limitation. In this event, written or telegraphic authorization from central office to expend a sum in excess of $80, but not to exceed $100 will be applied for and secured prior to incurring obligations. Every effort should be made to reduce the rates for preparation of the body for shipment, by contract or otherwise, to as low a figure as is consistent with proper service, in order that the unexpended balance of the $100 maximum allowance may be available for secondary burial and funeral expenses at the place to which the body is shipped for interment.

(c) As matter of administrative necessity, burial arrangements may be made and expenses paid for persons dying in Veterans' Administration facilities who are not otherwise entitled thereto, under the provisions of paragraph III, Veterans' Regulation No. 9 (b).

(d) Where death occurs at a Veterans' Administration facility and relatives or friends of the deceased request shipment to a point where the expense of transportation exceeds the ascertained expense of shipment to place of residence, it will be necessary, before authorizing shipment, for the Veterans' Administration office handling the shipping arrangements to collect from the person or persons requesting shipment a sum sufficient to cover the additional cost of transportation. When such collection has been made and properly deposited as a credit against the total cost of transportation, such total cost may then be authorized and assumed by the Veterans' Administration. Where relatives who have requested shipment to a point where cost of transportation exceeds the ascertained cost to place of residence fail to deposit the additional amount within a reasonable length of time, considering the circumstances, the body will be disposed of either by shipment to place of residence or to the nearest national cemetery as the relatives may elect; or if no such choice be made, to the nearest national cemetery.

VIII

The provisions of regulations and procedure and home regulations are continued in effect pending modification, except insofar as they conflict with the provisions of Veterans' Regulations and Instructions, issued under Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, as amended by Public, No. 78, Seventy-third Congress.

FRANK T. HINES,
Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

JANUARY 27, 1934.

THE AMERICAN LEGION'S PROGRAM

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. You will note that the American Legion program is more liberal in the hospitalization of veterans than is the Veterans' Administration program, as it provides that hospitalization under Federal Government auspices be afforded all veterans not dishonorably discharged who require treatment and who are not able to reasonably pay for their own treatment.

PERMISSION TO COMMITTEE ON LABOR TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor, beginning Tuesday next, be permitted to hold hearings during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1935

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 7513) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes; and pending that I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if it would be agreeable to him that the debate which is now limited to the bill should not exceed 1 hour? I think we can complete it in less time than that and take up the reading of the bill.

Mr. BACON. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It is very evident the House wishes to dispatch pending business; and I know it will be the desire of the committee to do so.

Mr. BACON. I am in entire accord with that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LOZIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few observations with reference to this particular bill and the amounts available under it, calling attention to some figures that I feel will be of interest to the Committee.

Under this bill we carry for the State Department, $10,999,268. Under the blind Budget, which comes out of the $3,300,000,000 which was appropriated last June, as near as I can figure, about two and a half million dollars will be available. This makes available for the State Department a total of $13,499,268 for 1935, as against appropriations carried by this bill last year of $12,248,719, and against amounts available under permission of the Director of the Budget of $11,189,598. That means that with this bill and with amounts that have been allotted, which probably will be available for expenditure in the fiscal year 1935, there will be more money by approximately $2,000,000 available to the State Department than was available this year.

In the Commerce Department I have divided the allotment between the years 1934 and 1935 to the best of my ability, and according to this I find that for the Coast and Geodetic Survey there will probably be available from allotments $2,925,000, for the Bureau of Fisheries approximately $146,300, and for the Bureau of Light Houses approximately $4,000,000, or a total from allotments of $7,171,000. The appropriation carried in the bill is $32,240,321, and with the allotment that probably will be available for this period of $7,171,300 this will make a total available of $39,411,621. This compares with amounts available under the permission of the Director of the Budget for the fiscal year 1934 of $29,044,266, as against appropriations of $36,911,571. In other words, the amount available is going to be almost $10,000,000 more than it was this current year.

The Labor Department has allotments from the P.W.A. and the C.W.A. which will make available in 1935 $1,000,000, according to the best estimates that I can make from the information that I can get.

The appropriations call for $11,920,805. This makes available altogether $12,920,805. Frankly, in this bill there is less available than there was this year unless other allotments are made by the P.W.A. to the Labor Department, because, as near as I can figure, there was $3,500,000 allocated to the Labor Department for employment agencies. This will show a slight reduction of approximately $1,000,000.

The Justice Department gets an appropriation of $28,506,878 in this bill and the allotments which will be usable from Public Works, insofar as they are known now, will be approximately $250,000, according to the best estimate I can make. So that this Department will show a decrease of approximately $6,000,000. This decrease, however, is almost entirely in the Bureau of Prohibition, and this will have to be taken care of in the Treasury Department under a supplemental estimate and under the Bureau of Internal Revenue; so that when we get through with the whole picture in connection with these four Departments, in my opinion, the amounts available to the four Departments to spend, both in the regular appropriations that we make here and in the special appropriations out of the $3,300,000,000 fund where Congress does not make the appropriations but a bureau of Cabinet officers make them, we will probably have available six or seven million dollars more in 1935 than there was in 1934. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, may I say at this time it is the hope of the committee that we may perhaps finish this bill today, because, so far as I know, there are but few controversial items in the bill, and I doubt whether discussion will be very extended on these items. I know the committee would be glad to cooperate with the House in the hope that the bill can be passed this evening so that the House may recess until Monday, as indicated by the majority leader [Mr. BYRNS].

Supplementing the brief statement I made yesterday, in which I inserted a table showing the savings in 1935 under the 1934 appropriation, I ask permission to insert a further table which will give, I think, an interesting picture to the House of just what the committee has done in effecting savings in these four Departments with the very hearty cooperation of the heads of the Departments since the fiscal year 1932.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The table is as follows:

State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor

	Appropriations, 1932	Estimates, 1933	Appropriations, 1933	Estimates, 1934
State	$17,522,323	$16,683,071	$13,663,792	$12,977,626
Justice	51,239,201	53,900,364	45,996,000	44,282,487
Commerce	54,332,230	44,716,304	39,711,408	37,917,323
Labor	14,330,200	14,484,397	12,920,770	13,389,345
Total	137,423,954	129,784,136	112,291,970	108,566,781

	Appropriations, 1934	Estimates, 1935	Appropriations, 1935
State	$12,248,719	$18,006,098	$10,999,268
Justice	41,231,835	31,165,804	28,506,878
Commerce	36,911,575	32,282,406	32,240,321
Labor	14,177,365	14,044,145	11,920,805
Total	104,569,494	95,498,453	83,966,272

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, this table, it will be noted, shows that for the fiscal year 1932 there was appropriated for these four Departments $137,423,952; for the fiscal year 1933 only $112,291,970; and for the present fiscal year, ending July 1, 1934, $104,569,494. The committee recommends for these four Departments for the fiscal year 1935, $83,966,272.

As I pointed out yesterday, the earnings it is estimated these four Departments will return to the Federal Treasury next year will approximate $30,000,000, which will be more than 33⅓ percent of the total amount appropriated for these four Departments for the next fiscal year, which will commence on July 1, 1934. The House will find in the statement submitted by the gentleman from New York and myself on yesterday large savings in the several departments, and I wish to supplement what was said in reference to the large savings resulting from the consolidation of the Bureau of Naturalization and Immigration and from the transfer to the Bureau of Investigation of some of the activities of the Bureau of Accounts.

The State and Commerce Departments, through a cooperative agreement under the direction of the President, have effected very large and substantial savings in the Foreign Service. The State Department has now 65 fewer Foreign Service officers than they had in 1930, and the Department of Commerce have reduced their Foreign Service personnel by 85. The State Department, under this agreement, will discharge the duties of the 85 officials separated from the service of the Commerce Department.

Another very gratifying saving may be noted in the Department of Justice.

There was transferred to the Department of Justice during the present fiscal year from the Veterans' Bureau what is known as the veterans' insurance litigation, for which there was appropriated, in 1934, $585,552; from the Treasury Department a part of its revenue investigation, carrying an appropriation for the fiscal year 1934 of $204,848; from the State Department, the United States court in China, carrying an appropriation of $38,674; from the War Department, the district court in Panama, carrying an appropriation of $42,759, making a total of $936,960. The Department of Justice has not only absorbed all of this $936,960 expense formerly carried under the Departments named but shows a saving, if the estimates our committee recommends for the fiscal year 1935 are approved, of about $13,000,000, from which should be deducted, as stated on yesterday, $1,750,000 which must later be carried for the alcoholic beverage unit in either the Justice or Treasury Department.

The committee, with the very fine aid of the Attorney General and the Secretary of Commerce, have effected in these two Departments some very large savings, which the Attorney General well characterized "as a real achievement."

I invite the careful reading of the statements made by the four distinguished Cabinet officers who are the administrative directors of these important Departments, and you will find that with their cooperation this committee is endeavoring to definitely fix the appropriations for these Departments on a basis that will permit them to efficiently function and enable Congress to accurately estimate what revenues must be raised to balance their regular annual Budget needs. [Applause.]

An interesting statement in the hearing by the Director of the Probation Bureau shows that as late as 1930 we only had 4,000 on probation. This number has now been increased to 30,000. This represents savings mounting well into the millions. We have carried some increase for this service to provide additional probation officers.

I ask permission, Mr. Chairman, to insert a few short letters from some of the Federal judges emphasizing the great value of the probation service.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will not detain you further, because when the bill is read by paragraphs, if there are any questions which Members may desire to ask, the committee will endeavor to answer such inquiries. While the committee desires to hasten the consideration of this bill, yet we invite full discussion on every item of appropriation that the Members of the House may entertain doubts about. [Applause.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I suggest reading the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: For Secretary of State; under Secretary of State, $10,000; and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including temporary employees, and not to exceed $6,500 for employees engaged on piecework at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of State; $1,528,200: Provided, That in expending appropriations or portions of appropriations, contained in this act, for the payment for personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, with the exception of the four Assistant Secretaries of State and the legal adviser of the Department of State, the Assistant to the Attorney General, the Assistant Solicitor General, and six Assistant Attorneys General, the Assistant Secretaries of Commerce, the Assistant Secretary and the Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act, as amended: Provided, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation was fixed as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act, (3) to require the reduction in salary of any person who is transferred from one position to another position in the same or different grade in the same or a different bureau, office, or other appropriation unit, or (4) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and is specifically authorized by other law, or (5) to reduce the compensation of any person in a grade in which only one position is allocated.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I trust that our Government, in making its special commercial relations with various nations, will not neglect a clear understanding with our great friend, Spain.

The balance of trade is already in our favor. Recently, in making up our wine quota, we discriminated against Spain in favor of France. Spain never borrowed any money from us and probably never will. If she ever does, no doubt she will pay it back according to the agreement. The word of a Spanish don is better than a French bond.

American citizens have tremendous investments in Spain, which are paying them handsome dividends. Political campaigns in Spain have been waged on the subject of these investments. The claim is made that the old Spanish Government was entirely too generous to our capitalists. The settlement of a question such as this is not aided in any way by our failure, when we have a chance, to give Spain fair treatment with other nations.

Wine shipped from Germany and England and called "Spanish" wine has been charged up to the meager quota of Spain. This is a plain swindle. The American Government at least should see that what has been allotted to Spain cannot be imposed upon by deadbeats from other countries. Spain has already announced the adoption of a contingent system and the determination to buy from those who buy from them.

The deficit in trade from which Spain now suffers in comparison with 1929 shows that 50 percent is due to the United States. The balance on our side runs to the tune of $16,000,000. Spain buys $27,000,000 from us and we buy $11,000,000 from her. Our recent arrangement with France gives an advantage to France over Spain of 4 to 1 in our trade.

The new Republic of Spain has proven its ability to stand strong against the storms that are testing the world. Democracy is on trial. Nation after nation has turned to dictatorship and despotism to bring order out of chaos. Spain turned from monarchy to democracy in its hour of suffering, and stands today as the greatest proof that a new democracy is a safe government for a sorely tried people. Our brilliant officials in the State Department, in scanning the problems of the world, representing as they do the greatest Republic of all, should, in my judgment, consult with the officials of Spain with an earnest desire to give Spain generous and fair treatment as a measure of justice to an old friend and as a tribute of confidence to a new Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. DELANEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I yield.

Mr. DELANEY. The gentleman spoke about $27,000,000 that we buy from Spain, and we sell them $11,000,000. Is that correct or the reverse?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. It is the reverse.

Mr. DELANEY. Are they meeting their obligations as they come due?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman tell the House what are the outstanding Spanish vintages that he would recommend?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I do not want to do that for fear I might induce the House to drink what is known in Europe as "liquid paradise." After what we have been drinking during prohibition, I do not think it is good for our health to scale the heights so quickly.

Mr. BOYLAN. I agree with the gentleman, but will the gentleman tell us what vintages we should purchase?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Realizing as I do that it would not be proper to do that publicly, I might do it privately in the cloakroom. I insist again that many men could not stand the purity of the Spanish wines after having drunk bathtub gin. [Laughter.]

Mr. DELANEY. Cannot the gentleman tell us what brand of Spanish wine he would recommend?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I will ask the gentleman to make that inquiry of our very dear friend, Ambassador Claude Bowers, our scholarly representative in Spain. He is conducting a series of scientific experiments which keep him up late at night. I am sure he will be glad to give the gentleman from Brooklyn the result of his studies.

Mr. BOYLAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has consulted the connoisseur from Chicago as to the quality of these wines?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I do not believe that the connoisseur from Chicago is so good a connoisseur of those wines as anyone who lives on Eleventh Avenue, New York. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

PASSPORT AGENCIES

For salaries and expenses of maintenance, and traveling expenses not to exceed $500, for not to exceed five passport agencies, $46,665.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 15, after the word "Poland", insert the word "Russia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ambassadors Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Peru, Poland, Spain, and Turkey, at $17,500 each; in all, not to exceed $562,500.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 8, after the word "exceed", strike out "$562,500" and insert "$580,000."

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, this provides for the salary for the Ambassador to Russia.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the traveling expenses of Diplomatic, Consular, and Foreign Service officers, and other employees of the Foreign Service, including Foreign Service inspectors and, under such regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, of their families and expenses of transportation of effects, in going to and returning from their posts, including not to exceed $25,000 incurred in connection with leaves of absence, and of the preparation and transportation of the remains of those officers and said employees of the Foreign Service, who have died or may die abroad or in transit while in the discharge of their official duties, to their former homes in this country or to a place not more distant for interment and for the ordinary expenses of such interment, and also for payment under the provisions of section 1749 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 22, sec. 130) of allowances to the widows or heirs at law of Diplomatic, Consular, and Foreign Service officers of the United States dying in foreign countries in the discharge of their duties, $409,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available also for the authorized subsistence expenses of Consular and Foreign Service officers while on temporary detail under commission.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama: Page 8, line 2, strike out "$409,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$449,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, heat, fuel, and light for the Foreign Service for offices and grounds, and, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 5, sec. 118a), for living quarters and not to exceed $439,000 for allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, $1,181,955: Provided, That payment for rent may be made in advance: Provided further, That the Secretary of State may enter into leases for such offices, grounds, and living quarters for periods not exceeding 10 years: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light in an amount exceeding $720 for any ambassador, minister, or Foreign Service officer: Provided further, That under this appropriation and the appropriation herein for "Contingent expenses, Foreign Service", not more than $3,000 shall be expended for custodial service, heat, fuel, and light in any Government-owned building used for residence or residence and office purposes for an ambassador or minister, and not more than $1,700 for such purposes in the case of any other Foreign Service officer, except that at any post at which the expenditures for such purposes for the fiscal year 1933 were in excess of the limitation of $3,000 in this last proviso in the case of an ambassador or minister there may be expended during the fiscal year 1935 an amount equal to the sum so authorized to be expended during the fiscal year 1933, but in no event to exceed $5,000; and during the incumbency of a chargé d'affaires the limitation on such expenditures shall be the same as for the occupancy of the principal officer.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 13, strike out "$1,181,955" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,271,955."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understand that the committee had under consideration an increase in the appropriation amounting to $7,000,000 to take care of the losses in salary of the Foreign Service personnel due to the appreciation of various currencies in foreign countries. I know the suffering has been very great, there have been suicides and deaths, and in several instances our Foreign Service personnel have had to accept hospitalization as charity patients in foreign countries. It is outrageous that an American citizen should be obliged to accept charity from a foreign country, and we should feel the humiliation of it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The information before the committee supports the views just stated by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts. It was the purpose of the committee to recommend the Budget estimate submitted by the President, but we later found that the legislative committee desired to handle the matter, and, since it was subject to a point of order, it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and is not carried in this bill. We are, however, providing for clerks and other expenses, including the salary for the Ambassador to Russia, and these amendments the committee are now offering are Budget estimates covering such amounts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very glad to get that information. I rejoice that the Foreign Affairs Committee, of which I am a member, will holding hearings with a view to report out a bill to take care of this matter. I was informed only an hour ago that an extremely able secretary of one of our legations was offered a very fine consulship, but he was obliged to decline owing to the fact that owing to cuts in salary and losses due to the appreciation of currencies in foreign countries he could not afford to accept. The Foreign Service needs him greatly in this consulate. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. A Foreign Service officer stationed in Canada has written to me as follows:

Hon. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C., U.S.A.:

I am enclosing the material for which you asked me regarding the present situation of our Government employees in Canada, more particularly at Ottawa. The first of these is a letter to Mr. Carr transmitting a copy of a letter which I addressed to the Minister, who was then in Washington. The second is the letter just mentioned which I wrote to the Minister, attached to which is a graph. This graph shows in red the cost of living in Canada in American dollars, the cost of living in the United States in American dollars, and the average of the salaries and allowances of our Government's personnel in Ottawa, officers and clerks, excluding, however, the custodial employees of the United States Government Building and the customs officer at the railroad station. The graph is made on the assumption that the average of the salaries and allowances of our officers is adequate to meet all the expenditures to which they are put under a normal cost of living. This premise itself is probably an understatement of the situation, since I believe that there are a number of Foreign Service officers at least who, even in normal times, found that their salaries and allowances did not cover the expenditures required. It will be observed that from November 1931 to July 1932, figuring on this basis, because of a depreciation in the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar during that period the cost-of-living line fell below the salary-and-allowance line. The cost of living here in American dollars, however, as will be seen on this graph, immediately thereafter began to react upward. It dropped again slightly from January to April 1933, and since then has continued rising rapidly.

I should also like to point out that the Canadian cost-of-living line is figured on the basis of the essentials for the average employee of the Government. It does not take into account any luxuries or make any allowance for things which are taken for granted in most budgets, such as life-insurance premiums, savings accounts, illness, any recreation, expenses on leave, transportation on leave for the purpose of returning to the United States, or any other items of this character. In particular, it does not take into account in any way the expenses incidental to representation of the Government which fall upon the minister and senior officers of the legation and consulate general at this post. You will recall that the representation allowances once instituted by Congress have since completely disappeared at this post as the result of governmental economy. At the same time it is quite impossible for the responsible senior officers of the Government at this post adequately to perform their duties without some expenditures for this purpose.

Even on this extremely conservative basis you will see that our average employees at this post are placed in a situation which quite precludes them from making both ends meet. A further document which I am sending you is a study case by case of the situation in which the custodial employees of our Government building find themselves. It is both pathetic and deeply disturbing to see American citizens employed by the United States Government abroad obliged to have recourse to the relief agencies of the Canadian Government and people in order to exist, and to see that they and their children, even in spite of this charitable assistance and such assistance as other members of the Government staff have been able to supply privately, are obliged to live in conditions of privation and under nourishment. In some cases it has been possible to get medical assistance for these people as charity cases. In too many cases the parents and children have had their healths impaired because it has been necessary to neglect the most elementary and essential medical assistance.

I may add that I have brought this situation repeatedly to the Department's attention, but that they are helpless in the absence of sufficient appropriation upon which to draw for relief. This building is understaffed, and these same employees are required to work long overtime hours to maintain our Government building at a minimum of proper upkeep. Owing to lack of appropriation, it has not been possible for the Department to authorize the employment of sufficient personnel.

Of course, what I have said deals only with Ottawa. The situation in our consulates general and consulates throughout Canada will be found to be similar, however. You would be interested, I believe, in a report on this subject submitted by the American consul general at Montreal to the Department, and I think if you will telephone Mr. Carr's office they will be glad to obtain a copy for you.

I wish it could be made clear when the question of appropriations comes up that the officers of the Foreign Service are devoting a lifelong service to the Government in just the same way and quite as fully as the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. The risks of those who serve in unhealthy posts, often under the most trying conditions, are more than comparable to the peacetime risks of the services which I have mentioned. You will find on the rolls of the Foreign Service many officers who had their full share of war-time risks, either because they were at that time incorporated in the military forces or because they served in areas where war-time conditions prevailed and their duties caused them to incur particular risks.

In the entrance hall to the State, War, and Navy Building you will find a tablet, recently erected, which contains the names of a large number of Foreign Service officers who lost their lives at their posts in the United States Foreign Service. I believe that if you ask Mr. A. E. Ingram, editor of the Foreign Service Journal, he will be glad to give you this list, with a brief description of how these men died in the performance of their duties.

Under these circumstances it seems to me only fair that restoration of promotions and any other exception from the Economy Act made in favor of the Army and Navy should also cover the United States Foreign Service. Furthermore, it seems to me that it is not equitable, nor in the long run of any advantage to our Government, that a 15-percent or a 10-percent pay cut, based primarily on the cost of living in the United States, should be imposed upon those employees of the Government abroad whose living conditions are necessarily predicated on the cost of living in a particular country in which they serve as well as on the particular duties entrusted to them in those countries.

[Copy of statement sent to State Department]

OTTAWA, CANADA, December 12, 1933.

The Honorable WARREN D. ROBBINS,
Care of Department of State,
Washington, D.C., U.S.A.

DEAR WARREN: I enclose a graph which we have prepared to show the course of the cost of living in Canada (red line), the cost of living in the United States (black line), and the average salary and allowances of our clerks and officers at Ottawa (blue line) from the 1st of July 1931 to the 1st of January 1934.

As you will see from this line, our cuts in salary and allowance have, with the exception of the year 1932, provided us with funds insufficient to meet the current cost of living here. Averaging out the salary and allowances and the cost of living in Ottawa, we have had no more than just enough to get along for the entire period covered without taking account of any extraordinary expenditures or of the necessity for representation which exists at this post as it does at many other posts. When we come to the middle of 1933, however, we find, as you will see from the graph, that our salary and allowances, particularly because of cuts in the latter, have so decreased that we are quite unable to meet the increased cost of living in Canada.

In this connection I may point out that the cost-of-living line does not include anything but essentials to the cost of living. Some of the things which are taken for granted in most budgets, such as life-insurance premiums, a small amount of saving against illness, etc., are quite impossible to the average employee of our Government in Canada at this moment. A considerable portion of the amounts used for rent, heat, and light have to come from the officer's salary instead of from the allowances established for that purpose. I may mention that the average allowance for rent, heat, and light each month is $29.26 at the present time, whereas the average expenditure for this purpose is $106.17 at the present time. In other words, the allowance pays 27.6 percent only of the amount which has to be expended, and the rest must come out of the officer's salary at the sacrifice of part of some other items of that standard of living which we expect our Government employees abroad to maintain not only in their own interest but in that of the Government. I may add that rents here are high and that conditions require a much greater proportional expenditure for heat than would be the case in Washington. It is about 14° below zero today, but many of our employees have as yet been unable to buy fuel for the coming month when the temperature usually goes to as low as 25° or 30° below zero. What are they to do? Many of the custodial employees must choose between buying food or buying fuel.

In figuring the percentage of allowances to actual expenditures and in figuring the salary and allowance line on the enclosed graph, the salaries, allowances, and expenditures of both representatives of the State and Commerce Departments have been included. The graph and remarks in this letter apply equally to the status of officials of the State and Commerce Departments.

At the moment, as the graph will show, the average amount received as compensation and allowance of United States Government employees at Ottawa is 23.5 less than what must necessarily be expended to meet current living costs here. The Government employees here have no funds for meeting this deficit. There is only one way in which many of them could possibly meet it, and that is to borrow money in the hope of ultimate restoration of compensation and allowance to meet the situation. Some have borrowed money; others have not been able to do so. The need for action is very urgent. As the salaries cannot be increased above statutory limits, an increase in the allowances for rent, heat, and light and the reestablishment of post allowances are urgently requested. In order to meet the amount required for rent, heat, and light there should be an average increase in our rent, heat, and light allowance of 260.5 percent. In order to meet the deficit which would still remain to come up to the cost of living an average post allowance of 11 percent of each person's statutory salary should be reestablished.

We have not included in our graph the salaries or the allowances to the custodial employees inasmuch as the proportion of rent, heat, and light covered by their allowances is so extremely small that it would tend to lower the average out of proportion to the amounts paid officers and clerks. It would seem that it would be preferable to increase the existing allowances for rent, light, and heat of the custodial staff to the amounts which they actually pay for rent, heat, and light in each individual case. I suggest that the amounts be so increased and that they be given 11 percent of their salary as an increase for post allowance to cover other items of the higher cost of living. I realize that there may be no legal basis for giving Government allowances to these, or to some other United States Government employees abroad, but perhaps this might be remedied in the phraseology used in the appropriating act or in a special act if that is necessary. Of course this applies only to American citizens.

While the enclosed diagram applies only to Ottawa, I wish to make it clear that these conditions apply throughout Canada, and in many cities they may be even worse than they are here. In any case I doubt whether anywhere they can be said to be materially better.

CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH THE CUSTODIAL EMPLOYEES OF THE AMERICAN LEGATION IN OTTAWA ARE LIVING

———'s salary, $138.54 per month. Rent, light, and heat allowance, $19.12 per month. Total compensation received, $157.66 per month. This family has no other income.

Family: Wife, no children.

Expenses: Rent, $50 per month; light, $3.25 per month; telephone, $3.10 per month; food, $50 per month; sundries, $50 per month. Total living expenses, exclusive of clothes, $156.35. There is nothing left for clothes, recreation, or any other than the absolute necessities of life. The item of sundries includes insurance, transporation to and from work, and other miscellaneous minor necessities.

This family came to Ottawa in June 1933 and had been accustomed to a somewhat larger salary and living under moderate living conditions in ——. Even during the boom years of 1928 and 1929 living conditions in —— were so much less expensive than they are now in Ottawa that they were able to live and dress comfortably, enjoy moderate recreations and entertainment of friends, and save an average of $40 per month.

Upon coming to Ottawa they had a savings account of approximately $500. In September 1933, after they had been in Ottawa for 3 months, Mrs. —— had a serious illness, which necessitated her remaining in an Ottawa hospital for a period of 2 weeks. This illness cost the family $300. They have used the remainder of their former savings account to buy a few clothes and other necessities of life which could not be had from the husband's salary. They now have absolutely no savings at all, and if they should have another case of sickness they would be in very difficult circumstances.

It should be understood that this family is not extravagant in any way. They are living very modestly in every respect and are careful to make sure that every dollar expended gains for them the very maximum that can be had of the absolute essentials of life.

———'s salary, $81.50 per month. Rent, light, and heat allowance, $19.12 per month. Total compensation received, $100.62 per month. This family has no other income.

Family: Wife; boy, age 14; girl, age 13; girl, age 9; girl, age 4; girl, age 2. Six dependents.

Living expenses: Rent $25 per month; light, $2.50 per month; heat, $12 per month; bread, $10 per month; milk, $13 per month; meat, $7 per month; other essential food, $30 per month; which is a total of $60 per month for food, and a total of $99.50 which must be expended each month for food and shelter alone. There is, therefore, only $1.12 left to buy clothing and other essentials for the entire family.

It has been necessary for this family to arrange to buy a few clothes for the father and older children, who must be out of doors part of the time during the winter, on an installment basis. This past fall a total of $76 worth of the most essential items of clothing for the family was purchased in this manner; $10 was paid at the time of purchase and $6 is paid each month on this debt. The payment each month for these clothes must be taken from the allotment for food, even though they are not able to buy sufficient food for this large family with the money remaining.

In April 1933 ———, age 13, was struck in the back of the head with a baseball while playing with neighborhood children. Her case was very serious, and necessitated her being taken to an Ottawa hospital for an operation. After this child had been in the hospital for 4 weeks and a hospital bill of $52, which the family could not possibly pay, was pending, the father went before the local welfare bureau, and in view of his very low salary, the bureau arranged for the hospital charges to be annulled and the case treated as a charity case.

At this time and until August 15, 1933, ——— was employed by the Legation at Ottawa as janitor at a salary of $67.23 per month, and was allowed $4.25 per month for rent, light, and heat. His work had proved so very satisfactory and he was obviously so well suited for the post, that he was transferred to the position of messenger at the legation at the higher compensation mentioned above, $100.62 per month, in August 1933, after this post had become vacant.

When ———'s extremely low salary and his dire necessity in order to care for his large family was brought to the attention of the local welfare bureau in May 1933, they allowed him $41 for food and clothing during the last 2 weeks of May in addition to taking care of his hospital and doctor's bills.

It is pointed out that due to his extremely low salary and the high cost of living in Ottawa it was necessary for this American citizen employed by the United States Government to appeal to the local welfare bureau, a charitable organization maintained by the governments of the city of Ottawa and the Province of Ontario, and the plight of this American citizen was recognized and he was given aid.

In addition to his salary received from the United States Government he has borrowed money from friends and sympathizers to the extent of $400 with which to obtain the minimum necessities of existence. He now owes $400 which it is practically impossible for him to pay even in very small installments.

In October 1933 he became affected with an abscess on his leg. He at first attempted to treat this abscess at home, but finally, when it became so serious that he could no longer walk, a doctor was called and he was removed to an Ottawa hospital for an operation. This sickness cost him $35 for hospital and $20 for doctor, which he also owes and cannot pay.

In December 1933, as a result of exposure from his house not being properly heated, the child, age 2, being improperly clothed, was stricken with pneumonia. Fortunately the child recovered. The cost, however, was $12 for a doctor and $10 for medicine, both of which debts are owed and cannot be paid.

———'s salary, $65.20 per month. Rent, light, and heat allowance, $2.97 per month. Total compensation received, $68.17 per month. No other income.

Family: Boy, age 9; boy, age 5. Is a widow.

Expenses: Rent, including light and heat, $30 per month; food, $20 per month; sundries, including laundry, school books for older boy, and insurance, $10 per month. A net balance of $8.17 per month is left for clothes and all other necessities of life. Has been fortunate in finding a home with her brother-in-law and his family, and she has, therefore, been able to reduce her expenses for food and shelter to the above figures. This arrangement also assists her very materially, since her sister-in-law is able to care for her children through the day while she is at work and she is saved the expense that would otherwise be involved in providing care for her children.

With two small children there is, of course, sickness and the resulting expense of doctors and medicines. The younger boy, age 5, has a weak heart, and the mother has found it extremely difficult to manage so as to give him the care and proper food which he so urgently needs. She now owes an Ottawa physician $92 for medical attention to this child. She has no hopes of being able to pay this debt.

Moreover, the doctor has prescribed certain foods and medicines for this child which the mother is unable to buy for him. As a result the condition of the child's heart is growing worse.

———, salary $41.44 per month.

Since he is not engaged all of the time in his service to the Government, he has been able to occasionally earn a few dollars during the week by selling various goods in Ottawa. The money earned in this way has, however, even during his most fruitful canvasses, never amounted to more than $10 during any week, and often the expense of transportation in making these canvasses has been more than the amount earned.

Family: Wife, no children.

Expenses: Rent, including light and heat $16 per month. This provides only one room. Food $19 per month, $6 per month is paid to the department store in Ottawa as a payment on absolutely necessary clothing which has been purchased on the installment plan.

In October 1933 he accidentally broke his glasses while at work in the Government building. Although his sight was seriously hindered and his eyes were seriously affected as a result of going without his glasses, he was unable to have them repaired until January 1934 when he arranged to have them repaired by the department store and to pay the cost of these repairs along with the installments he is paying this firm for clothes purchased from them.

It is quite evident that the income which he receives is inadequate to provide food and shelter for any one person, much less a family of two. In their effort to make both ends meet this family have reduced their expenditures for all the necessities of life to the very minimum absolutely necessary to sustain life. If this is continued for any length of time there is no doubt but that the health of these two people will be very seriously impaired from a lack of proper food and their health will be ruined for life.

Both the husband's and wife's teeth are now in very bad condition and seriously in need of attention. It is, however, absolutely impossible for them to attempt to have their teeth cared for.

———, salary $70.12 per month. No other income.

Family: Wife and two children; girl, age 8, and girl, age 4.

Expenses: Rent including light and heat $12 per month (2 rooms), food $45 per month, sundries including school books for older child, transportation to and from work, and other minor necessities, $10 per month. This leaves a balance of $3.12 per month for clothes and all other necessities of life for the entire family.

This family has so far been fortunate in not having sickness and the resulting expense of doctor's and hospital bills. In spite of the fact that they have had freedom from all expense other than the mere necessities of life they are having serious difficulties in managing to make both ends meet.

———, salary, $24.44 per month. Rent, light, and heat allowance, $2.97 per month.

Family: Daughter, age 27; daughter (adopted), age 4. She is a widow.

Expenses: Rent, $23 per month (3 rooms); light, $1.50 per month; heat, $6 per month. A very minimum of $30 per month is needed to provide sufficient food to sustain life. There is never that much available, so the family eats what food they can buy, seldom having enough to satisfy the pangs of hunger.

Grown daughter is able to find temporary work part of the time and earns an average of $20 per month. Thus they manage to keep from starving.

Has been able to borrow a dollar or two at a time from friends and sympathizers with which to buy a little food at times when her condition became almost desperate, and she now owes $40 which has been obtained in this way. She has no hopes of repaying these debts.

———, salary, $25.50 per month. Since she does not work full time in the Government building, she is able to find part-time work elsewhere for which she is paid $30 per month.

Family: Had 7 children, of which 3 are now living with her, 1 having died January 6, 1934, with tuberculosis. The remaining children are—daughter, age 21; son, age 19; son, age 13. She is a widow.

Expenses: When the husband and father died in 1927 the family owned their home in Ottawa. Since that time the widow has been able to keep the home, although it recently became necessary for her to borrow $500, for which a mortgage was given on the home. In order to obtain the loan it was necessary to agree to pay 12 percent interest per annum. There is, therefore, $5 per month to be paid as interest on this mortgage and $4 per month to be paid for fire insurance on the home. For food $40 is spent per month and $6 for fuel. There is nothing left for clothing or any of the other necessities of life.

She has applied to the local welfare bureau, which is maintained by the governments of the city of Ottawa and the Province of Ontario, and has been provided with clothing for her family for the present winter.

As mentioned above, she lost a son, who had been confined to an Ottawa hospital for several months with tuberculosis, last Saturday. She also has another son, Sam, age 19, who has been confined to the hospital since November 1933. Since it was and still is impossible for her to pay the hospital and doctor's bills resulting from these illnesses, they have been treated as charity cases.

This pitiful condition of tuberculosis which has already resulted in the death of one son is largely due to improper food and the conditions under which it has been necessary for the family to live on their meager income.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of clerks in the Foreign Service, as provided in the act approved February 23, 1931 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 22, sec. 23a), including salaries during transit to and from homes in the United States upon the beginning and after termination of service, $1,953,000.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 24, strike out "$1,953,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,118,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, FOREIGN SERVICE

For stationery; blanks; record and other books; seals; presses; flags; signs; repairs, including minor alterations; repairs, supervisions, preservation, and maintenance of Government-owned diplomatic and consular properties in foreign countries, and properties acquired under the act approved May 7, 1926, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 22, secs. 291, 296), and including also custodial service, water, materials, supplies, tools, seeds, plants, shrubs, and similar objects; newspapers (foreign and domestic); freight; postage; telegrams; advertising; ice and drinking water for office purposes; hire of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and purchase, maintenance, operation, and hire of other passenger-carrying vehicles; uniforms; furniture, household furniture and furnishings, except as provided by the act of May 7, 1926, as amended for Government-owned or rented buildings when in the judgment of the Secretary of State it would be in the public interest to do so, not to exceed $75,000; typewriters and exchange of same; messenger service; operation, maintenance, and rental of launch for embassy in Turkey, not exceeding $3,500; compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomans, porters, interpreters, translators, Chinese writers, and supervisors of construction and compensation of agents and employees of and rent and other expenses for dispatch agencies at London, New York, San Francisco, Seattle, and New Orleans; traveling expenses, including attendance at trade and other conferences or congresses under orders of the Secretary of State as authorized by the act approved February 23, 1931 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 22, sec. 16); loss by exchange; payment in advance of telephone and other similar services and rent of dispatch agencies, expenses of vice consulates and consular agencies for any of the foregoing objects; cost, not exceeding $350 per annum each, of the tuition of Foreign Service officers assigned for the study of the languages of Asia and eastern Europe; and such other miscellaneous expenses as the President may deem necessary, $1,192,270: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for salaries or wages of persons not American citizens performing clerical services (except interpreters, translators, and messengers), whether officially designated as clerks or not, in any foreign mission.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Alabama a question. I have seen some reference in the newspapers to equalizing the exchange in currency between the dollar and the currency of foreign countries so far as it applies to the compensation of our diplomatic representatives abroad. Is there anything carried in the bill that contemplates that?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] asked that question a few moments ago. I stated to her that the President had submitted an estimate, which the committee tentatively approved. However, it was subject to a point of order; and since the legislative committee of the House, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, has that matter under consideration, it was left out of this bill. If that committee later reports a bill on the subject and Congress approves, appropriations so authorized will be carried in the deficiency bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman does not contemplate adding it in this bill in the Senate and bringing it back to the House?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I do not know what they contemplate doing in the Senate.

Mr. BRITTEN. Would that apply only to certain European countries, or would it apply to all our diplomatic representatives, wherever they may be?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The Budget estimate as submitted to us provided a fund to be expended under the direction of the President to care for the pay of our Foreign Service officials and employees because of losses suffered due to depreciation of our dollar in certain countries.

Mr. BRITTEN. I hope that when the matter is presented to the gentleman through his committee or otherwise he will oppose it. I do not think it is necessary.

I do not think it is fair to expect the Federal Treasury to compensate those men for some slight additional cost for things they may now require in foreign countries, because when the exchange goes the other way we do not reduce their salaries at all, and incidentally the dollar will buy more in nearly every country on earth than it will buy right here in Washington. That applies to foodstuffs, clothing, and everything necessary for life.

Mr. Chairman, if complaint is made by our foreign representatives that the purchasing power of the dollar is smaller than it was a year or two ago, and because of this fact their salaries should be increased, then by that same token we should also increase the salaries of every Federal employee in the United States, because his dollar certainly will not produce as much as the dollar of 2 years ago. If foodstuffs and clothing have gone up in price in the United States, that is never a signal for increasing Federal salaries. The young American diplomat and legation secretaries are very well paid in comparison with work of like character here, and there is no more reason for raising their salaries now than there would have been for reducing their salaries a year ago because the British pound sterling instead of exchanging at $5 was down to three dollars and a half.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. May I say that the matters to which the gentleman refers will have the consideration of the proper legislative committee of the House, and they will bring in such bill for the consideration of the House as the facts submitted may warrant at this time.

Mr. BRITTEN. There is one amendment I have always thought might reasonably be inserted in the State Department bill, and that is when an American diplomat, whether he be in Asia or Europe, begins to "hawf" and "lawf" and "cawf" and ape the British he ought to be brought home and kept here until he speaks the language as we speak it in the United States. [Applause.] My reason for that suggestion is that some years ago I was in Shanghai. I can understand how an American representative in China might finally talk a little like a Chinaman, because he is with them every day, and for weeks and months and years, and he might get a little accent that is Chinese. If he is in Germany for years, he might acquire a little of the German accent; but on this visit to Shanghai, China, there was a great big, raw-boned

Irishman sitting beside me at a luncheon given to the American Chamber of Commerce, and, of course, looking at this man I thought he was an American. It was an American Chamber of Commerce luncheon, and he said, "The 'lawst' time I saw you was", and he "hawfed" and "cawfed" around for a while, and I said, "I thought for a moment you were an American." "Oh", he said, "I am an 'Amer-r-r-i-can." "But", I said, "you talk so British." He said, "I have been here so long that perhaps I do talk 'Br-r-r-itish'." I said, "As far as I am concerned, when an American diplomat in China talks British and apes the British, he ought to be brought home and kept home until he talks the language as we talk it in the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Frequently you will find an American diplomat wearing a monocle and yellow neckties and blue spats and pink shirts. He does everything in his power to look and act and talk like a Britisher. My thought is that as soon as we observe anything like that, that man ought to be brought home; and if he apes the British again after a stay in America, he should be fired out of the service; because, after all, there is nothing so fine, nothing so strong, nothing so honorable as being a first-class American. There is no excuse for a man aping the British in China or aping the British in Germany. He might fall into the "hawf" and "cawf" stuff in London. There might be some excuse for him there, but certainly not in the other countries.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. May I interrupt to say that observations or impressions such as the gentleman is now giving expression to, gained, no doubt, from his extended travels, are always interesting to the House; and I feel sure that the legislative committee which has this matter in charge will be very glad to have the benefit of such information.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman from Alabama himself is a great traveler. I have met him in various world capitals, and I know he has observed the same things I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words in order to inquire if I understood the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] right in saying that certain money is to be put at the disposal of the President, subject to the Budget?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That was proposed in an estimate submitted by the President, but that has been stricken out, and it is not carried in this bill because it was subject to a point of order as drawn, and I understand the Committee on Foreign Affairs is now giving study to it and no doubt will report out a bill. If Congress passes the legislation proposed by the committee, the Appropriations Committee will consider appropriations to carry out any authorizations involved.

Mr. LUCE. I must have misunderstood the gentleman, but I thought the gentleman said that a certain sum was to be given to the President and distributed subject to the Budget, which I thought was a great novelty.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. No.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama: Page 10, line 12, after the words "office purposes", insert "purchase at not to exceed $750 for any one automobile, maintenance, operation, and".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama: Page 10, line 14, after the word "vehicles", insert the words "funds for establishment and maintenance of a commissary service."

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The addition of this language is intended to make it possible to establish and maintain a commissary service for the personnel in Moscow and for the personnel of such consulates as may be established outside of Moscow.

From the best information obtainable the committee felt it was essential that the United States should obtain and ship to Russia many foodstuffs and supplies of various kinds essential to the American personnel assigned there. It is proposed to advance from this appropriation allotted sums from time to time to an employee of the Government responsible under bond with which to purchase needed supplies for use of the personnel, which in turn would be sold at cost plus expenses to the personnel on assignment in Russia and reimburse the amount advanced. It is not contemplated that there would be any material permanent expense to the Government arising from this procedure.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. I wonder if the gentleman from Alabama has the figures available as to the cost of the different consuls, clerks, and attachés in the Foreign Service. Have figures as to the average cost been placed in the RECORD?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman will find that in the hearings. He will find the necessary appropriations in the bill, of course; but he will have to consult the hearings to get the salaries paid to the Foreign Service, because the pay of Foreign Service personnel is like that of Army officers; they fall in different classes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the chairman of the subcommittee insert these figures in the RECORD? It would be interesting for us to know just how much we are paying the classified employees in the Foreign Service and to know the average, contingent expenses for each of these classifications.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will be pleased to endeavor to get such information and insert it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama for the committee: On page 11, line 3, before the semicolon, insert the following language: "Including salaries during transit to and from their homes in the United States upon the beginning and after the termination of service in foreign countries."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama for the committee: On page 11, line 14, strike out the figures "$1,192,270" and insert the figures "$1,314,870."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is the additional $108,000 to take care of these translators' expenses?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. No.

Mr. McFARLANE. What is it for, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It has relation to additional other employees and expenses necessary to care for this service.

Mr. McFARLANE. May I ask the gentleman further whether this constitutes legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. No; I may say to the gentleman, it does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESCUE, RELIEF, AND PROTECTION OF AMERICAN SEAMEN

For relief, protection, and burial of American seamen in foreign countries, in the Panama Canal Zone, and in the Philippine Islands, and shipwrecked American seamen in the Territory of Alaska, in the Hawaiian Islands, in Puerto Rico, and in the Virgin Islands, and for expenses which may be incurred in the acknowledgment of the services of masters and crews of foreign vessels in rescuing American seamen or citizens from shipwreck or other catastrophe at sea, $6,000.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama for the committee: On page 12, line 5, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following proviso:

"Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation shall be available for making payment to steamship owners or operators for transporting a destitute or shipwrecked seaman if the last previous service of the destitute or shipwrecked seaman was on a vessel of such steamship owner or operator and was not terminated by desertion."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCIES ARISING IN THE DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, and to meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the Neutrality Act, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 31, sec. 107), $125,000.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama for the committee: Page 12, line 14, strike out "$125,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$175,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND CANADA AND ALASKA AND CANADA

To enable the President to perform the obligations of the United States under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain in respect of Canada, signed February 24, 1925; for salaries and expenses, including the salary of the commissioner and salaries of the necessary engineers, clerks, and other employees for duty at the seat of government and in the field; cost of office equipment and supplies; necessary traveling expenses; commutation of subsistence to employees while on field duty, not to exceed $4 per day each, but not to exceed $1.75 per day each when a member of a field party and subsisting in camp; for payment for timber necessarily cut in keeping the boundary line clear, not to exceed $500; and for all other necessary and reasonable expenses incurred by the United States in maintaining an effective demarcation of the international boundary line between the United States and Canada and Alaska and Canada under the terms of the treaty aforesaid, including the completion of such remaining work as may be required under the award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal and existing treaties between the United States and Great Britain, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State, $38,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Altogether there were considerable items added to the bill to cover the expense of the Embassy and Consular Service in Russia. I do not know whether I understood the figures correctly, but it seemed to me they aggregated something like $490,000.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think that is approximately correct.

Mr. TABER. Is not this a larger item than is asked for any other place?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; I think so.

Mr. TABER. Can the gentleman inform us why this is so?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The conditions there were so unusual that the Department found it absolutely essential to ask this estimated amount to meet the situation they found. It was absolutely necessary to rent buildings and put them in habitable condition; and the expense incident to the establishment of four consulates also had to be provided for.

Our committee was surprised at the large amount estimated to be required, but we were assured it was absolutely essential in order to provide habitable quarters at this time.

Mr. TABER. That means, then, that this will not be a recurring item?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I hope not.

Mr. TABER. Can the gentleman give us an idea of what the ordinary item for this Russian service will run?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The larger part of this item involves rentals, but I am not prepared now to advise the gentleman as to all items of expense in detail. Much of the expense represents an estimate.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee for information. I regret I was not present when he introduced the amendment to appropriate certain sums of money for renting embassy and consulate quarters in Russia. I would not have made a point of order against it, although it is obviously legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think the gentleman is wrong. The Senate has confirmed the nomination of the Ambassador to Russia. So we do not feel it was subject to a point of order.

Mr. FISH. Would it not be subject to a point of order as being new legislation in spite of the form it took?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Not in our opinion.

Mr. FISH. I am not aware of the fact that we had entered into any treaty with Soviet Russia. I would not have made a point of order against the amendment, as I appreciate the absolute need for quarters in view of the fact we have recognized Russia. There should be adequate quarters at Moscow, both for the Ambassador and for his staff. As the gentleman probably knows, living conditions in Moscow are somewhat difficult at the present time. I am primarily interested in determining whether this money is simply to rent old buildings or to build new buildings.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. This is not to build new buildings; only to put rented buildings in condition.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman, therefore, does not propose to include any appropriation in this bill for the construction of a new embassy?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. No.

Mr. FISH. I am in entire sympathy with the action of the gentleman in providing this sum of money for quarters for the new Ambassador and his staff. I looked with some little suspicion upon the appointment of Mr. Bullitt as Ambassador on account of his past connections with some of the previous Bolshevik governments. I may say to the gentleman and to the House that recently I had an interesting and lengthy interview with Ambassador Bullitt. I believe he is well qualified to represent the interests of our Government at Moscow; that he is probably better informed than any other American regarding Soviet Russia, and from what I learned recently I think he probably will be able to uphold and protect American interests as well as any other person that could be appointed. Therefore, I want to go on record as being in favor of the appropriation for renting adequate quarters for the Ambassador and his staff, but if the gentleman wants to have money appropriated for a new embassy I hope we will have warning in advance.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am in full sympathy with the statement made by the gentleman that the House should be informed and take definite action thereon before money is provided for the construction of any buildings in Russia.

This bill does not carry an appropriation for that purpose. I am very pleased to hear the statement of the gentleman in reference to Mr. Bullitt's splendid qualifications for this post. I have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Bullitt, but I know the gentleman from New York shares my feeling that the present Secretary of State, who served with such credit in this body and in the Senate, and who, as Secretary of State has rendered such signal service at the London and Montevideo conferences can be depended on to show the greatest care in the selection of all officials assigned to any positions in the Department, whether at home or abroad.

Mr. FISH. I have the highest respect, of course, for the Secretary of State. I made the statement about Mr. Bullitt because I originally disapproved of the nomination, but after an interview with him I feel that not only his knowledge of Russia will be helpful but I believe he will uphold our interests which are of prime importance, particularly if there is any difficulty between Russia and Japan. We must have an ambassador at Moscow who will serve notice upon the Soviet Government that no matter what happens between Japan and the Soviet Government the United States of America intends to keep its hands off, and does not want to become involved in any difficulties between these two Nations. I am inclined to believe that Ambassador Bullitt will represent to the Soviet Government that the United States has nothing to gain by war with Japan and will remain neutral in case of war between Japan and Soviet Russia.

Although I did not favor recognition of the Soviet Government, now that recognition has been granted, I trust there will be cordial and friendly relations between the two countries and believe that there will be unless the Communist International upsets the apple cart by interference with our domestic and internal affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses, including salaries of Commissioners and salaries of clerks and other employees appointed by the Commissioners on the part of the United States, with the approval solely of the Secretary of State; for necessary traveling expenses, and for expenses incident to holding hearings and conferences at such places in Canada and the United States as shall be determined by the Commission or by the American Commissioners to be necessary, including travel expense and compensation of necessary witnesses, making necessary transcript of testimony and proceedings; for cost of law books, books of reference and periodicals, office equipment and supplies; and for one half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada, and for other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, $28,000, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State: Provided, That traveling expenses of the Commissioners, Secretary, and necessary employees shall be allowed in accordance with the provisions of the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended (U.S.C., title 5, ch. 16).

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In the hearings Governor Stanley says that the Commissioners' basic salaries are the same. He was explaining the estimate. Am I correct that the basic salary of the Commissioners is $5,000 a year?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Five thousand dollars.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then, the salary has been reduced. I want to compliment the gentleman from Alabama that he has finally cut this down to $5,000 after the long fight he has had. It took a long time, but he finally succeeded, as he promised to do when the bill was pending in the House last June.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman from Missouri has rendered very valuable service to the committee in accomplishing this.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I felt that $10,000 for the services rendered was too much for this Government to pay.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. May I say the Commissioners have never drawn $10,000. They have never been paid exceeding $7,500. President Hoover did recommend and fix the salary at $10,000, but the committee was able to reduce it to $7,500, and with the assistance of the gentleman and others the salary has now been reduced to $5,000.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses: For stationery, furniture and repairs, floor coverings not exceeding $1,500, file holders and cases; miscellaneous expenditures, including telegraphing and telephones, postage, labor, typewriters and adding machines and the exchange thereof and repairs thereto, street-car fares not exceeding $300, newspapers, press clippings, and other necessaries ordered by the Attorney General; official transportation, including the repair, maintenance, and operation of 6 motor-driven passenger cars, 1 for the Attorney General, 2 for general use of the Department, 2 for the Division of Investigation for investigative work, delivery truck, and motorcycle, to be used only for official purposes, and purchase and repair of bicycles, $85,000: Provided, That this appropriation may be reimbursed for expenditures in connection with cars herein authorized for the Division of Investigation from the appropriation for the expenses of said Division when approved in writing by the Attorney General.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama for the committee: On page 20, line 5, strike out the word "six" and insert the word "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; the acquisition, collection, classification, and preservation of identification and other records and their exchange with the duly authorized officials of the Federal Government, of States, cities, and other institutions; for investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks of the United States courts and Territorial courts, probation officers, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Division of Investigation at any time; and also, when requested by the presiding judge, the official acts, records, and accounts of referees and trustees of such courts; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice and the Department of State as may be directed by the Attorney General; hire, maintenance, upkeep, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary; for copying in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, reports of examiners at folio rates; firearms and ammunition, such stationery, supplies, and equipment for use at the seat of government or elsewhere as the Attorney General may direct, including not to exceed $13,000 for taxicab hire to be used exclusively for the purposes set forth in this paragraph and to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of such division when authorized by the Attorney General; payment of rewards when specifically authorized by the Attorney General for information leading to the apprehension of fugitives from justice, and including not to exceed $520,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia; $2,800,000.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I should like to ask the chairman a question. We have heard a great deal about the war on crime that is being waged by the Attorney General. Has this committee considered, in any of its appropriations, funds for that particular purpose over and above the usual appropriations?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. We have provided in this bill sufficient funds, so the Attorney General feels, to enable him to carry on the work by the Department very effectively against this class of offenders.

Mr. KENNEY. Does the gentleman feel there has been any material increase in the appropriation because of that fact?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The sum total carried in this bill is less than last year, and this is partially due to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. We are carrying an additional sum for the employment of special counsel who may be assigned to important cases.

Mr. KENNEY. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that, and I should like to inquire of the gentleman if he can tell us conveniently, what the appropriation is or what moneys are included in the appropriation for the enforcement of the revenue laws as applied to the liquor traffic.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. May I say before answering that question, we have increased the amount for the Bureau of Investigation in a reasonable amount, and they have taken on some added duties at a substantial saving to the Government.

In reference to the last question we are carrying in this bill for the Alcoholic Beverage Unit only $225,000, which includes the 10-percent cut.

It may be informative to hear read the following excerpt from the committee's report:

Especial attention is called to the reduction of $1,756,630 in the paragraph of the bill entitled "Alcoholic Beverage Unit." This reduction represents the Budget estimate for the fiscal year 1935 for the field personnel of the alcoholic beverage unit, commonly known as its "investigation and enforcement agency."

After the repeal of the eighteenth amendment it was apparent that there was no existing law, other than United States statutes relating to the enforcement of the revenue laws, that could provide any semblance of adequate authority for the field personnel of the alcoholic beverage unit to function effectively and efficiently. In recognition of this fact the Treasury Department was asked, and has specially deputized, the field personnel of the beverage unit to act as agents of the Treasury Department in the enforcement of the revenue laws.

Adequate funds for this personnel to July next are carried in the Department of Justice appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1934 and the Treasury Department has recently had released to it by the Budget Director about $1,173,000 for the employment of additional Treasury field personnel.

The committee is convinced that the personnel charged with the duties of enforcing the revenue laws should be under one department, and from information submitted to it feels that such personnel should be in and directly under the Treasury Department.

Since the committee was further informed that this matter had only recently been brought to the President's attention and that he would very likely take definite action relative thereto at an early date, it was felt that no appropriation should be now carried in the appropriation bill for the Department of Justice for the field investigation work of this agency for the fiscal year 1935.

As soon as the President determines what Department this agency will serve under, adequate appropriations will be provided for the fiscal year 1935.

In a letter submitted by Mr. Hurley, the very efficient Director of the Alcoholic Beverage Unit, copy of which will be found in the hearings, the Webb-Kenyon Act, prohibiting interstate transportation of alcoholic beverages, and the REED amendment, prohibiting the use of the mails to advertise liquor in dry States, are shown to be wholly inadequate to cope with liquor violations at this time. In letters written to the committee, Mr. Hurley suggested the importance of some enabling legislation, which the committee at once referred to the Judiciary Committee of the House, and we have been assured by the chairman of that committee that the matters which Mr. Hurley, with the approval of the Attorney General, has called attention to will have immediate study and consideration by the Judiciary Committee. If approved, such legislation will be promptly reported.

This committee is thoroughly sympathetic to providing adequate funds to enforce the revenue laws and to prevent liquor importations into any State in violation of the laws of such State, and it is our hope that legislation looking to the better enforcement of all such violations may be favorably reported and passed at this session of Congress.

It may not be out of place to say here that it is the feeling of the committee that no exceedingly large appropriation should be required effectively to enforce the revenue laws and to prevent the unlawful importation of liquors into dry territory if the enabling legislation, which the Department of Justice has recommended, is passed.

This thought is based on the assumption that in both dry and wet States there will be a healthy public sentiment to support State, county, and city officials in the detection and prosecution of all violations of State liquor laws. If this assumption is well founded, the State enforcement officers will no doubt cooperate fully and willingly with Federal officers in the detection and prosecution of all acts prohibited by Federal statutes, because, in the main, State violations are always involved in Federal violations.

The committee has approved for the alcoholic beverage unit an appropriation of $225,000, which we estimate will be sufficient to care for the general duties imposed on the unit other than the expenses incident to the maintenance of its field personnel. This is amply sufficient to care for the salary roll of the tax and penalty section.

Mr. KENNEY. So that all of the money estimated to investigate and enforce the revenue laws applying to liquor should not exceed in the neighborhood of $2,000,000?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The committee does not favor an excessive appropriation, and the reasons therefor are set out in that part of the committee's report which I have just read.

Mr. KENNEY. I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alcoholic Beverage Unit: For salaries and expenses to enforce and administer the twenty-first amendment to the Constitution and such laws as Congress may enact for the enforcement of such amendment, the act of March 1, 1913 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 27, sec. 122); the act of March 3, 1917 (U.S.C., title 18, secs. 341, 342; supp. VI, title 27, sec. 123), as amended by section 12 of the "Liquor Taxing Act of 1934", approved January 11, 1934; the act of August 8, 1890 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 27, sec. 121); section 238 of the Criminal Code (U.S.C., title 18, sec. 388); section 239 of the Criminal Code (U.S.C., title 18, sec. 389); section 240 of the Criminal Code (U.S.C., title 18, sec. 390); applicable provisions of the "Liquor Taxing Act of 1934", approved January 11, 1934; existing applicable provisions of the National Prohibition Act, as amended and supplemented (U.S.C., title 27), and internal revenue laws, pursuant to the act of March 3, 1927 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 5, secs. 281–281e), and the act of May 27, 1930 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 27, secs. 144–192); the review of all pending cases growing out of violations prior to December 5, 1934, of the National Prohibition Act, as amended and supplemented, and/or the internal revenue laws relating to alcoholic beverages, for the determination of the civil liability due the Government and proper expense of litigation in cases now pending and which may hereafter be constituted, for the purpose of recovering such civil liabilities; for the employment of executive officers, attorneys, investigators, and other personnel, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to be appointed as authorized by law; the securing of evidence of violations of the acts; the cost of chemical analysis made by other than employees of the United States and expenses incident to the giving of testimony in relation thereto; costs incurred in the seizure, storage, and disposition of liquor and property seized by virtue of the laws applicable to said seizure; costs incurred in the seizure, storage, and disposition of any vehicle and team or automobile, boat, air or water craft, or any other conveyance, seized pursuant to existing laws applicable to such seizures, where the proceeds of sale are insufficient therefor or where there is no sale; for rental of quarters; the purchase of stationery, supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, newspapers, periodicals, books, including law books and books of reference, and such other expenditures as may be necessary in the District of Columbia and the several field offices; in all, $225,000.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, it appears that the appropriations that are being made that have to do with the enforcement of the revenue laws as they apply to intoxicating beverages will not exceed $2,000,000. Years ago the amount appropriated for that purpose was as high as $11,000,000 a year. The reason is obvious.

The chairman of the committee a while ago gave it as his opinion that, repeal of the eighteenth amendment having been effected, the people of the country would cooperate and see to it that the liquor laws of the country were carried out. Now, my friends, the underlying reason for that is that we have legalized liquor and have given the people of this country what they want. We have met the wishes of the people.

But we have not gone far enough. We all know that there was a tremendous profit in bootlegging, and that the chief profit went into the hands of organized crime. The repeal of the eighteenth amendment has not done away with this gigantic combine. That is evident to us when we read the public press and realize that the Attorney General of this country is carrying on what he terms a war against crime. Money is needed to carry on any enterprise. Organized crime will survive as long as its rackets are profitable. The arrest of the racketeer will not suffice. There are arrests after arrests. The racket itself must be arrested.

We still have rackets, and they are supporting organized crime through the vast revenue they derive from policy tickets, ticket numbers, crooked games of dice, roulette wheels, slot machines, marked cards, and other forms of "come on" games of chance.

Great masses of our population are being fleeced by operators of the number racket who find their way into practically every village and city of the United States, luring the populace into participation in the dishonest enterprise from which they derive sustenance for organized crime.

They go about unmolested in large part. If necessary, they bribe public officials who are too often a part and parcel of the system. They openly flout and defy the law and encourage and effect disobedience to law on the part of many. It is no small game, the swag runs into the millions. Figures here and there would indicate hundreds of millions.

Then there is the slot-machine racket. The slot-machine business flourishes on every side. The profits are handsome. Many of the machines bring in a net profit of $100 a day. Some of the larger operators own no less than 5,000 machines. They place them in stores, back rooms, wherever they may. Gunmen aid in the collections. The toll runs into fabulous sums. It is divided, applied, invested for the upbuilding of vice and crime. It is a part of the lifeblood of organized crime. The machine is even cleverer than the number. I know of a man who spent $110 to collect a jack pot of $16, so great are the odds against the victims who play the machine. How shall we prevent this large-scale crooked gambling which perpetuates organized crime? How shall we undermine these and the other rackets which supply the ways and means of financing other and major crimes? How shall we win the war on crime?

We must offer something to take the place of the various rackets. It must be lawful. At the same time it must afford an opportunity to meet the unquenchable desire and urge to speculate in a self-respecting and wholesome manner. The one way, in my opinion, to cut off the chief remaining revenue of organized crime is to have the Government step in and give the plain citizen who wishes to spend a small sum of money for a chance to better his condition to do so under the law. It would hold for many potential happiness and independence that spell payment of debts, education of children, self-respect, and an opportunity to engage in a chosen business. It would tend to keep the country away from vicious and unlawful practices carried on for the benefit of law violators and the perpetration of crime itself. An approved lottery would supply a legal outlet for the speculative urge of many of our people. Then the dishonest racket would fall from its pinnacle. Organized crime would totter. If we cut off the source of revenue of organized crime, we will stop it.

Such a lottery would also attract thousands upon thousands of our citizens who patronize lotteries conducted under the auspices of other governments. Our people participate in such lotteries continually, secretly, illegally; but they do it. Purchasers of fraudulent securities might be content with patronizing an honest lottery controlled by our National Government. The lowly man might not be prone again to stake his all in stock of enterprises in which men in high places, as revelations show, gambled the money of men in low places.

Since our people, as is obvious, have been and still are contributing vast sums of money to give vent to their speculative urge, and unconsciously but in reality are keeping alive the forces of organized crime, we can do no better than to give them a self-respecting and wholesome chance to participate in aid of our country in a national lottery conducted under Government auspices. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Prison industries working capital fund: Prison industries working capital fund, 1934 and prior years, is reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1935, including payment of obligations incurred in prior years; and the said working capital fund and all receipts credited thereto may be used as a revolving fund for the fiscal year 1935 for the purposes authorized by the act entitled "An act to provide for the diversification of employment of Federal prisoners for their training and schooling in trades and occupations, and for other purposes", approved May 27, 1930 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 18, secs. 744d, 744e, 744f).

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOPER of Ohio: Page 37, line 14, after the figures "744f" in the parentheses, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the procurement and/or installment in any Federal correctional or penal institution of machinery for the manufacture of metal furniture and/or metal office equipment.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides that no part of the prison industries working capital fund can be used for the installation of machinery for the manufacture of metal office equipment in any of our Federal penal institutions. I offered this same amendment to the Justice Department appropriation bill in the last Congress when the measure was before the House for consideration, and on the final record roll-call vote on this proposition the amendment was adopted by 262 to 46 against. There is involved in this amendment the question of whether or not the Federal Government is going to embark on a policy of equipping our Federal penal institutions with machinery for the purpose of manufacturing metal office furniture. I believe it is important that prisoners should work in our penal institutions. They should be provided with some kind of labor. However, the installation of high-powered machinery in our Federal penal institutions will not solve the work problem for the inmates. I doubt if there is any industry in our country today that is more highly specialized and mechanized than that of the manufacture of metal office furniture. More than 90 percent of the work of this manufacture is by machine, and less than 10 percent of it is by hand. Today we find millions of American citizens unemployed, and this is no time for our Government to establish industries in our prisons, operated by prison labor, which will result in increasing the unemployment situation in our country. It will injure the industries and take business away from private capital and free labor.

A few days ago this House went on record on a similar proposition to this when the House unanimously adopted an amendment which provided that no articles manufactured in the Reedsville industry—that is, the industry that will be constructed at Reedsville, W.Va.—could be sold to the Post Office Department; but there is this difference between that proposition and the one that I have offered. The House went on record unanimously, I understand, not a vote against it, as prohibiting this factory, when it is built, at Reedsville, W.Va., from selling a certain product to the Post Office Department. That product will be manufactured by free labor, not prison labor; and if it is important that we in this House go on record now to stop the manufacture of articles made by free labor being sold to the Federal Government in competition with private industry and private business, how much more important is it that we stop criminals from manufacturing these articles coming into competition with private industry and free labor. But you say the prisoners have got to work. Certainly they should. I want them to work; but today, when we have millions and millions of law-abiding American citizens walking the streets of the country looking for a job, when we are paying over a billion dollars out of the Federal Treasury to help them support their families, this is no time to give prisoners a preference; and if I have to take my choice between giving a prisoner a job or giving it to a law-abiding American citizen back home who has to support a family, I am going to be on the side of the law-abiding American citizen. This amendment was adopted by more than 200 majority in the last Congress when we considered the Department of Justice appropriation bill, and I hope the House will sustain the amendment today and adopt it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I call to the attention of the gentleman from Ohio the bill H.R. 6974, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary and now on the calendar. I understand that an effort will be made to ask the Speaker to recognize some member of the Judiciary Committee to consider the bill under suspension. Has the gentleman read the bill?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I looked it over very hurriedly.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman is in accord with the general purposes of the legislation, is he not?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. If I have a minute, I will explain my position upon that. I never knew such a bill was introduced in Congress until I heard about it today. I called up the Committee on the Judiciary and asked for a copy of the hearings on the bill. They said that no hearings were held.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I ought to make a correction there I think. They said that no hearings were printed. I do not know that I object to the passage of this bill. It may be a good one. I do not know. We have not had time to study it. I have not heard from labor on this, and I do not know whether labor favors it or not. I have not heard from industry, and I do not know whether industry favors it or not. We will have to study this bill before we finally decide as to whether we want it. Suppose it does pass the House, we have no knowledge as to when it will become a law. We do not know when it will come to the House for consideration, and we do not know when it will pass the Senate and be signed by the President. If it does become a law, that will not interfere with the amendment that I have offered today, for the only thing the amendment does is to prohibit the Director of Federal Prisons from installing machinery in the Lewisburg Penitentiary for the manufacture of metal office equipment for the next year to come. That is all it does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is a fair statement by the gentleman with reference to his attitude on this bill, and, while I assume no bill should be considered until after it has passed, yet, to avoid any discussion of this matter, and to show that the committee handling this bill are willing to meet the gentleman half-way and to accept the gentleman's amendment with this language added: "Unless under the direction and with the approval of a prison industrial board authorized by this the Seventy-third Congress." If the gentleman will thus modify his amendment, I will accept it.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman state again what his amendment is?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. After the word "equipment", strike out the period, insert a comma, and add "unless under direction and with the approval of a prison industrial board authorized by this, the Seventy-third Congress."

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I do not think I want to accept that amendment until the prison industrial board has been created by law. It has not been created by law. The gentleman is asking me to accept an amendment which has not been considered in the House as yet; therefore it is not yet law.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That certainly protects the gentleman against what he fears may be done by the head of the Bureau of Prisons, and only permits this to be done in the event this Congress authorizes it to be done. That is why I felt it would be fair and probably acceptable to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. As I said, I do not feel like accepting that amendment as long as that bill has not been considered by the House.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio: Strike out the period after the word "equipment" and insert "unless under direction and with the approval of a prison industrial board authorized by this, the Seventy-third Congress."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama: After the word "equipment", in the amendment offered by Mr. COOPER of Ohio, strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following words: "unless under direction and with the approval of a prison industrial board authorized by this the Seventy-third Congress."

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. My point of order is that this amendment refers to a commission or board not now in existence, has not been created, and if the amendment does anything, it delegates to a board not in existence, and, therefore, is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, there was an act passed in May 1930, which required the Attorney General to establish in Federal prisons industrial activities. That act further required that a careful survey should be made of industry with a view of fairly distributing the burden on industry. In other words, to so diversify the industrial activities at Federal prisons that no one industry would bear an undue burden. My information is that bill had the approval of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER]. There was no opposition to it in the House, as far as I recall.

The Attorney General has endeavored to carry out that law in good faith. Since it has developed that the cotton industry, the shoe industry, and others might perhaps complain that there had been an undue burden placed on them, we had thought it would be well to have legislation passed by this Congress for the purpose of establishing a board, and the personnel of that board will represent labor, industry, and agriculture. For that reason I felt this amendment might be in order since it seeks to suspend the use of funds carried in this bill to install in Federal prisons machinery for the manufacture of metal furniture without the approval of a Prison Industrial Board to be authorized by this Congress.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I hold it is self-evident that the amendment seeks to transfer this to a board that is not in existence. This amendment is also legislation on an appropriation bill. There is no commission at the present time, and, therefore, this cannot be referred to such commission and cannot depend upon something not in existence. It is also not in order because it is legislation on an appropriation bill, which is in violation of the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LOZIER). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] is subject to a point of order, because it is an attempt to effect legislation under an appropriation bill, and, therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the point of order was not raised by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], who offered this amendment, because I recognize the deep interest that he feels in providing some employment for prisoners. The development of legislation along that line has really been, I think, in line with his own thoughts. The act of May 1930 to which I referred a few moments ago, I am sure was not disapproved by the gentleman. That act undertook to do what it was felt was fair to all industry. There were hearings held and the special committee of which the gentleman was a member, I think, reported that it was important to provide suitable and proper employment for prisoners. I think we all recognize that this is not only essential to discipline, but in accord with the best thought and humane ideals of our people. So the Congress passed a law, in accord with the recommendations submitted by the special committee of which the gentleman was chairman, which authorized and directed the Attorney General to establish at Federal prisons industrial activities, and a revolving fund was provided for that purpose.

There have been established at the prison in Atlanta a textile industry, at Leavenworth a shoe industry, and industries at other Federal prisons.

The Northeastern Prison, against which this amendment is really directed, has only recently been completed. At this prison it was felt there might be installed some machinery, not labor saving or high powered, to manufacture office files and metal equipment to supply a very small percentage of the Government's needs.

Congress, however, as the gentleman states, placed a limitation on the last appropriation bill against the installation of such machinery. Other industries then felt they were not being fairly treated, and that if Congress denied to the Attorney General the right to establish at a new prison this small industry during the fiscal year 1934, then consideration should be given to the suspension of other Federal prison industries, and for that reason a bill was proposed and favorably reported with the unanimous approval of the Judiciary Committee, I understand. I will ask the gentleman from Georgia to make a further explanation of this bill.

It is a fair bill, and I cannot feel that the gentleman from Ohio can really find any serious objection to its provisions. With that thought in mind, I offered the amendment to his amendment to show that there was no disposition on the part of the prison authorities to be unfair to any industry. It was offered in good faith, and I had hoped no point of order would be made, because it at least disclosed that our committee did not wish to confer any arbitrary authority on the head of the Prison Bureau or anyone else to determine what industrial activities should be established at Federal prisons. The bill has the full approval of the Department of Justice and its Director of Prisons, Mr. Bates.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is it not understood that the Superintendent of Prisons intends to install this machinery for a particular purpose?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I may say that the Superintendent of Prisons told me that he would not install this machinery in view of the action taken by Congress at the last session, but that he felt the whole question of what industrial activities should be established at prisons should be referred to a board such as Congress might authorize; and for that reason he gave approval to the bill that was introduced by the gentleman from Georgia and has been favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Because of the attitude the Superintendent of Prisons has shown in reference to this matter and because he has indicated this will be his attitude in the future, I felt that the House should accept the modification offered to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, because it at least shows good faith on the part of the committee handling this bill to leave this matter to the determination of Congress at this session. We had hoped no point of order would be made to the amendment offered for that purpose.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. RICH. And the gentleman's amendment to the amendment was ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is true.

Mr. RICH. Since such a modification cannot be offered to this bill, why permit prisons to go ahead and manufacture with prison labor articles that come in competition with goods manufactured by individuals who have not committed any crime?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is a very good question to ask. I am sorry to know that the gentleman seems to be in sympathy with those who wish to avail themselves of a technical point so as to keep this question from the House. I refer to it more for the purpose of saying that, if you do not adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, the Bureau of Prisons will not establish this industry at the Northeastern Penitentiary until Congress authorizes it. That is the reason I offered the amendment to the amendment; but some, I fear, were just a little selfish and were overanxious to protect interests in their own districts.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I resent the statement made by the gentleman. There is no selfish motive in this. I went up and saw Sanford Bates last year. He said he was going to install this machinery.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I shall withdraw the word "selfish" because I endeavor to avoid saying anything that may be offensive to any Member of the House.

Mr. RICH. I have no industry in my district.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Assuming everything the gentleman has stated is correct, and I am sure it is, will the gentleman tell us what the particular objection is to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. For the very reason that I feel confident this Congress will pass the bill referred to at this session and there is no reason now to adopt this kind of a limitation.

Mr. MOTT. That gets to the question I was asking; then what harm would be done by the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The only harm it would do would be that it might suspend the authority of the board provided for in the bill now on the calendar for the fiscal year 1935.

Mr. MOTT. Is that the only objection?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is one, and I feel a sound objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

It is not fair to those outside who are engaged in labor or industry to anticipate what this House is going to do in the future. You know Sanford Bates; he is a penologist gone awry. His whole thought is to enlarge the business activities of the institutions under his direction, and to make a good financial showing. We had him before our committee investigating Government competition with private enterprise. He cares not how many in the ranks of outside labor he puts out of employment in order that his machinery may be used in the guise of providing so-called "employment" for those within his institutions.

Mr. Francis J. O'Donnell, representing the Joseph M. Herman Shoe Co., of Boston, came before our committee. He is a fine man, fighting for labor and private industry. He challenged Mr. Bates, saying:

> Mr. Bates, you have put into your institutions every labor-saving device that can be procured. If you are in good faith and you want work for your inmates, why do you not take the machines out and let them work by hand? Why do you consistently put these new machines in your institutions? You are crushing labor and industry every time you do so.

Then Mr. O'Donnell submitted figures to show that some 75 percent of the shoemaking done in the penitentiary at Leavenworth is done by machinery.

Refuse to adopt this amendment and you will contribute to the crushing of outside labor as well as outside industry.

Mr. Bates does not care any more for the furniture industry than he did for the railroads when the last administration was trying to serve the railroads and, unbeknown to anybody, he established a competing system of bus transportation. The busses ran clear across the country transporting prisoners from Atlanta, Ga., to Leavenworth, Kans.; from Chillicothe, Ohio, to Luray, Va., and other points. When I asked Mr. Bates about this, and asked him where he got his authority to go into the transportation business, he said: "Congress gave me the authority." If you do not restrict him now, you will live to see the day when he will say, "Congress gave me the power to go into the furniture business."

You rebuffed him some few months ago on this same proposition. Now you are asked to take the rebuff off. May I say to you that if you knew Sanford Bates as our committee knows him—and we had him before us for days and days—you would know that he cares nothing for outside labor nor for independent industry. [Applause.]

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Alabama said that those who were fighting for this amendment were motivated by a selfish interest. I state right here and now—and I am not ashamed of it—that I have a furniture industry in my district. I would consider I was derelict in my duty if I came here as the Representative from my district, when the laborers in my cities are walking the streets and getting their support from public funds, and did not defend them on this floor. If I did not do that, I would feel I had fallen short of my duty as their Representative. Under normal conditions the pay roll in the city of Jamestown, N.Y., in my district, is very large. There are about 16,000 employees in the city, but at the present time in the city of Jamestown, which ordinarily is prosperous, we have 1,000 men receiving aid from the Government through Public Works and we have some 3,000 splendid, law-abiding citizens who are awaiting the opportunity to get on some pay roll so that they can support their families. The furniture business has been hard hit in this country. Yesterday in the Journal of Commerce, on the first page, appears this item:

Furniture manufacturers and distributors have not enjoyed a recovery comparable to that of other lines of consumption goods to date. Substantial orders from dealers and stores in the middle of last year kept the industry busy for a time, but the stocks that were accumulated as a result did not move as quickly as expected. As a reflection of the well-supplied condition of the trade, the furniture showings just closed fell substantially below expectations.

The trade hopes, therefore, that the coming February sales will clear the way for substantial reorders. To facilitate this prices have been kept low by the industry and are expected to remain practically unchanged for some time to come unless higher raw material costs and N.R.A. wage increases make an upward revision absolutely necessary.

It is manifestly unfair at a time like this for the Government to start in manufacturing furniture with convict labor. We condemned Russia for trying to bring her goods into the United States in competition with our free labor because they used convict labor; yet we propose to adopt a national policy that puts our own free labor in competition with people who have committed crimes and are in penal institutions.

With this severe weather, in my district where the thermometer gets pretty low, many people do not have the money to purchase coal, and many cannot get the coal unless they get it from some charitable source. The prisoners are in a warm building; they are well housed; they are well fed and well clothed; they have better machinery with which to work; they have more ideal conditions at a time like this than many employees in many of our cities in this country. I believe the time has come for this Congress to establish a policy once and for all that we are not going to put free labor in competition with convict labor. We should continue to carry out the policy established on the floor the other day when we determined that we would keep the Government out of business; that we were not going to tax industry, and then use the taxes in order to create competing Federal industries.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman is speaking of the furniture business, which brings this to my mind. Within a quarter of a mile of the Northeastern Penitentiary there is a furniture factory. This is in my own town. This furniture factory ordinarily employs 350 to 400 men and now they have but 60 men working. Therefore, I think we might employ the balance of the 450 instead of criminals.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I want to primarily discuss the bill which has been reported from the Judiciary Committee and which is intended to take care of this entire subject matter. May I say at the outset that no Member of this House could be in more thorough accord with the purposes of the gentleman from Ohio than I am. No Member of this House could be more thoroughly opposed to the taking away of any free workingman's job, any man who had conducted himself in accordance with the laws of the land and who was outside of the penitentiary on that account, by a man who had violated the laws of the land and was confined in a penitentiary as punishment for his crime. I believe in reducing prison competition with free labor to the lowest possible minimum.

It was with this purpose in view that I introduced during this Congress a bill which was intended to cut down the production of the duck mill in the Atlanta Penitentiary. It may interest you to know that the duck mill in the Atlanta Penitentiary in 1931 produced 38 percent of the amount of wide duck produced by free industry in this country. The duck mills in my State, many of them, were closed down. Free laborers were out of employment. I introduced this bill in an effort not to abolish the duck mill in the Atlanta Penitentiary, but to reduce the amount of its production, so that it would not constitute an unfair amount of competition with free labor.

Hearings were had at length by the Judiciary Committee. The Director of the Bureau of Prisons was before the committee, manufacturers were represented before the committee, the committee was advised of the feelings of labor, and, after thorough hearings, arrived at the conclusion that a general bill dealing with the entire subject of prison industry, instead of merely with the duck mill in the Atlanta Penitentiary, should be passed by the Congress.

It therefore formulated this bill, H.R. 6974, which has the approval of the Attorney General, the approval of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, the approval of the manufacturers, and which received a unanimous report from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Did any representative of labor appear before the gentleman's committee and advocate the passage of this bill?

Mr. TARVER. No representative of labor appeared either for or against the bill, but the committee was advised that labor had approved the principle of the act of May 27, 1930, which provided for the operation of prison industries in such a way and in such diversified forms as will reduce to a minimum competition with private industry or free labor. The committee incorporated this principle in the bill and undertook to form a board which should carry out the purposes of the act of May 27, 1930, 1 member of which board should represent labor, 1 member agriculture, 1 member manufacturers, 1 member vocational education, and 1 member the general public interest.

The object of the committee was to assure just what the gentleman from Ohio says he wants to bring about, and that is, that prison industries will not be operated in such a way as to prove disastrous to free labor.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. We are faced with a condition and not a theory. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] says he wants to prevent the introduction of highly mechanized machinery for manufacturing purposes in Federal prisons. This machinery is already there. It is there in the Atlanta penitentiary producing, as I have said, in 1 year 38 percent of the entire production of wide duck by the free wide-duck industry of this country.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. In just a moment.

It is in the Leavenworth Penitentiary, in competition with the shoe industry.

Whenever the Bureau of Prisons undertakes to carry out the purposes of the act of May 27, 1930, and to diversify, so that no undue burden will be placed on any industry, but the burden may be so scattered among all industries so that it will not constitute a blow to any particular one, diligent Representatives rise upon the floor of this House and propose amendments which will have the effect of preventing the Bureau of Prisons from going into the field of industries which are prominent among the enterprises of their districts. The result is there can be no diversification as directed in the act of 1930. The result is that, instead of diversifying, the Bureau of Prisons continues to add to the burden of two or three industries in which it is already engaged.

Now, is it not fair to undertake to scatter the burden among more industries and relieve these two or three industries of a very large and burdensome share of Federal prison competition?

I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Preliminary to what I want to ask the gentleman, may I ask how the members of this proposed Prison Industries Board are to be selected?

Mr. TARVER. They are to be appointed by the President, none of them to draw any compensation, and the Attorney General and the Director of the Budget to be ex-officio members.

Mr. MAPES. Then let me ask the gentleman this question: In view of the drive which we all know the Federal Director of Prisons has made to install equipment for the manufacture of metal furniture in the Northeastern Prison, does not the gentleman think that this proposed Prison Industries Board might easily be made the instrument to circumvent the will of Congress to enable this equipment to be installed unless the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio is adopted?

Mr. TARVER. May I say to the gentleman that while, of course, I cannot read the mind of the Director of Prisons or the mind of the Attorney General so as to acquaint the gentleman with what they have in their hearts, their statements to the Committee on the Judiciary are to the contrary, and I certainly am able to believe, whole-heartedly, that no member of the Committee on the Judiciary had such object in mind in formulating and voting for a favorable report upon this bill. I believe the Director of Prisons desires to carry out the will of Congress as indicated in the act of May 27, 1930, and the purpose of the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee is to enable him to do so.

The whole purpose of that was to bring about a condition whereby such necessary employment as takes place in prisons may be so diversified as not to bring undue hardship to any industry.

And may I say that such a law as is proposed by the Judiciary Committee was enacted in the State of New York, from which State the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] comes, and was enacted, as I am informed, at the instance and with the approval of our President when he was Governor of the State of New York. I am justified in saying that this proposed legislation is therefore probably very much in accordance with his views.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman speaks of 37 percent of the wide duck made in prison.

Mr. TARVER. Thirty-eight percent.

Mr. RICH. Why not, if prison labor is competing with free labor, close up the prison labor and get the pile of brick and let them bring it from one side to the other to occupy their minds, and not penalize men who want a job?

Mr. TARVER. As I said at the beginning of my address, we are facing a condition and not a theory. The gentleman is talking about the advisability of repealing the act of May 27, 1930, which authorizes the Prison Bureau to enter into industries of various types.

As I said before, no man on the floor of the House is more in favor of decreasing the competition of prison labor than I am, but there is a law on the statute books that the gentleman has not introduced a bill to repeal, the act of May 27, 1930. Competition is going to continue, and it is going to continue in the shoe industry, I will say to my friend from Massachusetts, who I see has just risen.

Mr. CONNERY. Allow me to say that I am not out of sympathy with the bill proposed by the gentleman from Georgia, but I am wondering why in a bill so vital the committee did not invite Mr. Green, at the head of the Federation of Labor, to come in and say something. Everybody else seems to have been heard except labor. The gentleman may not agree with me, but this bill should have gone to the Committee on Labor, where the Hawes-Cooper bill was reported. Of course, it is too late now. The Committee on the Judiciary has had jurisdiction.

Mr. TARVER. The committee took this view of it: That organized labor representatives had testified in the hearing on the bill, approved May 27, 1930, and approved of the contents of that bill, and this legislation just carries out the principles of that act.

Now, in regard to which committee should have had the jurisdiction of this bill, while it is not material now, permit me to say that legislation affecting Federal prisons and the employment of Federal prisoners is necessarily within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary.

One other thing, and I shall conclude. Some question was made in the remarks of some gentleman as to whether or not if this bill H.R. 6974 should be passed it would be in any way hindered by the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Of course it would be. The bill H.R. 6974 proposes to vest a committee with the duty or discretion of amplifying or contracting operations in all industries so as to bring about an even amount of competition. If we attach to this bill the amendment which provides that they cannot consider some industry in which the gentleman is interested, that, of course, hamstrings the operation of the bill to that extent.

Why should not the entire subject matter, without reference to any particular industry, be left within the control of this board? Why should this House designate one particular industry, saying you may consider all other fields, but do not put your finger on the metal-furniture industry so ably represented in Congress by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER]?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman knows that the amendment applies only to this particular appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1935.

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Even though it stopped the board from installing machinery for the manufacture of metal office furniture in the Lewisburg Penitentiary, I am sure the gentleman will admit that after the year is out they could put machinery in there if they wanted to.

Mr. TARVER. Yes. Yet for 18 months this board, if it is created, and I hope it will be—and in view of the unanimous report of the committee I reasonably believe it will be—for 18 months it would be prohibited from exercising its function under H.R. 6974 with regard to one particular industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and in connection therewith to insert in the RECORD a copy of the bill H.R. 6974, and the report of the committee thereon.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

H.R. 6974 [Rept. No. 296] to provide for the regulation of prison industry and the appointment of a Prison Industrial Board, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide diversification of Federal prison industries and to insure protection of free labor and free industry, while providing adequate training of the prisoners, the President of the United States shall appoint a Prison Industrial Board which shall consist of 5 persons, who shall each serve for a period of 5 years. Of this number 1 shall be a representative of labor, 1 a representative of manufacturers, 1 a representative of agriculture, 1 a representative of vocational education, and 1 a representative of general public interests.

(b) The terms of office of the members first taking office after approval of this act shall expire as designated by the President at the time of appointment, 2 at the end of the second year, 2 at the end of the third year, and 1 at the end of the fifth year. A successor to a member of the board shall be appointed in the same manner as the original member whom he succeeds and shall have a term of office expiring 5 years from the date of expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed and any member appointed to fill a vacancy in the board occurring prior to the expiration of the term to which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

SEC. 2. The Attorney General and the Director of the Budget or their representatives shall be ex-officio members of the board.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of this board to have surveys made to gather factual data in regard to regular annual supply requirements of the Federal Government and to plan for the employment of prisoners as provided under sections 2 and 3 of the act of May 27, 1930, entitled "An act to provide for the diversification of employment of Federal prisoners for their training and schooling in trades and occupations, and for other purposes" (46 Stat. 391), so that employment may be confined, so far as possible, to noncompetitive activities and so that the prison shops shall be so organized and operated that no one industry or group of industries shall be forced to bear an undue burden of competition from the products of the prison workshop.

SEC. 4. When such surveys have been completed and the prison employment plans formulated it shall be the duty of the Federal Director of Prisons and the wardens of other Federal custodial institutions to put them into effective operation with reasonable expedition in the control of prison employment operations.

SEC. 5. This board shall elect its own chairman and shall hold meetings at least quarterly and shall report annually, or oftener, to the President of the United States.

SEC. 6. The members of this board shall receive no compensation, except that the expenses incidental to traveling and the gathering and analysis of required data shall be paid on vouchers approved by the Attorney General from the prison industries working capital fund, the incurring of such expenditures having first been approved by the Attorney General.

SEC. 7. (a) All moneys appropriated for or on deposit with the Treasury of the United States in the prison industries working capital fund at the close of the month next following the approval of this act shall be considered a permanent and indefinite revolving fund for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of industries now in operation or hereafter authorized to be established by the board. The fund shall be available and may be expended for the same purposes and in the same manner as authorized by the act of Congress approved May 27, 1930 (46 Stat. 391), and no special limitation not generally applicable to expenditures of all public moneys shall hereafter be placed upon the authority of the board herein created or upon the use of any of the funds available to carry out the purposes of this act or appropriated for other purposes without specifically repealing this act.

(b) In addition to the purposes enumerated in the acts of Congress approved May 27, 1930, and March 1, 1933, the prison industries working capital fund shall be available for the payment of compensation in such amounts as the Attorney General may authorize to inmates or their dependents for injuries suffered in any industry, for the acquisition of patent rights and royalties, and for all other expenses necessary to carry out the purpose of this act and the act approved May 27, 1930 (46 Stat. 391): Provided, That in no event shall compensation be paid in a greater amount than that provided in the Federal Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, as amended.

(c) The net proceeds derived from the sale of articles and commodities made in Federal prisons to other Government departments and agencies after deducting the cost of operation, maintenance, depreciation, amortization, and an amount deemed by the Attorney General as necessary to withhold as working capital or devoted to the establishment of new industries or projects, shall be paid into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts at the end of each fiscal year.

SEC. 8. This act is supplemental to the act of Congress approved May 27, 1930, and the failure of the board to act as herein authorized shall not limit the Attorney General to carry out the duties conferred upon him by the act of Congress approved May 27, 1930.

SEC. 9. This act shall become effective upon approval.

SEC. 10. This act shall relate to all Federal prison employment under whatever legislation heretofore enacted, and all provisions of existing laws conflicting herewith are hereby repealed.

[H.Rept. No. 296, 73d Cong., 2d sess.]

PRISON INDUSTRIES BOARD

Mr. TARVER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany H.R. 6974)

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 6974) to provide for the regulation of prison industry and the appointment of a prison industrial board, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The operation of prison industries so as to provide necessary employment for prisoners and, at the same time, carry out the purposes of the act of May 27, 1930, that such employment shall be "in such diversified forms as will reduce to a minimum competition with private industry or free labor" has been attended with great difficulties. Attempted diversification of prison employment by prison authorities has been met by resistance from every industry into the field of which it was sought to go even to a minor extent, and the major portion of prison-industry production has, therefore, been largely limited to the particular industries already carried on by the Bureau of Prisons prior to the enactment of the act of May 27, 1930.

This severe limitation has resulted in the production by prison workshops of products of these industries constituting a large proportion of the amount of such products produced in private industry and in some instances making the burden of prison industry competition intolerable. For example, the product of the cotton mill in the Atlanta Penitentiary of wide duck for the year 1931 constituted 5,921,087 pounds, whereas the production of wide duck by free mills for the same year was 15,511,456 pounds. The prison wide-duck production, therefore, was 38 percent of the free-mill production of this material. It has seemed to the committee that this is too great a burden to be placed by prison industry upon one branch of free industry and that especially is this true when for a long time private wide-duck mills have in some instances been standing idle, their employees deprived of the means of earning a livelihood because of the activities of the Atlanta Penitentiary cotton mill. It is but fair to state that the production of the Atlanta Penitentiary cotton mill has not at all times averaged such a large proportion of the amount of wide duck produced in private industry, but during recent years it has at all times averaged an extremely large proportion of such private production and, in our judgment, its operations have exceeded the limitations contemplated by the act of May 27, 1930, and should be reduced.

However, it is impossible to carry out the proposals of that act "to provide employment for all physically fit inmates in the United States penal and correctional institutions" without broadening the field of occupations into which the Bureau of Prisons may be permitted to enter, or carrying on existing prison industries on a larger scale than was contemplated by the act referred to.

Under these conditions it is felt that the establishment of a prison industrial board upon which there should be representatives of labor, manufacturers, agriculture, vocational education, and the general public interests, in addition to the Attorney General and the Director of the Budget, empowering this board to handle the general subject matter of prison industry in accordance with the purpose and intent of the act of May 27, 1930, would go a long way toward solving the existing problem.

The proposed legislation herein reported provides for the establishment of such a board, its members to be appointed by the President and to have full authority to carry on prison industries, to diversify them, confine them as far as possible to noncompetitive activities, and to so operate them that an undue burden of competition shall not be imposed on any one industry or group of industries. The members of the board are to serve without compensation except that their traveling expenses and expenses incidental to the gathering and analysis of required data may be paid on vouchers approved by the Attorney General from the prison industry working capital fund, the incurring of such expenditures having first been approved by the Attorney General. The prison industry working capital fund is made a permanent and indefinite revolving fund for the use of the board in its operations, the net proceeds to be paid into the Treasury at the end of each fiscal year.

The legislation has the approval of the Attorney General, the director of prisons, and representatives of manufacturing interests affected, and will, in our judgment, be satisfactory to labor. It is hoped that it may prove a solution of this troublesome problem.

In accordance with the requirements of rule XIII, subsection 2 (a), of the House of Representatives, there is printed below sections 2, 3, and 6 of the act of May 27, 1930, entitled "An act to provide for the diversification of employment of Federal prisoners, for their training and schooling in trades and occupations, and for other purposes" (46 Stat. 391), which this bill, as amended, supplements:

"SEC. 2. The Attorney General may make available the services of United States prisoners to the heads of the several departments under such terms, conditions, and at such rates as may be mutually agreed upon, for the purpose of constructing or repairing roads the cost of which is borne exclusively by the United States; clearing, maintaining, and reforesting public lands; building levees; and for construction or repairing any other public ways or works which are or may be financed wholly or in major part by funds appropriated from the Treasury of the United States. To carry out the purpose of this section the Attorney General may establish, equip, and maintain camps upon sites selected by him and designate such camps as a place for confinement of persons convicted of an offense against the laws of the United States. The expenses of transferring and maintaining prisoners at such camps shall be paid from the appropriation, 'Support of United States prisoners', and said appropriation may, in the discretion of the Attorney General, be reimbursed for such expenses.

"SEC. 3. The Attorney General shall establish such industries as will produce articles and commodities for consumption in United States penal and correctional institutions or for sale to the departments and independent establishments of the Federal Government and not for sale to the public in competition with private enterprise: Provided, That any industry established under authority of this act be so operated as not to curtail the production within its present limits, or any existing arsenal, navy yard, or other Government workship. In establishing said industries the Attorney General shall provide such forms of employment in the Federal penal and correctional institutions as will give the inmates a maximum opportunity to acquire a knowledge and skill in trades and occupations which will provide them with a means of earning a livelihood upon release. The industries to be established by the Attorney General under authority of this section may be either within the precincts of any penal or correctional institution or in any convenient locality where an existing property may be obtained by lease, purchase, or otherwise.

"SEC. 6. The prison industries working-capital fund shall be administered and disbursed by or under the direction of the Attorney General and shall be available for the purchase, repair, or replacement of industrial machinery or equipment; for the purchase of raw materials; for compensation to inmates employed in any industry under rules and regulations promulgated from time to time by the Attorney General; for the employment of necessary civilian officers and employees engaged in any industrial enterprise at any of the Federal penal and correctional institutions and in the District of Columbia; for the repair, alteration, erection, and maintenance of industrial buildings and equipment; and for travel and any other expenses incident to or connected with the establishment, operation, or maintenance of such prison industries as are now established or may hereafter be established by the Attorney General at the several penal and correctional institutions."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, as I said in my colloquy with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], I feel inclined to be in sympathy with his bill, which the Committee on the Judiciary has reported out; but in the present situation, so well set out by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], who has made a thorough study of this prison matter, I feel the Cooper amendment should be adopted. The gentleman from Ohio came before the Committee on Labor many, many times when we had the Cooper-Hawes bill under consideration. He was the author of the bill in connection with Senator Hawes. This is a situation that we are facing at this moment during the life of this appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1935. I think the Cooper amendment ought to pass, even if it does interfere temporarily with the ideas of the bill of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]. It cannot do much harm to have them making no furniture in that penitentiary for 1 year.

I am not in sympathy with the idea expressed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] that prisoners should be set merely to moving bricks from one side of a space to another. We heard much testimony about the conditions in prisons before the Committee on Labor when considering that bill. We know that you cannot put a man in prison and merely let him twiddle his thumbs or just move about or move brick from one place to another. You have to have some work for him to do. If you keep him idle, you shatter his morale and many times this leads to insanity. Our idea and labor's idea is diversified industry. Let them make a little of this and a little of that, whether it be furniture or whatnot, as long as they do not take the bread and butter out of the mouths of free labor.

Ten years ago on this floor, on the same matter, when questioned by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], I said that I would be willing to have them make almost anything in these penitentiaries if you are willing to pay them the same wages that you pay free labor on the outside, and let the money go to the families of the prisoners so that when a man goes to a penitentiary and leaves a wife and children who are innocent they may be taken care of, and that is a thought for this committee to look into when it takes up the question of prison industry. I hope the Cooper amendment will pass. It is a good amendment for labor. I hope we will not go into technicalities here and say, well, on account of this proposition coming up from the Committee on the Judiciary we ought to let the Cooper amendment ride for a time. The Cooper amendment is a good amendment for labor and now is the time to pass it, and I hope the House will do so.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. DUNN. Is it not a fact that the American Federation of Labor is in favor of the amendment now before the committee?

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, yes; they have always been in favor of it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I know the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] will agree that I am in full accord with his views with reference to prison labor competing with free labor. No Member of the House is more opposed to prison labor competing with free labor than I am.

Let us analyze what you are going to do under this Cooper amendment, and I want the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] to listen to this. Under the Cooper amendment you tie the hands of the superintendent of prisons insofar as installing machinery for the manufacture of metal furniture is concerned. That is all you do. How about all the other industries? His hands are tied insofar as putting machinery in the penitentiary in this respect, but he can install any other kind of machinery he desires. This is unfair to other industries. He can put another shoe factory in that prison. The gentleman from Massachusetts comes from a great shoe district, as I do. The hands of the director are not tied from putting textile machinery in the prison. He can manufacture cigars in there, if he wants to, or anything else. Under this amendment you are protecting one industry and letting him do what he wants to with all the other industries. Why not play fair with all industries?

Mr. CONNERY. We are not trying to do that. We are trying to stop him from putting it in there. The gentleman knows, as I do, that there are not enough shoes made in these factories, due to the passage of the Cooper-Hawes bill, to make any difference. We stopped them from making the volume of shoes that they were making, and there is not any serious competition in these prisons today with free labor.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I think the gentleman should read the letter that I put into the RECORD yesterday. Mr. Bates, if so desired, could have manufactured more than 1,700,000 pairs of shoes at Leavenworth last year.

Realizing the unemployment situation, what did he do? He released about 1,500,000 pairs of shoes to your manufacturers and my manufacturers and he only manufactured about 200,000 pairs of shoes at Leavenworth. That was a fair break.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman refers to my district, we do not make men's shoes. We make women's shoes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. They can make women's shoes and sell them to the Indian Service. Do not overlook that, my friend.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the Cooper amendment has been in effect 1 year?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I know that.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. But the Superintendent of Federal Prisons has not put in any other kind of machinery in any of the penitentiaries to manufacture other products.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No; he has not, but he could if he desired. That should show the gentleman Mr. Bates has been most fair.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. And he has not come to the Committee on Appropriations and said he was going to do it, as he did when he came and said he wanted to install that machinery in the Lewisburg Penitentiary.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I have sufficient faith in the Superintendent of Prisons to know even if he has the power he will act fair.

It is the intent of the bill soon to be called up to create a board to consider this problem. Why not give the board a chance?

If I had my way, I would open a lot of schools in the prisons and educate the prisoners while they are there; keep their minds busy; get some of these professors you hear so much about and put them to work teaching the prisoners. One thing I would not do, and that is I would not have them carry bricks from one side of the yard to the other, like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] wants them to do. Putting the prisoners in school for 5 or 6 hours a day would not be competing with any industry.

If you are going to amend this paragraph, then go all the way; be fair; do not protect one industry, but protect all industries. I am sure if you will give Mr. Bates and the new board to be created a fair chance, you will never have cause to regret it.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want generally to disagree with practically all that has been said on this subject. Judging from the remarks of the Members on the floor of this House, they seem to be afraid we are going to run out of work, and there will not be enough work in this country for everybody to do. I had always thought that the purpose of work was to get the finished product and the use of that product, but apparently the whole idea behind this scheme of existence is to find some work for somebody to do. I have been hoping that the Committee on Labor would bring out a bill that would shorten the hours of labor so that the people of this country would not have to do so much work. I always thought the purpose was to find some way to get enjoyment out of the things we need and use, without having to do so much work. Personally, I think there is enough work on this old globe that goes whirling through space to give everybody on the outside enough to do to supply the needs of this human family and yet leave something for those fellows who happen to be on the inside to do. I do not think we should take the stand that we are going to coop up a portion of our civilization inside the prison walls and say we cannot let them work, because if they work there will not be enough left for us to do on the outside.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I would rather devote my 5 minutes to a discussion of what I think should be our attitude on prison labor. It is my contention that there is enough work to be done to let every man inside the prison walls do some constructive work, not pile bricks here and pick them up and put them over here but make a contribution to society that is on the outside.

What if they do make plenty of shoes? We have millions of families in this country without any shoes to wear. What if they do make some duck down at Atlanta? We have millions of families in this country without anything to wear. What if they do make some metal chairs here? We have some people in this country without any money to buy metal chairs. Why not let them produce something constructive and then put it in a place that will make life easier? I cannot follow the reasoning of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON], that you should take an ax and smash machinery so that we could have an opportunity to work. If you get to the point in this country where you push an electric button and everything is done, would it not be all right? Can we not learn to enjoy life free from drudgery? Would you have a man shine up the lamp chimneys in order to have something to do and destroy the electric lights? Destroying machinery so that there will be more work to do has been argued all through the ages. It has been argued that if you create machinery, you will do away with work. Well, I do not care if we reach the point of perfection in this country where we do away with all work. I think the purpose of life is enjoyment of the fruits of labor and not labor itself.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman will come before the Committee on Labor on Tuesday next, he will get an answer to everything he has said here today. We have for consideration before that committee the old-age pension law and the 30-hour week for labor.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that, and I will support such a measure every time it comes to this floor, but I am not going to support any proposition that works on the theory that in order for me to have a job I have to cut somebody else out of work. I am not going to support a proposition that works on the theory that in order for those on the outside of prison walls to have plenty of work you have to let those on the inside stand idle. I think there are places where you can put the goods that every man on the inside of prison walls makes to good advantage. I think there will always be enough work to be done on the outside for everybody who is able to work to make his contribution to the sum total of human happiness and human enjoyment. I cannot subscribe to this theory that because I have a plant in my town that makes some product I ought to vote for an amendment that will keep the people on the inside of the prison walls out of work. This bill that is being brought before the House will coordinate these prison enterprises so that it will not work an undue hardship on industry outside the prisons and will still leave those men on the inside with something to do and some contribution to make to human existence.

I do not think that the amendment ought to be voted for or ought to be incorporated in as a part of this bill. I think we ought to wait until the other bill comes along. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States penitentiary, Alcatraz Island, Calif.: For the United States penitentiary at Alcatraz Island, Calif., including not to exceed $88,450 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees and not to exceed $750 for the purchase of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, $231,475, together with not to exceed $15,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation, "United States Northeastern Penitentiary", fiscal year 1934.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. KAHN: Page 39, line 4, strike out lines 4 to 12, inclusive.

Mrs. KAHN. The language stricken out by my amendment provides for the establishment of a Federal penitentiary on Alcatraz Island in San Francisco Bay. This island is visible from, and is near to, the best residential section of San Francisco. For many years there has been a military prison on the island, but the people of San Francisco paid no attention to it because the discipline of the prison was perfect and no trouble has ever arisen.

When the War Department decided they would concentrate their prisoners in several of the large prisons in this country, they transferred the Army prisoners from this island to other prisons in the custody of the War Department and transferred this prison to the Department of Justice.

When a Federal prison was first spoken of for Alcatraz Island, the people of San Francisco did not object because they had had this experience with Alcatraz as a military prison which did not affect their peace of mind at all. Suddenly, however, based on news from the East, large headlines appeared in our San Francisco papers stating:

Devil's island to be established in San Francisco Bay. Prison on Alcatraz Island to be turned into devil's island.

With these headlines appeared an article stating that all the incorrigible prisoners in the Federal penitentiaries were to be transferred to Alcatraz Island. As I said, when the Federal prison was first suggested, there was no objection raised; but when it was announced that this was to be an American "devil's island", the feeling was quite different. I leave it to the Members present if they would want a prison of this kind near their home cities.

It was announced that escape from the island would be practically impossible because the currents around the island were so strong that nobody could swim. Immediately a young girl started from San Francisco, swam to the island, swam around it and swam back to show that it would be possible if they once got into the water to escape by swimming.

San Francisco has prided itself on the fact that it was probably freer from racketeers and freer from gangsters and that type of criminal than almost any other city in the United States. We have a police department in that city of which we are very proud, a police department that is most marvelously efficient. Through their efforts San Francisco has been made a place most unsafe and most undesirable for that type of people.

We were afraid that if they transferred these incorrigibles from other prisons to this one in San Francisco Bay, that San Francisco and the surrounding towns would become a haven for the families and friends of these people; and while we do not object to a Federal penitentiary, we certainly do object to the type of penitentiary they are placing right at our front door, facing, as it does, the most desirable residential part of San Francisco. We object to its being made a prison for incorrigibles. [Applause.]

This prison is not necessary. Several new prisons have been erected lately in different parts of the country that are not filled—and the prison population is gradually decreasing on account of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. It will be a most expensive prison to maintain. There is not a drop of water on the island—every drop has to be conveyed on water boats. Numerous guards will be necessary—an added expense. The people of San Francisco are bitterly opposed to it as a menace to their peace and as an unnecessary and expensive Government undertaking.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman from California, a member of this subcommittee, opposed this item in the committee, and it was with some regret that other members of the committee were unable to agree with her.

There has been expended on this prison approximately $250,000 for the purpose of making it safe for Federal prisoners. The Department of Justice feels it will serve a most useful purpose; and I think the views of the Department in this regard have very general public approval.

I recognize the sentimental objections to which the gentlewoman from California has referred, but I am sure they will not be controlling with the House in a matter of this public importance. If you will read the statement made by the Attorney General before the committee, you can understand the importance he attaches to this prison. The War Department transferred the property to the Department of Justice with the approval of the President; and this whole matter has been carefully considered before expending upward of $250,000 on it.

I regret very much that I am unable to agree with the statements made by the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. KAHN] and that I must oppose this amendment.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, for the life of me I cannot see why it is desired to spend a dollar on Alcatraz Island. There is no reason for it. It is impractical. I know that entire Pacific coast. There is not a drop of water on the island except what has to be hauled there. It will be an expensive institution for the Government to maintain.

The Government has spent large sums of money on McNeil Island on the west coast. It is an ideal prison island; there is practically nothing else on it.

When the Department of Justice claims that Alcatraz Island is a safe place to keep prisoners, they are speaking in terms that cannot be anything but a joke, because a 15-year-old girl swam across the Bay to Alcatraz Island and back during the past year. There is no reason, absolutely no reason in common sense for spending one dollar on Alcatraz Island; I do not care what the Attorney General says about it, because I do not think he ever saw it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that the prison population is decreasing. If so, I should like to know to what extent it is decreasing, because it would seem to me if it is decreasing very markedly, there is absolutely no justification for going ahead with expenditures on a new prison.

That is the thing that appeals to me.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The money has already been spent. This is an ideal site, and one of the best Federal prisons we have and is well suited for the purposes for which it is intended to be used.

Mr. TABER. Is it needed?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Is there not plenty of room in Leavenworth, in Atlanta, and at McNeils Island to take care of all we have?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. We have prisons scattered all over the country, but the claim has been made, you understand, that all have been crowded beyond their capacity. I have not, however, agreed with that view. This prison was selected for a special purpose, and, as I stated a few minutes ago, it has the unqualified endorsement of the Department of Justice, and I think it has had the approval of the President. Money has been released for putting it in splendid condition. It was taken over from the Army and will serve, our committee feels, a very fine purpose.

Mr. TABER. I notice the number of jail days has been reduced 500,000.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. We could much better dispense with some prisons at other places rather than this one, if any should be closed for lack of population.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, during the past summer I visited Alcatraz Island. I saw the transportation of some of the prisoners from this island through the Panama Canal to the prisons in New York and other places. I see no reason why there should be any objection.

I visited Alcatraz Island on my return from Hawaii, where I investigated the violations of the Narcotic Act. Arrangements were then being made for the transfer of the Army prisoners incarcerated in the prison on this island. I had occasion to observe these men, and I found that the detention there is as humane as could be expected in any prison. The Government has a large investment there, and I can see no good reason why there should be any objection to continuing to maintain this as a prison for the Federal Government. Just a short distance beyond this is located the State institution, San Quentin. It is surrounded by both land and water; and if it is contended, as it is by the gentlewoman from California, that this prison would jeopardize the safety of the people of San Francisco and the northern part of the State, then it appears that their safety must have been so jeopardized for a long while, because both of these prisons have been located where they are, for many, many years, and to move these prisons now to some other site would be poor economy.

In fact, I consulted with the heads of some of the large business houses and hotels while I was in San Francisco as to whether or not the transformation of the Alcatraz prison into a general Federal prison would be objectionable, and in every instance they assured me that they could not see why there should be any objection except in the minds of some of the citizens. They thought, in fact, that it would be beneficial to the surrounding cities, insofar as it would bring business to these cities through the visits of friends and attorneys of those incarcerated in the prisons who might not otherwise come there.

We have prisons all over the country, the majority of them entirely surrounded by land. We find that at various times prisoners escape from these institutions. As a general rule the residents in these places are quite safe, especially in a location where the land on which the prison stands is surrounded by a large body of water. Escape therefrom is practically nil. It may be true that some of these prisoners are good swimmers, but not all of them are good swimmers, and the distance is almost too great for any swimmer to endure the current and the drift of traffic going to and fro through the channel.

I therefore think, as long as this prison has already been established on this island and the Government has expended large sums of money to maintain the same in good condition, that it should be continued to be used for this purpose.

I therefore do not agree with the amendment made by the gentlewoman from California.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LLOYD) there were—ayes 42, noes 47.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 39, line 6, strike out the figures "$88,450" and insert the figures "$103,450."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama for the committee: On page 39, line 6, strike out the figures "$88,450" and insert the figures "$103,450."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appropriations herein made for aircraft in commerce and air navigation facilities shall be available for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the promotion of civil aeronautics, and also expenses of illustrating the work of the Aeronautics Branch by showing of maps, charts, and graphs at such meetings, when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for about 3 minutes on the prison situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to bring to the attention of this House the cruel and inhuman treatment people are getting at the hands of our Government, and particularly by the parole board and prison officials.

This morning I received a telegram from a very prominent citizen of the city of Minneapolis requesting me to intercede on behalf of a prisoner in Leavenworth Penitentiary. This prisoner has 36 days left to complete a 2-year sentence. His wife is dying in the State sanitarium at Glen Lake, Minn. She can be expected to live only 3 or 4 more days.

I asked the parole board if they would not give this man the remaining 36 days which he still has left to serve in order to let him see his wife while she is alive. I received information about 2 minutes ago that it was impossible to grant the request. Such things are absolutely inhuman.

This man did not make parole. I cannot say anything about how good the man has been, but he only has 36 days to serve.

If the United States Government has to stand between this man and his seeing his wife alive because of 36 days, I think it is most inhuman. Something should be done. Some of these rules should be changed. It is things like this that send these men out of the penitentiary with malice in their hearts and with a revengeful feeling. It is that which causes them to go out and say that their Government itself has no consideration and will not even give them the human consideration we would give an animal under like circumstances.

May I bring this to your attention, and it is practically an every-day occurrence. There is a woman dying. She can only live 3 or 4 days. Her husband has only 36 days to serve out of 2 years, and yet they cannot grant a little request like that. I think it is absolutely beyond human comprehension that people could act this way.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make this statement in reply to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SHOEMAKER].

I think the gentleman will find, on inquiry of those who have visited our Federal prisons, that prisoners are humanely treated, that good food is provided, and the health of all prisoners is well cared for by our very efficient Public Health Service. There has been some complaint that we are providing too well for Federal prisoners.

I feel quite sure there is no foundation for just complaint against the treatment of Federal prisoners.

All who have visited our Federal prisons have been favorably impressed with the care and treatment accorded prisoners, so far as my knowledge extends, and no Member of Congress has registered any complaints with the subcommittee, of which I am chairman.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I just want to mention to the gentleman this fact: The case I am speaking of here is a contempt-of-court case, and this man has done all of a 2-year sentence except 36 days. He will be out of the institution a little after the 1st of March.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman recognizes that is a matter that we could not be expected to attend to here on the floor.

Insofar as the health of the prisoner is concerned, if the gentleman will call up the Bureau of Public Health, he will find that every possible attention will be given to any prisoner who is sick and in need of medical care.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I want to call the gentleman's attention also to this fact: Our penitentiaries, officially, are filled with the greatest group of liars and cutthroats imaginable, and they fool everybody who comes to the penitentiary to visit. I know what I am talking about because I lived through it. I know some of the grievances these men have, and I know our penitentiary system is permeated with graft, and I will make this statement off the floor as well as on the floor. I do not have to stand behind any immunity in making this statement. These prisoners are compelled to help with this graft. I have seen men acting as receiving clerks made to sign up for sugar and various other things that never came in, and when they did not sign they would be shot into the hole and made to sleep on cement floors for days.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 46 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may we have the amendment read?

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the Committee, the Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. KVALE: On page 46, line 16, after the figures, strike out the period, add a colon, and insert: "Provided, That none of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for the purchase of any airplane, ordered after the approval of this act, which is equipped or propelled by a Liberty motor or by any motor or airplane engine purchased or constructed prior to July 1, 1920."

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The committee will be very pleased to accept the amendment. It is not proposed to use any part of this money for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, may I say that this amendment was introduced last year by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss]. Unflagging as he is in his attendance on the floor of the House, he is not present today because of illness. Had the gentleman from Connecticut been here today, I know he would have offered this amendment and it would have been accepted as overwhelmingly as it was last year.

This amendment has been in the appropriation bills for the past 4 years, and I thank the chairman for accepting the amendment which I have proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Bureau of Standards, $1,436,908, of which amount not to exceed $1,256,395 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if it is true that the committee has adhered to the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget for the Bureau of Standards for the fiscal year?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. We have deducted nothing from the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget. This Bureau has been severely cut in its appropriations, but under the direction of its very able Director it is the hope of the committee that it continue to function efficiently within the limits of the appropriations carried.

Mr. KVALE. I was much impressed with the statement of Dr. Briggs before the subcommittee, and I am wondering if the chairman would object to my getting unanimous consent to insert that brief statement as a part of my remarks.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I should be very glad to have it inserted.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert the statement as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

BUREAU OF STANDARDS,
Thursday, January 4, 1934.

STATEMENT OF DR. LYMAN J. BRIGGS, DIRECTOR

Mr. OLIVER. We will now take up the next appropriation for the Bureau of Standards. We have with us Dr. Briggs, the director of this service.

Doctor, if you would like to make a brief general statement in reference to the work of the Bureau of Standards, this is the appropriate place to do so, and we shall be glad to hear whatever statement you wish to submit.

EFFECT OF REDUCTION IN APPROPRIATIONS UPON PERSONNEL AND WORK OF BUREAU

Dr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation by Congress for the present fiscal year for the Bureau of Standards amounted to $2,056,045. Of this amount over $720,000 was impounded under the economy program, so the funds available to the Bureau for expenditure for the present fiscal year are limited to $1,336,000, or less than one half of the appropriation for 1932.

Operating expenses last year were reduced to the absolute minimum, so that this additional cut of $720,000 could only be met by a severe reduction in the Bureau's staff, and it was necessary to separate or furlough indefinitely nearly one third of our staff as of last July. The staff on June 30, 1933, numbered 946 employees, while on January 1, 1934, the number was 658.

The numerous lines of work which the Bureau of Standards is called upon to perform require the services of many men and women who are specialists in their particular fields. In order to retain those who are absolutely essential for our work it was necessary to impose upon all members of the staff an additional departmental furlough of 15 days without pay, so the Bureau personnel at the present time is operating on a total salary reduction of about 20 percent below the base pay.

While the heavy cuts in all Bureau appropriations last July necessitated a curtailment of every line of work, there were certain activities which had to be supported at the expense of others. For example, it was necessary to continue the testing for other Government departments in order to determine whether equipment and supplies purchased under Federal specifications conformed to the specifications. It was also necessary for the Bureau to maintain the primary and essential service of calibrating thermometers, graduated glassware, gages, weights, and electrical, optical, and mechanical measuring instruments in terms of the national standards when called upon to do so by scientific and industrial laboratories. It was also necessary to continue to answer the great number of daily inquiries for authentic technical information on every conceivable subject within the Bureau's field. This is a service which every citizen of the country apparently believes he is entitled to receive from a Government bureau, irrespective of curtailment of supporting appropriations.

Faced with these and other services that had to be maintained, the burden of retrenchment fell still more heavily upon other important Bureau activities. The appropriation for the investigation of technical problems of mutual interest to the Government and to engineering societies and trade associations was cut to 12 percent of that for 1932. The semifactory scale work on levulose, undertaken to provide a basis for the possible development of a national sugar industry through the cultivation of artichokes, was discontinued. The laboratory for the investigation of the principles underlying the sensitivity of photographic emulsions was closed. The branch stations of the Bureau located at Columbus, Ohio, and at Tuscaloosa, Ala., were also closed. The master scale station near Chicago is being operated only 1 month during each quarter instead of continuously as heretofore. The commercial standards groups, including the Divisions of Building and Housing, Simplified Practice, Specifications, and Trade Standards, were reduced to a skeleton organization, with funds cut to about 12 percent of the 1932 appropriation.

These are only specific cases. The greater part of the reduction had to be met by a general curtailment of the scientific and technical research of the Bureau covering the development of new standards, the refinement of methods of measurement, and the determination of physical constants and the properties of materials.

The ability of a member of the Bureau staff to speak with authority in his particular field comes in large part from his intimate contact with his subject through his laboratory work. The opportunity to contribute through laboratory research to the advancement of knowledge in its particular field must not be denied to the Bureau if its prestige and authority are to be maintained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Retired pay: For retired pay of officers and employees engaged in the field service or on vessels of the Lighthouse Service, except persons continuously employed in district offices and shops, $480,510.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there have been rumors and statements in the press that possibly there may be an amalgamation of the Lighthouse Service with the Navy. Why the Navy Department should want the Light House Service I cannot imagine. The Lighthouse Service is one of the most efficient departments of the Federal Government. It is a civilian humanitarian service for the protection of life at sea along our cost. It is run in the interest of the commerce of the United States, and it ought to remain in the Department of Commerce. I want to protest against any possibility that the Lighthouse Service may be transferred to the Navy Department. [Applause.]

Mr. KVALE. May I ask the gentleman to broaden the scope of his resentment to include the proposed transfer of the Coast Guard?

Mr. BACON. I have made my protest against the transfer of the Coast Guard in no uncertain terms and have, with other Members of the House, made that protest to the President.

Mr. KVALE. I am very glad to hear that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mining experiment stations: For the employment of personal services, purchase of laboratory gloves, goggles, rubber boots and aprons, the purchase not to exceed $3,000, exchange as part payment for, maintenance and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in field work, and all other expenses in connection with the establishment, maintenance, and operation of mining experiment stations, as provided in the act authorizing additional mining experiment stations, approved March 3, 1915 (U.S.C., title 30, sec. 8), $127,036, of which amount not to exceed $11,800 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In the Lakes States one of the great industries is the mining of iron ore. It is one of the largest and most valuable industries in Minnesota, and the most vital problem which confronts the mining of iron ore in Minnesota is the mining, beneficiation, and transportation of low-grade ores, in order that the life of the activity may be prolonged through the use of those large deposits of low-grade ores which under existing conditions are not regarded as merchantable.

At Minneapolis in connection with the University of Minnesota is a United States mining experiment station. There has just come to me a communication from the director of the division of mines and minerals of the conservation department of Minnesota. The first paragraph of that letter is, in part, as follows:

The January issue of the Journal of the American Mining Congress carries an article, that, for the sake of economy, the United States Bureau of Mines discontinue the service of its research stations throughout the country and consolidate others. This plan would remove the Federal unit now at the University Mines Experimental Station * * *.

On page 22 of the committee report on this bill appears the following statement:

Committee approval is given to the estimates of the Bureau of Mines as submitted in the Budget. The amount recommended to be carried in the bill is $1,197,926, which is $316,374 under the 1934 appropriations.

The activities of this Bureau have been reduced nearly 40 percent. Approximately 200 employees were dismissed and 15 days administrative furlough imposed on those remaining. Nine of the 11 rescue cars have been laid up and emergency service in case of mine disaster is now being supplied by trucks equipped with rescue apparatus. The importance of the work of this Bureau is recognized by the committee and if it should later be found that any of the Bureau's essential activities cannot be efficiently carried on within the limits of the appropriations, we are sure that on a proper showing due consideration will be given thereto by the Bureau of the Budget.

I have asked for the privilege of the floor in order to inquire of the distinguished chairman of this committee, what effect, if any, the amount of this appropriation will have on the United States mining experiment station located in Minneapolis; and whether or not there is any plan to abolish that experiment station or to transfer it by consolidation or otherwise to some other city?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It is not the purpose of the committee to give any approval to the recommendations from which the gentleman read. In fact, we think that these mining stations are performing a very useful service. The gentleman will recall that the committee of its own volition called attention to the large reduction here and suggested that it might be carefully studied with a view of going over again with the Bureau of the Budget some of the elements, so that if they could not officially function within the limits of the appropriation here, the committee would feel friendly to any recommendation that the Budget might submit for an increase.

Mr. CHASE. Then, so far as the chairman knows, there is no plan contemplated now to abolish that United States experiment station at Minneapolis, to consolidate it with another, or to transfer it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The bill provides for continuing the experiment stations at Minneapolis and other places, and certainly it would be against the judgment of the committee reporting this bill and I think of the House to discontinue these stations.

Mr. CHASE. It would be against the opinion of the committee and against the gentleman's desires?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHASE. Gladly.

Mr. BACON. It might be well to include in the RECORD that Mr. Turner, head of the Bureau of Mines, states, page 294 of the hearings:

This appropriation provides funds for the investigative work carried on at the Bureau's experiment stations at Seattle, Wash.; Tucson, Ariz.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Rolla, Mo.; Tuscaloosa, Ala.; New Brunswick, N.J.; Salt Lake City, Utah; and Reno, Nev. This work comprises conservation of mineral resources, reduction of waste, and economic development in the mineral industries through improvement of methods for concentrating and treating ores and mineral products.

He states that this will provide for this service.

Mr. CHASE. I thank the distinguished gentleman.

While I have the floor, may I ask the Chairman one more question?

I quote from page 287 of the hearings, where Hon. Scott Turner, Director of the Bureau of Mines, says, in referring to the entire appropriation item for the Bureau of Mines:

The amount estimated to be available for salaries is over $80,000 short of enough to pay 100 percent salaries full time. This amount is equivalent to 24 days' furlough to all employees.

On page 295 Mr. Turner, referring to the mining experiment stations, continues:

In 1934 the cut of $75,784 was met by discharging 13 employees, practically eliminating travel, reducing supply allotments below the level for efficient work, and by requiring every employee to take 15 days' furlough. The further reduction of $3,924 will necessitate 24 days' furlough throughout the division.

On both sides of this aisle, regardless of partisan politics, there is the general feeling that underpaid Federal employees should have their wages restored to them in full. Here in this bill, as I understand it, there is returned 5 percent only to those employees whose salaries are covered by the appropriation item now under discussion, thus leaving a 10-percent cut. But on top of this 10-percent cut we are providing now for a 24-day payless furlough. That means an additional 15-percent cut on top of the 10-percent cut. Is there any way that this committee and the distinguished chairman can work out a plan so that we can treat these employees more fairly? Surely there is no reason for discrimination against them.

It is my recollection that when the University of Minnesota inaugurated its wage-reduction program, those employees drawing annual salaries of less than $1,200 were exempt. Yet employees of the United States experiment station, regardless of their annual wage, apparently are being subjected to a pay cut that in fact approximates 25 percent. Can the committee work out some plan so that these employees will not suffer more of a salary cut than 10 percent?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. There are some who prefer a furlough to being discharged. I do not think that there is any disposition to discriminate against the Bureau of Mines. The committee called attention to the large reduction and suggested it might well be gone over again by the Bureau of the Budget, and if it was found that the cut was too severe, supplemental estimates could be submitted by the Budget. I think it would be very well for the gentleman, knowing the subject as well as he does, to go over it carefully with the Director of the Bureau, and I will be very glad to consult with the gentleman relative to his apprehension lest insufficient funds are carried.

Mr. CHASE. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHASE] has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

None of the money herein or heretofore appropriated or authorized shall be used to make loans to any corporation with which the Postmaster General has made a contract for the carrying of mail under the provisions of the Merchant Marine Act of 1928, which contract has not been approved by the Comptroller General.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the paragraph just read, page 100, lines 6 to 11, as legislation on an appropriation bill. I think the chairman practically conceded that in his report.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think the gentleman's point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LOZIER). The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioners of conciliation: To enable the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority vested in him by section 8 of the act creating the Department of Labor (U.S.C., title 5, sec. 611) and to appoint commissioners of conciliation, traveling expenses, telegraph and telephone service, and not to exceed $14,635 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $185,630: Provided, That the salary paid to any commissioner of conciliation out of this appropriation shall not exceed $10 per day.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama: Page 102, line 19, strike out the colon and all language thereafter down to and including the word "day" on line 21.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such system, and for other purposes", approved June 6, 1933; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the United States Employment Service when specifically authorized by the Secretary of Labor; law books, books of reference and periodicals, printing and binding, supplies and equipment, telegraph and telephone service, and miscellaneous expenses, $1,590,000; of which amount not to exceed $135,000 shall be available for personal services in the department in the District of Columbia; and of such sum of $1,590,000 not more than $1,125,000 shall be apportioned to the States, and the remainder shall be available for all other purposes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understand the chairman of the committee intends to ask unanimous consent to return to this paragraph later?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be concluded, and that we then return to this section known as "United States Employment Service."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. CONNERY. Reserving the right to object, I understand the chairman will give us an opportunity to debate it?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 107, line 13, after the semicolon and before the word "rent", insert the following language: "personal service and".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES HOUSING CORPORATION

Salaries and expenses: For officers, clerks, and other employees, and for contingent and miscellaneous expenses, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including blank books, maps, stationery, file cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap, freight and express charges, communication service, travel expense, printing and binding not to exceed $150, and all other miscellaneous items and expenses not included in the foregoing and necessary to collect and account for the receipts from the sale of properties and the receipts from the operation of unsold properties of the United States Housing Corporation, the Bureau of Industrial Housing and Transportation, property commandeered by the United States through the Secretary of Labor, and to collect the amounts advanced to transportation facilities and others; for payment of special assessments and other utility, municipal, State, and county charges or assessments unpaid by purchasers, and which have been assessed against property in which the United States Housing Corporation has an interest, and to defray expenses incident to foreclosing mortgages, conducting sales under deeds of trusts, or reacquiring title or possession of real property under default proceeding, including attorney fees, witness fees, court costs, charges, and other miscellaneous expenses; for the maintenance and repair of houses, buildings, and improvements which are unsold; in all, $9,080: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $4,000 per annum, and only one person may be employed at that rate: Provided further, That no part of the appropriations heretofore made and available for expenditure by the United States Housing Corporation shall be expended for the purposes for which appropriations are made herein.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do so, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of giving credit where credit is due. When the Clerk shall have read two more lines the reading of this 109-page appropriation bill supplying annual funds for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor for the next fiscal year will have been completed. Then, with the discussion of a few yet undetermined amendments, the approval of this bill and amendments in the House will be a perfunctory matter, requiring only a few minutes.

To Members here who are unfamiliar with the method of framing this bill or with the extensive hearings upon which the amounts appropriated for the respective services are based, this will be merely the passage of just another appropriation bill. But to those of us who are familiar with the weeks of tedious hard work on it performed by our good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], chairman of the subcommittee in charge of it, and by the members of his subcommittee, it is the culmination of hard work ably, efficiently, and conscientiously performed. I cannot permit the reading of the bill to be concluded without asking the House to pause for a moment to commend our colleagues for arduous and important work well done.

There is not another Member of this Congress, House or Senate, who knows more about the intimate details of the business of these four Departments of government than our good friend, "BUCK" OLIVER of Alabama. He has been ably assisted in his work by our colleagues the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN], the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCMILLAN], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], and our two good friends from the minority, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], and the distinguished lady from California [Mrs. KAHN].

There is no telling how much money the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] has saved our Government during the years by cutting useless amounts from appropriations for these four Departments. No head of department or bureau chief has ever been a match for him. He always knows more about their business than they do, and they have never been able to put anything over on him. He knows where they are extravagant. He knows where they are wasteful. He knows when they are exceeding the limitations placed on them by law. He holds them in line.

While I am not in the good graces of the Washington Post, I am grateful to it for the deserved tribute it this morning paid to our friend from Alabama. I quote the following from this morning's issue of the Washington Post:

REPRESENTATIVE OLIVER, STAR AT ALABAMA

Impatiently awaiting a break in the weather and the return of balmy days is Congressman W. B. OLIVER, of Alabama, who rises with the dawn; former star athlete at the University of Alabama, where he was a catcher for the Crimson Tide's southern championship teams.

"BUCK" OLIVER left the University of Alabama with a record of never permitting a stolen base during his 4 years as varsity catcher for the Crimson Tide. He is an incurable baseball and football fan and follows avidly the week-to-week success of Alabama's famed football teams.

With a record of never having been opposed for his seat in the House since his first campaign, OLIVER is rounding out 20 years in Congress and has already filed his candidacy for the new term.

He is a prominent member of the Appropriations Committee, and chairman of the subcommittee on Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor. He is a frequent visitor to the White House on congressional affairs. The administration has no more enthusiastic supporter.

"BUCK" OLIVER is just as good behind the bat here in Congress for all America as he was for the "Crimson Tide" at the University of Alabama. They do not steal any bases on him here. He unerringly throws them out at all bases. His place here could hardly be filled by another. He is a most valuable public servant.

Every one of the many limitations and restrictions in this bill have been specially designed and put there by the gentleman from Alabama and his able subcommittee to safeguard and protect the Public Treasury. They keep the various funds from being improperly expended. They stop the waste. They stop the extravagance. I am sorry that our good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, saw fit to strike out one of these safeguarding limitations a while ago on a point of order. In the wide experience the Chairman has had in framing this bill year after year, and in his matchless wisdom, and the earnest desire he has to properly save the tax money of the people from wasteful spending, he placed that limitation in the bill to safeguard it. Of course, there is a way, which I am sure the gentleman from Alabama will pursue, to put this limitation back into the bill, and it will likely be put back before the bill finally becomes law.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] and our friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], who is the ranking minority member, and this efficient subcommittee, who framed this four-department bill, deserve the thanks and commendation of the entire Congress. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

This title may be cited as the "Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1935."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: Page 107, line 20, after the word "expenses", strike out "$1,590,000" and insert "$3,700,000."

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, when we passed the Wagner-Peyser bill at the last session, the House and Senate by that act authorized the appropriation of $4,000,000 over a period of 3 years. There was provided $1,500,000 for the first year, and for the following 3 fiscal years $4,000,000 for each year.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, EMPLOYMENT SERVICE,
Washington, February 2, 1934.

Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.,
Chairman Committee on Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN CONNERY: In answer to your specific request I beg to submit the following statements:

(1) The act creating the present United States Employment Service authorized an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the fiscal year 1934; and authorized an appropriation of $4,000,000 for each of the 3 succeeding fiscal years.

(2) This enabling act further provides that "75 percent of the amounts appropriated under this act shall be apportioned among the several States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population of the United States."

(3) The amount of the appropriation for the current fiscal year available for apportionment to the States is $1,125,000. The amount proposed to be appropriated by the present session of Congress for such purposes next year is the same amount. This is $1,875,000 less than the amount requested for distribution among the States, so far as concerns the fiscal year 1935.

(4) Budget estimates submitted by the United States Employment Service to the Bureau of the Budget have requested appropriations for the fiscal year 1935 aggregating $4,000,000. Of this total sum $3,000,000 was for distribution to the States. Of the additional $1,000,000, $789,000 was estimated for all other administrative purposes. The balance of $211,000 was proposed as a contingent fund for further aid to the States.

(5) In the President's Budget this estimated amount was reduced by $300,000, but without indication of where the cut should be made.

(6) The President's Budget as submitted to Congress recommended an appropriation of $3,700,000 for the United States Employment Service. This is the amount which we believe is necessary to properly carry on the activities of the service as outlined in the Wagner-Peyser Act.

Respectfully submitted.

W. FRANK PERSONS,
Director United States Employment Service.

Now, the Department of Labor, counting on this act which passed Congress and which appropriated $4,000,000 for the 3 years, made certain promises to the States. In other words, to keep faith with the States, we have put this appropriation up where the Budget asked that it be placed, at the figure of $3,700,000, of which $3,000,000 is to go to the States, $190,000 for personal expenditures in the District of Columbia, and the remainder for whatever other purposes may be necessary.

In asking the restoration of this amount to the $3,700,000 which the President asked, which the Secretary of Labor asked, and which the Bureau of the Budget asked, we are only going along on the lines of making a real employment service in cooperation with the States.

May I say further to the Membership that I have not been satisfied at all with the action of the Department of Labor, and particularly the Director of the Employment Service, in administering the provisions of this act as to the veterans. We made it very clear and distinct when the original Wagner-Peyser bill was before the Committee on Labor—in fact, we wrote in amendments in the Committee on Labor which went into the bill and were enacted into law—saying that wherever there was established an employment office there should also be a veterans' employment office. By that we did not mean there had to be two separate offices across the street from each other, one for veterans and the other for unemployed not veterans; but we meant that there should be a veteran appointed in each of these offices in charge of all veterans' employment; that if in the city of Topeka, Kans., for instance, there was established an employment office, that in that office there must be a veteran manager in addition to the other employment manager, and that the veteran's sole duty would be to get positions for veterans. The reason for this is plain, is patent, is simple, for a disabled veteran cannot get a position as easily as an able-bodied man not a veteran.

We want a veteran to work for his buddy. If the House sees fit to pass this amendment that I have offered, I want the Secretary of Labor to know and the Director of the Employment Service to know that it is the sense of this House that the veteran provisions already in the law must be interpreted correctly and not by someone's legal say-so in the Department of Labor, and that the sense of this House is that there is to be a veteran in charge of the veterans' offices who will get jobs for veterans and veterans alone. That is plain enough in the law, and we want the law enforced.

Mr. BACON. May I say to the gentleman that we have allowed every penny for the Veterans' Reemployment Service that the Labor Department asked for in this item. We have not cut this item one single penny.

Mr. CONNERY. I will say to the gentleman that I am not blaming his committee or saying the committee cut the veterans. But I do know that the Secretary of Labor asked for $3,700,000 and not $1,590,000.

Mr. BACON. A large part of the cut in this item is in connection with the service here in Washington. We did not wish to create a huge bureau here in Washington that is unwieldy. They have plenty of money in this appropriation to put into the States to take care of the Veterans' Employment Service and to take care of the Farm Replacement Service, but we have cut the force in Washington because we did not want to have an unwieldy force in Washington.

Mr. CONNERY. The committee did more than that, because of the $3,700,000, $3,000,000 goes to the States and $190,000 for personal services in the District, and the remainder for all other purposes, administration and everything else. The gentleman knows that the Secretary of Labor asked for $3,700,000.

Mr. BACON. We have given them every penny that they asked for for veterans' service and for the farm service. The cuts have come elsewhere.

Mr. CONNERY. The Secretary of Labor asked for $3,700,000 and you gave them $1,590,000.

Mr. BACON. Plus the $422,000 that has been appropriated and which they could not use this year. So that the total they will get is over $2,000,000.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In the various counties of the State of West Virginia they have not had a separate veterans' office, but they do require that the manager of the county office be a veteran. Do you believe that this carries out the letter of the law?

Mr. CONNERY. No; of course not. We made it plain that there was to be a veteran manager in the office as well as a manager in the office. Two managers—one a veteran to get jobs for veterans, the other a manager to get jobs for all who were not veterans. These provisions of the law clearly are being violated.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In view of the sentiment of the House, I would like to ask that the Committee now rise and that we take this matter up on Tuesday, at which time the gentleman will have 3 minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. In view of the lateness of the hour, I have no objection to doing that if the Committee wishes to rise now.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think it would be fairer to the gentleman.

Mr. CONNERY. I would be glad to do that. We will take it up on Tuesday?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the committee has by unanimous consent limited the debate on the only remaining paragraph of the bill to 40 minutes, 5 minutes of which have been consumed by the gentleman from Massachusetts. He will have 3 additional minutes when this bill is taken up again, and the balance of the time will be allocated to the gentlemen against the amendment.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman take note of the three who wish to speak for the amendment?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. KVALE, Mr. PEYSER, and Mr. GRISWOLD.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LOZIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 7513) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMEMORATION OF THE ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEATH OF GENERAL LAFAYETTE

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which I send to the desk.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, pending the reading of the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 26

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there is hereby established a special joint congressional committee to be composed of five Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, which shall make appropriate arrangements for the commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the death of General Lafayette, occurring on May 20, 1934.

SEC. 2. The committee shall select a chairman from among its members. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made. The committee shall cease to exist upon making its report as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. The committee is authorized to accept and make use of contributions for carrying out the purposes of this resolution and shall file with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives a report with respect to amounts so received and expended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from New York that before calling up this resolution I conferred with the minority leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Rules [Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts].

Mr. BACON. May I say to the gentleman that the minority leader simply asked me to ask the gentleman whether this would result in a charge on the Treasury?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Absolutely not.

Mr. BACON. The gentleman asked me to bring that out. I have no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], who was called home on account of the serious illness of her husband, is the sponsor of the resolution and gave assurance to the Committee on Rules that there would be no demand made for an appropriation in connection with this matter.

Mr. BACON. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL NEGOTIATIONS AND POLICIES

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. By direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 244

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the House of Representatives with the following information: (1) What war-debt payments have been made since March 4, 1933, by each nation in accordance with the official debt-funding settlements or agreements entered into? (2) What percentage does the sum paid since March 4, 1933, bear to the total amounts due under the official agreements? (3) What, if any, verbal or written assurance or agreement was entered into by the President to accept token payments from Great Britain, Italy, Czechoslovakia, or any other nation? (4) What steps have been taken to induce France, Belgium, or any other defaulting nations to fulfill their obligations in accordance with terms and provisions of the World War debt-funding agreements approved by the Congress? (5) What, if any, verbal or written understanding, assurance, or agreement has been entered into by the present administration offering to accept a reduction in the payment of principal or interest, or both, on any of the war debts since the joint resolution adopted by the Congress, approved December 23, 1931, expressly declaring against further reduction or cancelation of war debts? (6) What, if any, verbal or written assurances have been given or negotiations entered into by the present administration with any foreign nation regarding tariff concessions or trade agreements in respect to war-debt payments?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report accompanying the resolution be read. It is very brief.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the report as follows:

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following adverse report (to accompany H.Res. 244):

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the resolution (H.Res. 244) to request the President of the United States, if not incompatible with public interest, to furnish the House of Representatives certain information with respect to matters relating to international negotiations and policies, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I present another privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 245

Whereas the Congress of the United States adopted a joint resolution which was approved December 23, 1931, declaring its policy to be against cancelation or further reduction of the war debts; and

Whereas installment payments will come due in June 1934; and

Whereas there is much misunderstanding in this country regarding the nonpayment of war debts by certain nations and the so-called "token payments" by others, which may lead to strained relations between the United States and these nations; and

Whereas a continuation of the policy of repudiation of the World War debt funding agreements will tend to "furnish a subject of unpleasant discussion and possible collision" (words quoted from the message sent to Congress in 1829 by Andrew Jackson regarding nonpayment of spoliation claims by France); and

Whereas American public opinion has become exasperated over the continued nonpayment of war debts by defaulting nations, including France with whom the United States made an unprecedented and generous settlement by only asking for the payment of a sum of money equal to that which we loaned her for relief purposes after the armistice had been signed; and

Whereas the passage of the gold devaluation bill has automatically further reduced the war debts by 40 percent: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the House of Representatives with the following information: (1) What war-debt payments have been made since March 4, 1933, by each nation in accordance with the official debt-funding settlements or agreements entered into; (2) what percentage does the sum paid since March 4, 1933, bear to the total amounts due under the official agreements; (3) what, if any, verbal or written assurance or agreement was entered into by the President to accept token payments from Great Britain, Italy, Czechoslovakia, or any other nation; (4) what steps have been taken to induce France, Belgium, or any other defaulting nations to fulfill their obligations in accordance with terms and provisions of the World War debt funding agreements approved by the Congress; (5) what, if any, verbal or written understanding, assurance, or agreement has been entered into by the present administration offering to accept a reduction in the payment of principal or interest, or both, on any of the war debts since the joint resolution adopted by the Congress, approved December 23, 1931, expressly declaring against further reduction or cancelation of war debts; (6) what, if any, verbal or written assurances have been given or negotiations entered into by the present administration with any foreign nation regarding tariff concessions or trade agreements in respect to war-debt payments.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the report on this resolution is the same as that on the other one, and I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. BLANTON. Before the gentleman does that, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Allowing these resolutions to be tabled is no indication of any change of sentiment by the Congress with respect to the war debts?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Certainly not.

Mr. BLANTON. And it is no indication of any sentiment in the Ways and Means Committee that would in any way go contrary to the position taken by the Congress with respect to war debts?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I think not.

Mr. BLANTON. Because if it were, I for one would not permit these resolutions to be passed upon so hurriedly and tabled by unanimous consent, because my position on the war debts is just exactly the same as it was when Congress expressed its sentiment at the time named in the resolutions. It has not changed one bit, and I do not think the sentiment of the Congress has changed. I want to see those debts paid by all foreign countries. I think the position of the great majority of the Members of this House, as well as of the Senate, is exactly the same as the position taken when the Congress last expressed itself. These foreign debts due the United States are debts of honor. This Congress has uncompromisingly insisted that they should be paid. This Congress has expressed itself against any cancelation.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this does not affect that question at all. These resolutions simply called for certain information, and I call attention to the fact that on page 1546 of the RECORD there is a considerable part of substantially the same information called for under a Senate resolution. The information was furnished and will be found on that page of the RECORD. Therefore the Committee on Ways and Means thought there was no necessity for requesting further information of substantially the same character as had already been furnished.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all I wanted to know and to have distinctly understood. I desired to prevent any misinterpretation of this action. Europe must understand that sooner or later these sacred debts of honor must be paid the United States.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. For a question; yes.

Mr. KVALE. Is it the purpose in bringing in these resolutions and then moving to table them, to destroy the privileged status which they would have at the end of the 8-day period?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The resolutions have been referred to the committee and the committee has acted on them, and I am now submitting the report of the committee.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman tell me the author of the resolutions?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is the author of both of them.

Mr. KVALE. Was the gentleman given a hearing before the committee or did the committee act in executive session?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The committee acted on them and no hearing was held. So far as I know the gentleman did not request a hearing.

I move that the resolution be laid on the table, Mr. Speaker.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks I made this afternoon by including therein a letter from the Director of the Employment Service of the Department of Labor, Mr. Persons.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members who spoke in Committee of the Whole this afternoon on the appropriation bill for the four Departments be allowed to revise and extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

COMPREHENSIVE PLANS FOR FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a resolution I introduced today requesting recommendations from the President on a comprehensive flood-control plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, among the first in rank of vital and important problems, national in scope and character, pending before the present Congress, are those relating to flood control; improvement for navigation; conservation of natural resources; irrigation and reclamation and elimination of marginal lands for improvement to agriculture; power development and related uses thereof.

Many bills have been introduced and are now pending before committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate for a solution of these problems, all of which in a general way seek to accomplish the same purpose, but as separate and disconnected projects.

Among the legislative measures referred to are many seeking the establishment of certain authorities covering streams and watersheds in every section of the United States.

It is apparent that such an undertaking, fundamental in a definite policy for industrial progress and prosperity and a better balanced national life, should be under one directing authority, and that Congress should by legislation provide for the necessary agencies for planning and executing the projects essential to this national undertaking, to the end that a uniform, consistent, and coordinated policy may be established.

Under the provisions of section 10 of the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, and House Document No. 308 of the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, the Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers, has caused surveys to be made, collected data, and compiled information that may insure speedy undertaking for execution of a major portion of the worthy projects embraced within this national policy. The same Government agency can supply the Congress with the additional information that may be required.

THE UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] on the subject of the post office and post roads, made over the radio a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address of the Honorable CLYDE KELLY, of Pennsylvania, member of the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, January 18, 1934:

Friends of the radio audience, on other occasions I have talked on this program on such subjects as the parcel post, the Air Mail Service, the postal deficit, and congressional legislation. Today I want to use these few minutes in emphasizing to you the human feature of the great United States Postal Service.

The post office is no automatic, mechanical system such as many industries are fast becoming. We are making robots which can do many amazing things. But all our genius will never produce a robot which can read the addresses on letters and post cards and newspapers.

The Postal Service has always been a human institution. It always will be. It depends not on wheels and levers but on the minds and hands of men and women. Across the continent in every city and hamlet and countryside are these human links in the mightiest chain of service established by any people at any time.

Let me call to your minds a group largely forgotten yet not the least important. The postal substitutes are the apprentices of the service, indispensable to its efficient and continuous operation. They have successfully passed the regular civil-service examinations for postions as post-office clerk, city letter carrier, or railway postal clerk. They have been named as substitutes to await vacancies in the regular grades. In the meantime they perform such duties as may be needed at an hourly rate of pay for the actual hours of employment. Their welfare depends upon the amount of work given them and the promptness of promotion to a regular position.

For 3 years they have been victims of abnormal conditions. Their chance to secure work has been greatly reduced by cutting down service and by reduced volume of mail. Their chance for a regular position has been taken away by the so-called "economy law", which prevented the filling of vacancies in the regular service. Substitutes in the past year, married men with families many of them, have had incomes of $6 a week. From even this pittance pay a deduction of 15 percent was made.

Special-delivery messengers form another group suffering greatly under present conditions. They are required to furnish their own transportation, and their pay comes from fees paid on special-delivery letters. Fifteen percent is deducted from their meager incomes.

At this time, when the Government appeals to every private-industry employer to fix minimum wages below which no worker shall go, it is inconsistent and unjust to have no standard whatever for these faithful groups within the Postal Service. The best thing to help the recovery program would be to put the blue eagle over the post offices of the United States.

That would mean a minimum wage with shorter hours. It would mean the restoration of the 15-percent pay cut for every postal employee. It would mean continuation of the promotions which are an important feature of postal employment. It would mean better service as an example and encouragement to hard-pressed business men.

The additional dollars necessary would go out as good red blood into every commercial artery. It would be spent not once but many times. It would go to the grocer, to the wholesaler, to the manufacturer, and to the farmer. Increased purchasing power is the only cure for the depression. It is the only road to recovery.

The Postal Service comes closer to the people than any other Department of Government. Yet we all accept it as a matter of course, like the air and the sunshine. I wish the American people would visualize this great service as a fraternity of faithful public servants who have transferred their brain and muscle into an institution which has become part of themselves. If you would get that mental picture, some of these present privations in postal employment would soon disappear.

I leave that thought with you. Your Postal Service is 300,000 American men and women engaged in everlasting teamwork for your benefit. This Service has traced every mile in America. It is helping every family in all the land. Every American should use it to the fullest extent, thus increasing its value. One way to speed the recovery for which we all work and pray is to make the United States Post Office in still greater degree a service institution of the people, by the people, for the people.

SHALL PUBLIC SCHOOLS BE CLOSED

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the emergency relief act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of the bill making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, I propose to offer the following amendment:

On page 2, line 9, after the word "designate", insert the following: ", and such Administrator shall allot $50,000,000 of the appropriation made in this act to the several States and Territories to supplement such funds as may be available in such States and Territories for educational purposes."

The reason this appropriation is needed is too well known to require extended argument.

The free public school of America is actually passing in many localities in this country. In many places where the schools are being kept open, the teachers are the martyrs who are making the sacrifice. Thousands of teachers will receive less than $300 for this year's services, if they are paid at all. And the children, of course, are likewise sufferers. The school term has been shortened to an alarming degree in far too many places, and some of the most important elements of the school curriculum have been dropped. We are confronted with a serious national emergency.

On the one hand, the N.R.A. has said there shall be no more child labor; they must return to school. On the other hand, our States cannot run their schools; they simply have not the money to do so. Tax delinquencies, limited resources, nonmarketable commercial paper have forced States, cities, and school districts to close school. So what is to happen to our children? I said on the floor of the House last year—and I repeat it now—"Our children are citizens of the United States of America, and from the United States of America they have a right to look for help." The Civil Works Administration has already created jobs into which to put workers. While we are delighted to have that done so as to give men and women a chance to earn a living, I feel that the education of the youth of the country is of equal importance, and that the poverty of the States does not justify us in refusing to recognize this responsibility.

I was asked by representatives of the great organizations of women and of labor to help save our schools.

They know what closed schools mean. Children without schools today are not going to develop into the best citizens tomorrow.

I am delighted that there is a man in the White House who places the preservation of human life above the preservation of legalistic formalities. I am delighted that from our President has come the request that additional funds be appropriated for continuing relief measures.

In keeping with the spirit and the letter of President Roosevelt's magnanimous guidance I am asking that a relatively small proportion of these funds to be appropriated be set aside for immediate school relief, and I am sure this House will support me in my effort.

THE DAIRY SITUATION IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a short letter from the Wisconsin Dairymen's Association, with a letter appended from them to the Secretary of Agriculture, Henry Wallace, on the dairy situation in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

WISCONSIN DAIRYMEN'S ASSOCIATION,
Fort Atkinson, Wis., January 22, 1934.

Representative C. W. HENNEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE HENNEY: We feel that you should be interested in the letter the Wisconsin Dairymen's Association recently wrote the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture.

A copy is enclosed for your study.

You probably realize, as we do, that every farm-relief measure, with the possible exception of the farm-mortgage program, has worked a positive hardship on the Wisconsin dairymen. The contemplated dairy-control program shows every evidence of a lack of understanding of the dairy business and we feel it the duty of our organization, the oldest dairy organization in this State, to forcefully bring this word to the attention of the powers that be.

A booklet prepared for distribution to business men in our State is also enclosed.

Very truly yours,

WISCONSIN DAIRYMEN'S ASSOCIATION,
J. C. NISBET, Secretary.

JANUARY 19, 1934.

Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: From scanty news releases we learn that an allotment plan for the dairy industry is in the making and that a 5-cent processing tax on all butter fat will be levied.

We register a protest in the interest of the dairy farmer of Wisconsin.

The processing tax of 5 cents per pound of fat levied on the farmer delivering to a creamery, cheese factory, or condensery will impose a tax of about 25 percent on his product. The same 5-cent processing tax on the farmer whose product goes into fluid milk amounts to a tax of about 9 percent on his product going into class 1 milk. This tax is discriminatory and against the interests of 90 percent of the dairy farmers of this State. If a processing tax is inevitable, in your opinion, may we suggest that in fairness to all producers this tax shall be levied as a percentage of the price received for butter fat rather than as a flat tax irrespective of market.

From our meager news reports we feel the Froker plan may be your new basis of an allotment program. May we relate that if long association with cows, with men who milk cows, and with the activities of the dairy industry form a basis for intelligent opinion, we would pronounce the Froker plan cumbersome and unworkable. Figures taken from a dairy farm, where there has been no conscious attempt to vary production, show a difference of 25 percent in the actual butter fat produced by the same number of cows in 2 successive years. Breeding difficulties, varying quantity and quality of feed, percent of heifers in the herd, cows sold for dairy and culling purposes, as well as disease and countless other causes, result in such variations as would make an allotment very hazardous for the dairy farmer.

We should like to repeat part of the letter from the Wisconsin Dairymen's Association mailed to you September 19, 1933:

"Dairy farmers hold the biggest stake in the future as it may be influenced by the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Wisconsin farmers will be sharply affected by the administration of the dairy section of that act.

"Because of the importance of the dairy industry to this State and because of the acute situation caused by the artificial misalinement of this industry with competing groups, we urge upon you the deep consideration of the following 5-point program:

"(1) Indemnity on all milk cows sent to the butcher, including diseased cows and cows positive to Bang's disease.

"(2) Additional indemnity for all cows culled as low producers by regularly organized cow-testing activities as advocated in Hoard's Dairyman program.

"(3) Agreements with those who benefit by either of the above to curtail the raising of heifer calves.

"(4) Subsidizing of cow-testing associations to promote greater efficiency in dairy production.

"(5) Representation by Wisconsin on all boards and consultant groups dealing with activities pertaining to the dairy section of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration."

What consideration this plan was shown we have no way of knowing. The facts tend to show that other proposals receiving preference have worked to the positive detriment of the Wisconsin dairymen.

The facts we would refer to are that for the first half of the year 1933 storage figures showed no tendency toward surplus production. During the last 6 months of 1933 storage of butter jumped 50,000,000 pounds over last year and consumption decreases made up the grand total of 89,000,000 more pounds of butter in storage January 1, 1934, than on the same date a year ago.

Subtracting the butter purchased and to be purchased under Government order, and which we are told will be donated to poor relief and charged to the dairy farmer, storage January 1, 1934, is 141 percent in excess of a year ago.

Dairying is our livelihood in Wisconsin. We forcefully bring this fact to your attention.

Sincerely,

WISCONSIN DAIRYMEN'S ASSOCIATION,
J. C. NISBET, Secretary.

THE FARMERS' PLOW-UP PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a short editorial and some statistics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, ever since the plow-up campaign was inaugurated last spring under the Agricultural Adjustment Act as passed by the last Congress much propaganda has gone out over the country to the effect that cotton, corn, and wheat farmers wasted the money they received for cooperating with the Government in its efforts to reduce farm surpluses and thereby help restore a measure of prosperity to the farmers of America.

Although it was a new and untried field and many injustices were permitted under its operation, it is conceded by all informed persons that the plow-up campaign was a godsend, especially to the cotton farmer in the South, and it is absurd to say that the average farmer sluffed off the money he received or spent it in riotous living. On the other hand, I know the people of the Sixth Congressional District of Oklahoma, whom I have the privilege and the honor of representing in Congress, and who received checks under the so-called "plow-up" program, spent their money with extreme caution. In most cases the checks they received from the Government went to pay pressing debts and buy the urgent necessities of life. In support of this statement, I desire to insert at this point an editorial that I have clipped from the Daily Express, published at Chickasha, Okla., in which are quoted some very interesting facts:

HOW THE PLOW-UP MONEY WENT

What did Oklahoma cotton planters do with the plow-up money which they received from Uncle Sam? Interesting information on this subject is contained in letters which several hundred farmers wrote to the extension division of the State A. & M. College. In general, the answer is that the money which didn't go for debts and taxes was spent for things which the farmers had been doing without during the tough years. In other words, it went into the channels of trade to accelerate industry, thus benefiting all kinds of business. To get a more definite picture of how the money went read some extracts from the farmers' letters:

"I paid my taxes, * * * interest on land note, * * * then I bought a grain drill for $128 and a hayrake for $38. I bought some furniture for my house, and painted it inside, $65. I paid $5.60 for drugs, $2.60 for going to the show, $28.30 for tires and car repairs, $18.70 for coal, $32.80 for groceries, and $10 for hay and feed", wrote a farmer at Altus.

"Notes that the banks thought they would not collect are being paid", wrote a farmer at Carnegie, and continued: "Some farmers in my township were badly in need of clothes and are buying clothes for their families and other necessities of life. There are a very few farmers that are improving their homes. They are paying their old debts, back taxes, and buying clothes for their families first."

At Wapanucka the money was a great help to one farmer who had been sick through August and September. "The money came while I was in bed", he said. His part of it was used to "buy the things necessary to live on in the way of groceries and clothes and for medicine", and it paid the premium on his life insurance.

From McClain County, Julian M. Dyer, county agent, wrote: "One farmer called at this office for his check with clothes practically torn from his body, his bare knees and elbows shining through the holes, and his toes sticking out through his shoes, and his hair showing through the top of his hat. He cashed his check, paid off his mortgage at the bank, and went immediately to the dry-goods store, where he bought a shirt and a pair of overalls. A merchant suggested that he needed a pair of shoes, but received the reply that he had gone barefooted so long that he had gotten used to it."

"The $56 I got paid a $28 debt", wrote a Coleman, Okla., farmer. "Then Gracie, Bill, and I bought a few clothes."

The farmer at Foss, Okla., who wrote, after telling how he paid several hundred dollars in debts, that "I gave the church $31", was not the only one who remembered religious duties. He also "gave the family $50 for some of their needs."

"I am a widow with three children to clothe, feed, and send to school", came one letter from Hollis, Okla. "I plowed up 20 acres of cotton. I get half of what I make. I paid my grocery bill, bought school books, and I used the money for what we just had to have. * * * I paid a few debts. I use what little money I make to live on."

From Hydro, Okla., a farmer related this: "We have a family living across the road from us that started renting this year and he bought his teams and implements on time and paid for them out of the money he received from the cotton that he plowed up. Without this he would have hauled in a bale of cotton at a time and would have lived that up as fast as he got it and left his debts unpaid."

A Mangum merchant reported this to County Agent Ira J. Hollar: "A man, wife, and seven children came in and bought a complete change of clothes for the family. They did not have enough clothes to go to the field to work. Seventy-five percent of the clothing sold to farmers with cotton checks went for work clothes. My business has taken a 140-percent increase in October compared with October 1932."

A lumber dealer there reported that one man paid off a $40 note and bought $75 worth of material to repair his home. Another used his plow-up check of $386 to remodel his home. A hardware dealer reported that stoves and articles such as pressure cookers were sold mostly—pressure cookers which enable the farm wife to can the family's winter meat and vegetables selling four times more rapidly than in October 1932.

THE MONETARY QUESTION

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and insert therein a letter from the Wall Street Journal dealing with the monetary question, and a reply by the Honorable W. A. Moody, of St. Louis, Mo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following letter from the Wall Street Journal dealing with the monetary question and a reply by the Honorable W. A. Moody, of St. Louis, Mo. I take pleasure in calling your attention to the reply:

(Will you accept the enclosed genuine German Reichsbank note with our compliments?)

DEAR SIR: If the enclosed German Reichsbank note, once worth a great deal of money, now pays for 1 minute of your time, please consider yourself engaged.

Yes, it's a real Reichsbank note, put out by the German Government. Before the war 100,000 marks were worth $23,820 in our money. But eventually it took a trillion marks to get a mark worth 24 cents in gold.

That is what uncontrolled inflation did to German money. As fast as new marks were circulated the old ones dropped in value, until a man's only chance to get ahead lay in putting his money into goods or real estate or securities, just as fast as he could lay hands upon it.

Even with inflation under perfect control, managed currency, or the commodity dollar, the value of money is bound to drop, while commodities and common stocks and real estate will go up in value.

The question is—where will the profits be the greatest? And what effect will inflation have upon various lines of industry?

That is where the Wall Street Journal can be of genuine help to you. Its facts are not merely timely, but they are derived from original sources, and their accuracy can be depended upon. But that isn't all. The facts it brings to you each day are interpreted from the standpoint of the investor, and even more from that of the business man, enabling you to invest your money or to plan your business with understanding and foresight.

The Wall Street Journal is the authority for newspapers, economists, market services, and countless statisticians. Yet the information for which you pay them high fees is just as basically available to you in the pages of the daily Wall Street Journal as it is to them.

The enclosed card entitles you to the next 60 issues of the Wall Street Journal for $3. Not only that, but it brings it subject to free examination of the first few copies. If these do not make clear to you the business trend, if they do not show you every phase of business and financial activity, just tell us to cancel and you will be out nothing.

Try it. Let us send you accurate news from the very heart of the financial center of the country now, when that news may be worth more to you than ever in your lifetime. Just mail the enclosed card today.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD M. STEIN,
Circulation Manager.

JANUARY 27, 1934.

Mr. E. M. STEIN,
Care of Wall Street Journal,
New York, N.Y.

DEAR SIR: Just received your communication, with enclosure, for which please accept thanks. The enclosed genuine German Reichsbank is indeed a very forcible illustration of the evils of uncontrolled inflation. However, I am not impressed by your argument which implies that our Government is rapidly approaching a similar catastrophe.

I do not think you are justified in assuming that this Government will follow in the footsteps of Germany. Conditions are entirely different. Germany had for 4 years carried on a most destructive and unsuccessful war. The Government and her people were completely exhausted, a condition which does not exist here. In fact, had you been entirely fair and free from bias, you would have compared our attempts to devalue the dollar with some nation where conditions were more similar, where the efforts to inflate the currency have resulted successfully.

I have absolutely no fear that Mr. Roosevelt will abuse the power granted him by Congress. His place in history will be determined by the success or failure of his monetary policy, and to assume that he would deliberately lend aid or permit a policy which would compare with the German debasement of her money would be equivalent to admitting that the President is either devoid of ambition or is a plain simpleton. I submit that his entire public life does not warrant you in assuming that he is either.

In your communication you say that "even with inflation under perfect control, managed currency or the commodity dollar, the value of money is bound to drop, while commodities and common stocks and real estate will go up in value." I fully agree with that statement, and that is why I favor the Roosevelt plan. Gold has never circulated, and the President's plan simply recognizes this fact, and rightfully places it in the vaults of the Treasury, where it belongs. For your information I will say that I have no outstanding obligations, and am therefore not attempting to repudiate any debts.

I am actuated wholly by a desire to see commodities and real estate go up, and you admit that will be the result of the President's plan. At the present time land has little value, and cattle, hogs, poultry, and dairy products are selling far below the cost of production. This being admittedly true, I can see no possible way for the Nation to become prosperous except by an increase in value of these basic commodities.

I distinctly remember the disastrous effects of the deflation following the war, and farmers have never completely recovered from that mistaken policy brought about by those whom you serve. You could find plenty of worthless bonds with perhaps no more value than the German marks you sent me. These bonds, not counted by millions but by billions, were sold to trusting customers of those Wall Street bankers you so ably represent. If you ever warned me or anyone of this gigantic fraud, I am not aware of the fact.

I desire to call your attention to the fact that this depression was largely the result of credit inflation, and I do not recall that the Wall Street Journal ever warned the public of the dangers of over credit inflation. This credit inflation was neither managed nor controlled but was permitted to run wild with the explicit endorsement of the then President of the United States. Perhaps, if you would make an effort, you could find tangible evidence of the evils of credit inflation as exemplified by the disastrous results of the fall of 1929. This uncontrolled credit inflation was fostered by Wall Street and made possible by their use of other people's money.

Allow me to suggest that, in my humble opinion, communications such as yours, exhibiting worthless marks are doing more to retard progress than perhaps any other of the many selfish plans to destroy the courageous efforts of the President to restore progress. If successful, he will shackle Wall Street and create prosperity along lines which will in the future insure a more equal distribution of the wealth of the Nation; and this fact is, in my opinion, the true reason for frantic efforts, such as yours, to scare the business public by exhibiting worthless marks.

Your unjustified fright about uncontrolled currency is perhaps heightened by the fact that we now have a President who recognizes the Government's responsibility to the average citizen and also to the citizens who are in distress. He is more anxious to take care of the unemployed than he is in looking after the interests of those who have for years gambled with other people's money. The Morgans, Wiggins, Mitchells, and Loebs have proven that they, when left unexposed, did not hesitate to resort to the most unethical methods to protect a favored few while fleecing their trusting patrons.

A careful perusal of the above will, I am sure, explain to you why I am not enclosing the $3 you request that I send you.

With the very kindest personal regards, I remain,

Most respectfully,

W. A. MOODY.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. KEE, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence, for 4 days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WARREN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. This is the second session of the Seventy-third Congress. At the first session the Private Calendar was never called. There are about 12 or 15 pages of cases on the calendar reported out by the committee, and I am wondering when the House is going to give an opportunity to call that calendar.

Mr. BYRNS. I have answered that before. If the tax bill is not taken up next week, we may give 1 or 2 days to the Private Calendar. If the tax bill should be reported and it is necessary to consider that, we hope to consider the Private Calendar soon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J.Res. 250. Joint resolution to provide appropriations to carry into effect the act entitled "An act to control the manufacture, transportation, possession, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia", approved January 24, 1934.

ADJOURNMENT

On motion of Mr. BYRNS (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p.m.), the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, February 5, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

336. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1934, to remain available until June 30, 1935, in the sum of $75,000 for the purpose of securing foreign plant material for use in soil erosion control work (H.Doc. No. 235); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

337. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1934, to remain available until June 30, 1935, amounting to $2,354,893, for cooperative control of an anticipated outbreak of grasshoppers which threatens serious crop damage in the States of Idaho, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wisconsin, and Wyoming (H.Doc. No. 236); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

338. A letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting for reference to the committee having jurisdiction, a letter from Dr. John J. Casey, contestant in the contested-election case of John J. Casey v. C. Murray Turpin from the Twelfth Congressional District of the State of Pennsylvania to the Seventy-third Congress (H.Doc. No. 237); to the Committee on Elections No. 3 and ordered to be printed.

339. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a bill for the relief of James Slevin, of Island Park, Long Island, N.Y., with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1934

Rev. Harry Lee Doll, assistant rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

O God of light and truth, before whom all that is hollow and unreal shrivels up and is consumed away, hear our prayer for vision to discern Thy truth, Thy purpose, Thy will. Thou hast set in our hearts the dream of a life of purity, beauty, and love. Let us never be content with the second best, but so ardently to desire, wisely to study, and rightly to understand that we may obtain the fullness of that which pleaseth Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

JESSE H. METCALF, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, appeared in his seat today.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Friday, February 2, 1934, when, on motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 26) for appointment of a special congressional committee to make appropriate arrangements for the commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the death of General Lafayette, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair designates the Senator from Utah (Mr. KING) to read Washington's Farewell Address on the 22d instant, under the order of the Senate of January 24, 1901.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation establishing a 30-hour week and a living wage

Whereas unemployment, not only during the economic depression but in normal times, has become a serious problem; and

Whereas economic prosperity in a land of plenty cannot be accomplished when millions of men and women are out of employment, many of whom are compelled to live on public and private charity; and

Whereas these millions of our unemployed people are ready and able and eager to work but cannot secure the opportunity to do so, while millions of others are working long hours; and

Whereas the economic depression has clearly established that in order to distribute labor among the many and increase the purchasing power of the working people, legislation establishing a shorter week and a living wage is necessary; and

Whereas a 30-hour week would put millions of our unemployed people back to work, and assurance of a living wage would develop buying power among the great mass of our people: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation providing for a 30-hour week and establishing a living wage for the workers of this country in accordance with findings made from time to time by the United States Department of Labor; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, January 29, 1934.

By Mr. Palmer

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has imposed a tax upon all sales of gasoline; and

Whereas the State of New York and the other several States of the United States have already imposed taxes upon such sales; and

Whereas the Federal tax on such sales is untimely and prohibitive, and, coupled with the respective State taxes on such sales, places a burden upon the users of gasoline beyond that which they should carry and beyond that which the traffic can legitimately bear; and

Whereas the taxation of sales of gasoline should properly be left to the exclusive use of the States as a means of providing funds for road construction and maintenance and unemployment relief projects: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Congress of the United States be and it is hereby respectfully memorialized to enact with all convenient speed such legislation as may be necessary to abolish the Federal gasoline sales tax and to surrender to the States exclusively the power to tax such sales in the future; and be it further

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the United States Senate, and to each Member of Congress elected from the State of New York, and that the latter be urged to use their best offices to procure the enactment of such legislation as will accomplish the purposes of this resolution.

By order of the senate.

MARGUERITE O'CONNELL, Clerk.

IN ASSEMBLY,
January 30, 1934.

Concurred in without amendment. By order of the assembly.
FRED W. HAMMOND, Clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the petition of Chester A. Shewalter, of Flint, Mich., praying for the prompt passage of legislation providing a separate nationalist money medium of exchange based upon the American silver dollar and reinforced by the American greenback upon the basic ratio of 21 to 1, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Z. G. Clevenger, director of athletics of the University of Indiana, Bloomington, Ind., praying for the repeal of the admissions tax levied on colleges and universities in connection with athletic events where the admission is more than 40 cents, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the directors of the Ellsworth (Maine) Chamber of Commerce, indorsing the proposal for a fitting and dignified gateway or entrance to Acadia National Park and Mount Desert Island, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also laid before the Senate the memorial of Franklin Little Branch of the International Labor Defense, Phoenix, Ariz., remonstrating against reducing the hours of labor on C.W.A. work in Arizona, with the resulting cut in pay; the alleged discrimination practiced against Mexican and Negro workers in the State of Arizona; the alleged attempt to speed up work, and other abuses against workers; the "firing" of workers for organizing in unions of their choice, and any attempt to stop the C.W.A. projects, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FESS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Ohio (being producers and sellers of milk and other farm products in the southwestern part of the State) remonstrating against the adoption of certain provisions of the code for the trucking industry as proposed by the American Trucking Association, Inc., which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution adopted by Baltimore (Md.) Chapter, No. 1, Disabled American Veterans of the World War, favoring modification of regulations adversely affecting the pensions of disabled World War veterans who are also carried on Federal pay rolls, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, being Federal employees, praying for the passage of legislation, sponsored by the American Federation of Labor and the American Federation of Government Employees, to immediately abolish the 15-percent pay cut, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a memorial, signed by sundry citizens of Brooklyn and vicinity, in the State of New York, endorsing the resolution (S.Res. 154) opposing alleged discriminations against Jews in Germany (submitted by Mr. TYDINGS on January 24, 1934), and also remonstrating against the treatment of Jews in Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—EXCISE TAX UPON EMPLOYERS

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference to the appropriate committee, and I further ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bill may be printed in the RECORD, together with the bill.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2616) to raise revenue by levying an excise tax upon employers, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance, and, with the explanatory statement, above referred to, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

SECTION 1. Definitions: When used in this act the term "employer" shall mean any person, partnership, association, corporation, or the legal representative, trustee in bankruptcy, receiver, or trustee thereof, or the legal representative of a deceased person, who or whose agent or predecessor in interest has, within each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the taxable year, employed at least 10 persons in employment subject to this act, except that the term "employer" shall not include the Federal Government, the government of the several States, municipal corporations, or other governmental instrumentalities. In determining whether an employer employs enough persons to be an "employer" subject hereto, and in determining for what tax he is liable hereunder, he shall, whenever he contracts with any subcontractor for any work which is part of his usual trade, occupation, profession, or business, be deemed to employ all persons employed by such subcontractor on such work, and he alone shall be liable for the tax measured by wages paid to such persons for such work; except as any such subcontractor who would, in the absence of the foregoing provision, be liable to pay said tax accepts exclusive liability for said tax under an agreement with such employer made pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"Employment" shall mean any employment in which all or the greater part of the person's work is or was performed within the continental United States under any contract of hire, oral or written, express or implied, whether such person was hired and paid directly by the employer or through any other person employed by the employer, provided the employer had actual or constructive knowledge of such contract; except that for the purposes of this act it shall not include—

(1) Employment as an agricultural laborer.

(2) Employment in the domestic service of any family or person at his home.

(3) Employment as a teacher in any school, college, or university for the regular annual term for which such school, college, or university is in session.

(4) Employment as a physician, surgeon, interne, or nurse in a hospital, sanatorium, or other similar private endowed institution not operated for profit.

(5) Employment of a physically handicapped person by an institution financed largely by charitable donations and organized not for profit but primarily for the relief and rehabilitation of such handicapped persons.

(6) Employment of the father, mother, spouse, or minor child of the employer.

(7) Employment in the service of a common carrier subject to the provisions of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act of 1933 (48 Stat. 211).

(8) Any employment for which unemployment compensation shall have been provided directly by act of Congress.

"Pay roll" shall mean the total amount of all wages paid by the employer during the taxable year to persons employed by him in employment subject to this act, except that pay roll shall not include the wages paid to a person employed by the employer within such year on a minimum fixed salary basis of $250 or more for each month in which the person was thus employed.

"Wages" shall mean every form of remuneration for employment received by a person from his employer, whether paid directly or indirectly by the employer, including salaries, commissions, bonuses, and the reasonable money value of board, rent, housing, lodging, payments in kind, and similar advantages.

"State law" shall mean a statute enacted by any one of the several States providing for systematic compensation and the creation of an unemployment fund or funds.

"Contributions" shall mean the amount which the employer has paid for the taxable year to any unemployment fund to which he is required to contribute by or pursuant to a State law, but shall not include any amounts deducted from wages or contributed by employees.

"Unemployment fund" shall mean any unemployment compensation fund or reserve, or unemployment-insurance fund or reserve, or guaranteed-employment fund or reserve, to which the employer contributes pursuant to a State law, whether or not under such law other employers contribute to the same fund or reserve or to different or separate funds or reserves, and whether or not under such law the State and/or employees contribute to or supplement such fund or reserve: Provided, That such fund or reserve is available solely for the payment of compensation and of any State administrative costs chargeable thereto under the State law.

"Compensation" shall mean the cash benefits payable under a compulsory State law to employees for their unemployment; and shall also be deemed to include, as to any guaranteed employment plan complying with a State law, the wages guaranteed and payable to employees for certain workless hours under such plan.

"Employee", as used in this act, shall mean any employed person who is covered by a State law and/or may become eligible for compensation thereunder.

"State agency" shall mean the State labor department or other governmental agency designated or created under a State law to administer such law.

"Tax" shall mean the gross tax imposed on the employer for the taxable year under subsection (a) of section 2 of this act.

SEC. 2. Imposition of tax; allowable credits: (a) There shall be levied, assessed, and collected annually from every employer subject to this act, for the taxable year commencing July 1, 1935, and for each taxable year thereafter, an excise tax measured by an amount equal to 5 percent of the employer's pay roll as defined in section 1 of this act: Provided, That said tax shall be paid after the close of each taxable year and may be paid in quarterly installments, under suitable regulations promulgated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

(b) Any employer who has paid the contributions required of him under a State law duly certified under section 3 of this act may credit against the tax thus due the total of the two following amounts:

(1) The amount of contributions which he has actually paid during the taxable year under such State law; and

(2) The amount by which these paid contributions were less than his largest required contributions under such law in any previous taxable year: Provided, That—

(a) The amount thus determined shall, before being credited against tax, be reduced by the same percentage by which the employer's pay roll is less than his pay roll in such previous taxable year; and

(b) The employer's required contribution rate for the taxable year is less than the comparable rate for such previous taxable year, and that such reduction was permitted pursuant to provisions of such State law not inconsistent with subsection (f) of section 3 of this act; and

(c) The additional credit permitted under this subsection shall not be allowed an employer except where the unemployment fund to which such employer contributes under such State law has paid in full throughout the taxable year the compensation required under such law to be paid by such fund, without any reduction of compensation payments within the taxable year due to the inadequacy of such fund.

SEC. 3. Conditions for credit allowance: No credit specified in section 2 of this act shall be allowed for contributions under a State law, unless the Secretary of Labor has made a finding of fact within the taxable year that such State law conforms to the standards and conditions enumerated in subsections (a) to (j), inclusive, of this section and has certified such State law to the Secretary of the Treasury. Annually before the end of the taxable year the Secretary of Labor shall state and determine whether or not each State law conforms to said standards and conditions, and shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury each State law which—

(a) Provides for the systematic payment, to all unemployed persons eligible under such law, of cash compensation which shall be payable to them as a matter of right: Provided, That compensation rights and payments shall commence not more than 12 months after contributions begin under such law.

(b) Specifies the eligibility conditions which shall apply to the payment of compensation, including any uncompensated waiting period to be applied thereto, but does not require of any employee a probationary service period prior to benefit eligibility aggregating more than 10 calendar weeks of employment by any new employer; and provides for total unemployment benefits at a minimum rate which shall equal or exceed either $7 per week, or else the employee's average wage earnings for 20 hours of work; and provides for partial benefits at least equaling the amount by which the eligible employee's total benefits exceed his reduced wage earnings; and provides that the legal liability of such unemployment fund to pay compensation shall be limited at all times to the resources of such fund, including any contributions due or unpaid.

(c) Either permits all eligible employees to receive 10 or more full weeks of compensation within a year or less; or else adjusts the duration of compensation to employees in a direct and substantially uniform ratio to their employment within not more than the 5 years preceding their compensable unemployment, making at least some employees eligible to receive 15 or more full weeks of compensation within a year or less.

(d) Provides that compensation cannot be assigned or garnisheed and that no agreement by an employee to waive or reduce his right to compensation or any other right under such law shall be valid.

(e) Provides specifically that no otherwise eligible employee shall be barred from or denied compensation for refusing to accept new work under any of the following conditions: (1) If the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lock-out, or other labor dispute; (2) if the wages, hours, and other conditions of the work offered are substantially less favorable to the employee than those prevailing for similar work in the locality; (3) if acceptance of such employment would either require the employee to join a company union or would interfere with his joining or retaining membership in any bona fide labor organization.

(f) Requires from all employers subject thereto regular contributions, at a uniform rate applicable to all such employers for at least 12 months after commencement of contributions under such law, and also thereafter unless such law permits the rate of contributions subsequently to be reduced in respect to some but not all employers subject thereto, such reduction being in accordance with classification standards or other provisions designed to adjust the contributions of employers in accordance with the compensation experience of such employers and/or of the unemployment fund or funds to which they contribute: Provided, That no employer's contribution rate shall be reduced, unless the unemployment fund to which he contributes under such State law has paid in full throughout the preceding year the compensation required to be paid by such fund, and no reduction of compensation payments has been made within such preceding year due to the inadequacy of such fund.

(g) In case it permits an employer to guarantee work or wages to his employees, requires such employer to contribute at the rate otherwise applicable to him under such law to an unemployment fund from which he shall pay in whole or in part the compensation promised for guaranteed but workless hours and, in addition, to any employee whose guaranty is not renewed at least half the benefits otherwise payable to the employee under such law: Provided, That such employer's contribution rate may, under such law, be reduced consistently with the provisions of subsection (f) of this section.

(h) Prohibits every employer subject thereto from directly or indirectly insuring his liability to pay compensation in any private insurance company organized or operated for profit.

(i) Provides that every unemployment fund required thereunder shall either be held by an officer or agency of the State acting as custodian, or shall be held strictly in trust under such conditions approved by the State agency as will, in its judgment, assure the safety and liquid availability of such unemployment fund or funds: Provided, That where any law permits an employer of demonstrated financial strength to contribute to an unemployment fund in the form of an accounting reserve, such law shall require such employer to maintain with the State such a collateral deposit of securities approved by the State agency as shall at all times have a market value at least equal to the current total of such permitted unemployment fund or reserve.

(j) Provides for administration or supervision by a State agency, and provides adequate funds to finance administration and suitable penalties to secure enforcement of the law's provisions; and secures to each party in interest a right to the hearing and determination of any disputed compensation claim by an impartial administrative agency authorized by such law to decide such claims and to determine finally all questions of fact involved therein; and assures to employers and employees, through representation on advisory committees, an effective voice in the law's administration.

SEC. 4. Administration; refunds; and penalties: (a) The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe and publish all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

(b) Every employer liable for tax under this act shall make a return under oath within 1 month after the close of the year with respect to which such tax is imposed to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which is located his principal place of business, or, if he has no principal place of business in the United States, then to the collector of internal revenue at Baltimore, Md. Such return shall contain such information and be made in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulations prescribe. The tax shall, without assessment by the Commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector within 1 month after the close of the year with respect to which the tax is imposed. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest at the rate of 1 percent a month from the time when the tax became due until paid. All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1926 shall, insofar as not inconsistent with this act, be applicable in respect of the tax imposed by this act. The Commissioner may extend the time for filing the return of the tax imposed by this act, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but no such extension shall be for more than 60 days.

(c) Returns required to be filed for the purpose of the tax imposed by this act shall be open to inspection in the same manner, to the same extent, and subject to the same provisions of law as returns made under title II of the Revenue Act of 1926.

(d) The taxpayer may elect to pay the tax in four equal installments, in which case the first installment shall be paid on the date prescribed for the filing of returns, the second installment shall be paid on or before the last day of the third month, the third installment on or before the last day of the sixth month, and the fourth installment on or before the last day of the ninth month after such date. If any installment is not paid on or before the date fixed for its payment, the whole amount of the tax unpaid shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector.

(e) At the request of the taxpayer, the time for payment of any initial installment of the amount determined as the tax by the taxpayer may be extended under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, for a period not to exceed 6 months from the date prescribed for the payment of such installment. In such case the amount in respect of which the extension is granted shall be paid (with interest at the rate of one half percent per month) on or before the date of the expiration of the period of the extension.

SEC. 5. Separability: If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. WAGNER is as follows:

This bill has for its purpose the encouragement of Nationwide enactment of State unemployment insurance or reserve laws.

The American people are emerging from the depression. The fortitude which has been shown in meeting unexpected calamities must be matched by the determination that we shall not again be caught unaware. In numbers and in depth of suffering the chief victims of hard times are the millions of people who have lost their jobs. Everyone admits that the relief of these people is a social duty and a social need. If we wait until a catastrophe occurs before attempting to alleviate it, a vicious cycle is created. The crisis itself makes relief difficult, and attempts at relief distract us from the main task of recovery. But if we prepare in advance, we may decrease enormously the likelihood of depressions and also store up adequate relief for the small amount of unemployment that may occur from time to time despite our best efforts.

The best way to accomplish this twofold purpose is by unemployment insurance or reserves. The experience of European countries has demonstrated that these devices are sound economics. They create a powerful incentive to the stabilization of industry. They tend to preserve purchasing power despite temporary industrial decline. They begin to operate as soon as a depression occurs and check its continued ravages.

Unemployment insurance or reserves are even more imperative as a matter of social justice. Economic society is as much the creation of the worker as of anyone else. He is entitled to share in its benefits, and he should not be made to bear more than his just portion of its burdens. It is only by insurance or reserves that the costs of depressions can be distributed fairly.

The bill imposes a new Federal tax upon the pay rolls of all employers, except very small ones and a few special classes, such as farmers, domestic servants, and hospitals. Each employer will be allowed to offset against this tax any sums of money that he contributes under the terms of State unemployment insurance or reserve laws. He will be allowed an additional offset whenever his contributions under State law are decreased because of his success in stabilizing employment.

By this offset principle sentiment will be created favorable to the enactment of State laws, as the inhabitants of the several States will prefer keeping their money at home rather than contributing it to the Federal Government. At the same time, the Federal tax upon employers who are not operating under State laws will defeat the old argument that State unemployment insurance or reserve laws would impose an undue handicap in interstate competition.

A striking feature of the Federal bill is that it does not dictate to the States what manner of laws they should pass. Each State may prescribe State-wide funds, industrial pooled funds, or individual reserves. Each State may determine whether constributions are to be by employers, by employees, or by both, and whether the State is to bear a share of the cost. This means that each of the 48 States may became an experimental laboratory for the testing of the wisdom of particular proposals for the relief of the unemployed.

At the same time, the Federal law provides that there will be no offset allowed to an employer unless that State law under which he is operating is a genuine unemployment compensation law that comes up to decent minimum standards. No State law will be certified by the Secretary of Labor unless it provides for:

(1) Regular contributions by employers.

(2) Systematic weekly benefits of at least $7 or else 20 hours' earnings for at least 10 weeks or else a period fairly measured by past employment.

(3) No insuring through private insurance companies.

(4) State administration or supervision with joint advisory committees assisting.

(5) Impartial hearings on disputed compensation claims.

(6) Specific safeguards for labor standards and union membership.

AMENDMENT TO TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7295, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 31, between lines 8 and 9, to insert the following:

"For the establishment, equipment, and maintenance of an assay office at Helena, Mont., $22,000, to be immediately available."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INVESTIGATION OF AIR AND OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS—WILLIAM P. M'CRACKEN

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report by the Sergeant at Arms, which was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

I beg to report that, pursuant to the instructions contained in the warrant of arrest issued on February 2, 1934, by the President of the Senate to the Sergeant at Arms, I took into custody in this city, at 5:50 o'clock p.m., on said day, William P. MacCracken, together with certain correspondence, memorandums, books, files, and records, and I now bring the said William P. MacCracken to the bar of the Senate. Frank J. Hogan, Esq., counsel for the said William P. MacCracken, having given his personal bond for the appearance of the latter before the bar of the Senate, which said bond is hereto attached, I permitted the said William P. MacCracken to remain meanwhile in the technical custody of his counsel. The said correspondence, memorandums, books, files, and records are now in my custody. I submit herewith the original warrant of arrest, with my return.

CHESLEY W. JURNEY,
Sergeant at Arms, United States Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire on the part of the special committee acting under Senate Resolution No. 349, Seventy-second Congress, to present a further report in connection with the report which has previously been submitted concerning certain evidence which the special committee sought. I ask that the report, without the evidence which supports it, be read at this time for the information of the Senate. After that shall have been done, I shall desire to explain to the Senate the situation as it now exists and ask the Senate to determine what further proceedings, if any, it will take.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama presents a report, which the clerk will read.

(At this point Mr. BLACK yielded to Mr. WAGNER, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. REED, who presented routine business, which appears under the appropriate headings.)

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in view of the fact that a matter of the highest privilege has been brought to the attention of the Senate, I shall object to further interruption of the proceedings at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the report submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Rept. No. 254, pt. 2, 73d Cong.]

To the President of the Senate and to the United States Senate:

Your committee appointed under Senate Resolution No. 349, Seventy-second Congress, asks to make this further partial report in connection with the performance of its duties under the resolution in addition to the previous report, no. 254, made February 2, 1934:

1. Subsequent to the service of subpena upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., as set forth in Report No. 254 to this Senate, made on February 2, 1934, the committee issued a subpena duces tecum to Col. L. H. Brittin and to Gilbert Givvin, copies of which subpenas are hereto attached, marked "Exhibits A and B."

2. On February 3, 1934, the committee met in room 318, Senate Office Building, and Col. L. H. Brittin and Gilbert Givvin appeared before the committee and testified.

3. The evidence of Gilbert Givvin showed in substance that the said Gilbert Givvin is an employee of the Western Air Express, Inc., and that Harris M. Hanshue is an officer of the Western Air Express, Inc.; that after service of the subpena duces tecum upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., as shown in report 254, the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., sent a telegram to Harris M. Hanshue, as follows:

"I have today been subpenaed to produce before the Black committee all papers, memoranda, correspondence, maps, copies of telegrams relating to air and ocean mail contracts. Insofar as these involve confidential communications between us as attorney and client, I have felt it my duty to assert, and I have asserted, the privilege which the law places around such communications. The privilege may be waived only by you as client. The committee has requested me to inquire whether you desire to waive this privilege and authorize me to make these documents available to the committee investigators. Please wire your decision.

"(Signed) WILLIAM P. MACCRACKEN, Jr."

4. That after said telegram had been sent to the said Harris M. Hanshue and received by him and after the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., had declined to produce his papers, memoranda, maps, correspondence, and telegrams related to air mail and ocean mail contracts before your special committee, the said Harris M. Hanshue communicated with Gilbert Givvin and directed him to proceed to the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr., and remove from the files of the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., certain papers, memoranda, or correspondence contained in the files then under subpena of your committee. That thereafter the said Gilbert Givvin went to the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr., and did remove letters, telegrams, papers, and memoranda from the files of such papers contained in the "Western Air" file and did send such letters, telegrams, papers, and memoranda to another employee of the Western Air Express named Voorhes, addressing the same to the said Voorhes at The Essex House, New York City, which hotel was the New York living address of the said Voorhes and the said Harris M. Hanshue.

5. That after said files had been removed from the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr., the said Harris M. Hanshue sent a telegram to William P. MacCracken, Jr., and sent a copy of such telegram to the chairman of this committee, stating that the Western Air Express, Inc., had no objection to the committee inspecting all papers in the Western Air Express, Inc., files in the William P. MacCracken, Jr., office.

6. That on the 2d day of February 1934, the said Harris M. Hanshue sent a certain file of papers to Washington by the said Voorhes, which papers were turned over to the said Gilbert Givvin and which purported to be the letters, telegrams, and memoranda removed from the files of the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., but all of which were not identified by the said Gilbert Givvin before the committee as being the identical papers taken from the files of the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr. The evidence of the said Gilbert Givvin revealed that the said Harris M. Hanshue before directing Givvin to remove such papers told the said Givvin that the Senate committee was seeking the papers, memoranda, correspondence, maps, and copies of telegrams in the files of MacCracken and that he, the said Hanshue, wanted certain papers removed therefrom.

7. The said Gilbert Givvin further testified before your committee on February 3, 1934, that he did not actually or physically remove any part of the papers, memoranda, maps, correspondence, and telegrams set forth in the subpena of the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., but that said William P. MacCracken had said files in his own possession and made a decision as to which of said papers, memoranda, correspondence, and telegrams should be removed, and he, the said MacCracken, did actually remove said papers from the files himself and turn them over to the said Gilbert Givvin to be taken away from MacCracken's office and to be delivered to the said Hanshue.

8. On the 3d day of February 1934, Col. L. H. Brittin likewise appeared before your special committee and admitted that after he had received information that the Senate committee had served a subpena upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., to produce all of his papers, memoranda, correspondence, maps, and copies of telegrams, as shown in exhibit A of the report no. 254, made to this Senate; he, the said Colonel L. H. Brittin, went to the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr., and removed from the files of the Northwest Airways, Inc., in said William P. MacCracken, Jr.'s office, certain letters and correspondence contained in such files.

At the time of such removal and prior thereto said L. H. Brittin was an officer of the Northwest Airways, Inc. The said L. H. Brittin admitted that after removing said correspondence he took it with him to his own office and there tore it into pieces and threw it into the waste-paper basket, and that it cannot now be obtained.

9. The said L. H. Brittin stated that he secured the said files in the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr., from his law partner, one Frederic P. Lee, who willingly delivered them to the said L. H. Brittin at said time and place. The claim made by the said L. H. Brittin before the Senate committee was that he had certain correspondence in these files of a personal and confidential nature and that he did not want it made public through the Senate committee, but since the correspondence has already been destroyed the committee is unable to prove the truth or falsity of this statement from the correspondence itself.

After said correspondence was destroyed by the said L. H. Brittin, he testified that he then gave his consent for the Northwest Airways, Inc., files to be inspected by the Senate committee.

The correspondence, papers, memoranda, and telegrams in the files of the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., constituted material and pertinent evidence for the committee to consider in connection with its investigation and recommendations for legislation concerning ocean mail and air mail Government contracts.

For the further information of the Senate there is attached hereto a stenographic report of the evidence before your committee, given by William P. MacCracken, Jr., L. H. Brittin, Gilbert Givvin, and J. A. Bradley. There is also presented to the Senate in a sealed envelope the letters, memorandums, and papers produced by Gilbert Givvin purporting to be the papers removed from said William P. MacCracken, Jr.'s, files and sent to S. W. Voorhes.

Your committee believes that it is proper to report the foregoing facts to the Senate in order that the Senate may determine whether or not any action shall be taken by the Senate with a view to proceeding against the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., Harris M. Hanshue, L. H. Brittin, Frederic P. Lee, and Gilbert Givvin in the nature of a proceeding for contempt or otherwise, or for such other and appropriate action as the Senate may deem it proper to take.

Respectfully submitted.

HUGO L. BLACK, Chairman.

To Mr. L. H. BRITTIN,

Vice President Northwest Airways, Washington, D.C., greeting:

Pursuant to lawful authority, you are hereby commanded to appear before the investigating Committee on Ocean Air Mail Contracts of the Senate of the United States, on February 2, 1934, at instanter o'clock — m., at their committee room 101, Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C., then and there to testify that you may know relative to the subject matters under consideration by said committee.

Bring with you all files, records, data, and memoranda which you removed from the office of Messrs. MacCracken and Lee.

Hereof fail not, as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties in such cases made and provided.

To A. G. Patterson to serve and return.

Given under my hand, by order of the committee, this 2d day of February, in the year of our Lord 1934.

HUGO L. BLACK,
Chairman Committee on Ocean Mail and Air Mail Contracts.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

To Mr. GILBERT GIVVIN,

Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D.C., greeting:

Pursuant to lawful authority you are hereby commanded to appear before the investigating Committee on Ocean Mail and Air Mail Contracts of the Senate of the United States on February 2, 1934, at instanter o'clock — m. at their committee room 101, Senate Office Building, then and there to testify what you may know relative to the subject matters under consideration by said committee.

Bring with you all files, records, data, and memoranda which you removed from the offices of Messrs. MacCracken and Lee.

Hereof fail not, as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties in such cases made and provided.

To A. C. Patterson to serve and return.

Given under my hand, by order of the committee, this 2d day of February 1934.

HUGO L. BLACK,
Chairman Committee on Ocean Mail and Air Mail Contracts.

Accepted February 2, 1934.

GILBERT GIVVIN.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire at this time to attempt, if I may, to clarify the facts which have been presented to the Senate in the report in order that the Senate may be able to determine just what action it should and will take, if any, in connection with the subject matter.

The committee, I might state, as I did in presenting the original report, brought this matter to the Senate only after the committee had attempted to obtain the evidence it desired. The committee, recognizing the seriousness of presenting these charges, was very reluctant to do so until the facts were of such a nature that the committee was of the unanimous opinion that it could not longer refrain from presenting the matter to the Senate as a whole.

As may be understood from the two reports which have been made, this matter was instituted by reason of an original summons which was issued to Mr. William P. MacCracken, Jr., directing him to bring before the Senate committee investigating ocean and air mail contracts, correspondence, memoranda, maps, and files touching ocean and air mail contracts. Previous to the issuance of the subpena there has been a great deal of evidence taken before the committee under oath from witnesses showing that Mr. MacCracken, as a representative of a number of airline mail contractors, had taken a very active part in connection with the awarding of those contracts.

Evidence under oath had also developed the fact that a meeting had been held adjacent to the office of the Postmaster General, Mr. Walter F. Brown, in connection with the entire subject of awarding air mail contracts beginning in the month of May, as I recall, 1930. The evidence has disclosed up to this time that at that meeting the discussion hinged around a proposal to divide the United States into certain air mail routes and to decide which particular air mail operators might secure certain particular air mail contracts.

A photostatic copy of a copy of a report made by Mr. MacCracken as chairman of that meeting to Postmaster General Brown had been submitted to the committee. This report showed that certain air mail contractors and prospective air mail contractors had met together in the office adjacent to that of the Postmaster General and, after having been addressed by the Postmaster General, had been left to themselves to work out, if they possibly could, an agreement among themselves as to establishment of air mail routes and a report or recommendation as to which particular company should be awarded certain particular contracts.

Of this meeting, as I said, Mr. MacCracken was chairman and made the report as chairman.

I mention the next point because of its materiality in relation to the question of privilege which was submitted to the committee. This, of course, presented to the Senate committee immediately the question of the legality or illegality of these acts. The Senate committee was familiar with the fact that the statutes of the United States prohibit combinations of prospective bidders with reference to obtaining contracts. The committee was familiar with the fact that the same statute not only invalidates a contract obained by such methods but disqualifies those who enter into the combination from bidding for any Government contracts for a period of 5 years.

In addition to this fact the Senate committee has had before it witnesses under oath who testified to the fact, one of them stating that he had his information confirmed by the Second Assistant Postmaster General, that Mr. Brown, the Postmaster General, at the time these meetings were in progress, was a stockholder in the Pennsylvania Railroad; and, as suggested by my colleague on the committee, was not only a stockholder in the Pennsylvania Railroad but in other companies, including the Penn Road Corporation and the International Mercantile Marine. The committee, of course, were familiar with the fact that under the statute relating to the awarding of contracts this likewise was a violation of the law, subjecting any person who participated in awarding contracts to companies in which he was directly or indirectly interested to a very severe penalty in the courts of the Nation. They were familiar with the fact that this was provided in the Code of the United States, title 18, section 93; Revised Statutes, section 1783. If Senators are interested and would like to have that section read, I shall be very glad to read it. Otherwise, I shall content myself simply with referring to it.

It has been requested that the section be read, so I will read it:

SEC. 93. Interested persons acting as Government agents: No officer or agent of any corporation, joint-stock company, or association, and no member or agent of any firm, or person, directly or indirectly interested in the pecuniary profits or contracts of such corporation, joint-stock company, association, or firm, shall be employed or shall act as an officer or agent of the United States for the transaction of business with such corporation, joint-stock company, association, or firm. Whoever shall violate the provision of this section shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than 2 years.

After the subpena was issued and served upon Mr. MacCracken, he asked to be permitted to come before the committee to protest against revealing the correspondence, memoranda, and maps referred to. The committee took cognizance of his request, and immediately met, and Mr. MacCracken appeared before the committee.

Mr. MacCracken stated that he objected to bringing the correspondence and papers referred to on the ground that the papers and correspondence were confidential and privileged communications passing between attorney and client.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Was the statement of Mr. MacCracken confined solely to the claim that this was a privileged matter between attorney and client?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. He made no statement with reference to this being private matter and that the committee were not entitled to it?

Mr. BLACK. He said "a confidential communication between attorney and client."

When this question was raised the committee desired to take the matter under consideration, and not to make a decision immediately upon a question of this kind which was raised by a witness. For that reason the committee adjourned. In the meantime Mr. MacCracken stated to the committee that he was perfectly willing to have the Senate committee's investigators sit in his office, and that he would select from the files those communications which in his judgment were not of a confidential nature passing between attorney and client, but would reserve the right to decide for himself which were confidential as between himself and his client and which were not confidential.

The committee in the meantime suggested, since Mr. MacCracken was raising this question as to his clients, that he send them a telegram asking them if they desired to insist upon this privilege. Mr. MacCracken prepared that telegram and sent it immediately. The telegram was read in the report filed by the committee.

The committee waited the next day, and until the morning following the next day, and in the meantime concluded that it was ready to make a declaration on the questions involved. So the committee met on the second day after the original meeting, and Mr. MacCracken appeared before the committee and was asked as to whether the files were in the same condition they had been in when the summons was issued or whether any of the files had been removed. Mr. MacCracken made the statement, in substance, that some of the files had been removed. He gave the names of Mr. Givvin and Mr. Brittin. I shall not go into the details of his description of the kind of files that were removed. That appears in the evidence.

The committee then unanimously reached the conclusion that the records and files should be made available to the committee instantly, and Mr. MacCracken was told of this fact in the open committee meeting. Thereafter certain employees of the Senate committee immediately went to Mr. MacCracken's office, and he again declined to turn over the papers that were left. An instanter subpena was issued for Mr. Givvin and Colonel Brittin to bring before the committee the papers that had been removed. Colonel Brittin appeared before the committee and made the statement that the papers he had obtained had been destroyed. He said that he went to Mr. MacCracken's office because there were certain personal and confidential files of his own in Mr. MacCracken's files that he did not want to be made public. He stated that on this account he went to Mr. MacCracken's office and talked to Mr. Lee, Mr. MacCracken's partner, and Mr. Lee either obtained or sent for the files of the Northwest Airways, and that he, Colonel Brittin, took from the files such letters as he wanted and which he considered to be of a personal and confidential nature, put them in his pocket, took them to his office, tore them into pieces, and threw them in the wastepaper basket. He further stated that it was impossible to obtain those papers now.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Did Colonel Brittin define this confidential matter? In what respect was it confidential?

Mr. BLACK. He did not.

Mr. BORAH. Did he undertake to treat this as a confidential matter between himself and his attorney? Was that the nature of the confidence?

Mr. BLACK. No; I did not understand from Colonel Brittin that he referred to that kind of confidence. I understood from his evidence that these papers were of a private nature wholly disassociated from the air and ocean mail contracts, and that he acted on the theory that he had the right to go and take these papers out of the files because they were of a nature wholly disassociated from the ocean or air mail contracts. That was my understanding.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

Mr. WHITE. That is what I wanted to call to the Senator's attention. With respect to Colonel Brittin, the substance of his statement was that the letters which he took were of a personal as well as a confidential nature, and that they did not relate to the subject of air mail at all. Of course he determined the question as to whether or not they fell within that class of communication, and the committee itself had no knowledge as to their contents; so the members of the committee had no independent judgment as to their character.

Mr. BORAH. A matter of a personal nature is one thing. A matter of a confidential nature is another.

Mr. WHITE. That is quite true.

Mr. BORAH. Did Colonel Brittin define what he meant by "confidential nature"?

Mr. WHITE. I think he did not undertake to define it. He asserted that the matter was personal, and confidential because it was personal, as I understood him. Am I right in that?

Mr. BLACK. That was my understanding.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Did Mr. Brittin explain how personal and confidential communications became mixed in with the communications relating to air mail contracts?

Mr. BLACK. He did. He was asked that question, and he stated that he had previously used the office of Mr. MacCracken somewhat as his Washington headquarters. He was then asked the question why, if they were of such a purely private nature, he permitted them to be placed in this file. He said that he had frequently discussed these matters with Mr. MacCracken, and therefore he had left them in this file, but he did not want them to be made public.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I think the Senator from Alabama has correctly stated the matter. This particular witness made it clear to the committee that until a few days before he had had no office of his own in Washington—that is, no separate office of his own—but that he had used Mr. MacCracken's office as his Washington headquarters when he was here; that he had there himself dictated letters, and that Mr. MacCracken had been consulted by him not only about his business matters but about personal matters; and these alleged personal letters were left there through that circumstance.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a further question? Did Colonel Brittin claim that the letters which he destroyed were solely and only of a personal nature?

Mr. BLACK. He did.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Where was Mr. MacCracken in the meantime? Did he know anything about this? Was all this done with his knowledge and consent, or without it?

Mr. BLACK. With reference to the particular Brittin letters, they were turned over to Colonel Brittin by Mr. Lee, a partner of Mr. MacCracken.

Mr. NORRIS. Did Mr. MacCracken know about it?

Mr. BLACK. I gather that he did, because he testified before the committee that Colonel Brittin had obtained these letters.

Mr. WHITE. I think the testimony also is that Mr. MacCracken was not personally present at the time Mr. Lee turned these papers of Colonel Brittin over to him.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. I think that is correct.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. REED. Did Mr. MacCracken take the position before the committee that he was privileged from disclosing not only letters from the client to him but other sorts of papers belonging to the client?

Mr. BLACK. He took the position that anything that passed between himself and his client—either from him to his client, or to him from his client—was of a privileged nature, and that he would not reveal it.

Mr. REED. Did the committee disagree with that statement?

Mr. BLACK. The committee did. I will go into that phase of the matter in a few moments. There were several different grounds of disagreement, I may say to the Senator; and I shall endeavor to let the Senate have the benefit of each particular position assumed by the members of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Did Mr. MacCracken, or either of the two gentlemen referred to, take the position before the committee that the letters did not relate to air mail or ocean mail contracts?

Mr. BLACK. They did not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, there were two questions in this situation. One was with reference to purely personal matters that had no relationship to air mail contracts, which Mr. MacCracken did not want the committee to read, and the other was about confidential communications between him and his clients with reference to air mail matters. Is that true?

Mr. BLACK. I do not understand that any objection was made on the ground that anything was of a personal and private nature. I did understand that Mr. MacCracken's objection, as it appears in the record, was that the committee did not have the right to obtain any confidential communications passing from him to his client or from his client to him touching ocean and air mail contracts.

Mr. BARKLEY. And in addition to that there was certain mail, about which the Senator has just been talking, which got into this file, which was purely private and personal, and that Mr. MacCracken also objected to giving to the committee?

Mr. BLACK. No; that is a mistake. Colonel Brittin testified that he went down and obtained certain correspondence, which was of a purely personal nature, and destroyed it; and, of course, the committee has no way of determining from the destroyed part whether it was of a personal nature or was not of a personal nature.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I desire to have one thing made clear, and I do not know whether the Senator has stated it or not. The committee itself was never afforded an opportunity to determine whether or not these matters were of a purely personal nature; therefore, no action of the committee in that matter has been made a part of the record before the destruction of the papers in question.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. MacCracken took the position that he, and he alone, had the right to determine for himself whether or not these communications were privileged. He took the position that the Senate committee had no right to see them; that, in his judgment, they were privileged; that the privilege imposed a duty upon him, and that duty was to prevent the revealing of this correspondence or these papers until he, Mr. MacCracken, reached the conclusion that they were not of a private or confidential nature.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator, as a lawyer, does not agree to that proposition?

Mr. BLACK. I do not agree to it, and it is my intention to state more fully in a few minutes that I do not agree that any of the correspondence was privileged, for reasons which I shall point out.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. What relationship was established between Colonel Brittin and any of the bidders for air mail contracts, or air mail contractors?

Mr. BLACK. His company is one of the companies which received contracts, and which participated in the conference at the Postmaster General's office.

Mr. FLETCHER. He was, therefore, at the time of this correspondence, interested in the air mail contracts.

Mr. BLACK. Oh yes; vitally interested.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to state to the Senators that no question at all was suggested about any personal correspondence until Mr. Brittin himself, after he had obtained certain data or memoranda from the office of the attorney, came upon the stand and testified that he had obtained them and had destroyed them. That was the first suggestion that was made in the hearings that any of the correspondence or memoranda were of a personal character. Mr. MacCracken declined to furnish the correspondence or to permit an examination. He based his claim of privilege on the ground that the correspondence, the data which he had, resulted from the relation between him and his clients. He was the attorney for a number of corporations and, as such, was under obligation to his clients to assert his privilege. There was no suggestion of any personal correspondence. That was not mentioned until Mr. Brittin took the stand.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. Is the question of personal correspondence involved at this time, or is it now purely a question of confidential matters?

Mr. BLACK. The only question that was raised in the effort to claim privilege was with reference to confidential communications passing between attorney and client. The only thing of a personal nature that was mentioned was with reference to the two removals from the files, when both Givvin and Brittin claimed that it was their desire to remove purely personal communications.

Mr. BORAH. Prior to the time of the removal there was no claim that the correspondence was of a personal nature?

Mr. BLACK. The only claim was, as stated, that it was correspondence of a confidential nature passing between attorney and client.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Of course, at the time this question arose to perplex us no member of the committee had any personal knowledge at all as to the character of the correspondence in question, and one of the problems presented to us was whether the investigators of the committee, or the committee itself, should see the correspondence and determine the question as to whether it was privileged or was not privileged, or whether that determination rested in the attorney himself. That was one of the questions with which the committee was directly concerned, and it was before there had been any conclusion on that question, except in the minds of the individual Senators—the committee had taken no action on it—it was while that was pending that a determination was made by the attorneys involved, or by the clients of the attorneys, that some of the correspondence was of a personal or privileged character; so it was removed. We did not know at the time from any inspection of the correspondence whether it was personal or confidential, or whether there was any cloak of privilege around it at all or not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Alabama, in his statement of the facts, has said that some papers were removed from the files in the case. I am under the impression from what he has said that the papers which were removed were taken from the air mail file.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, these papers were not in a separate file, but were in the air mail file?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask the Senator from Alabama whether the committee clearly indicated to Mr. MacCracken its desire to examine the documents in question, and to determine independently of Mr. MacCracken whether or not the papers were confidential?

Mr. BLACK. Oh, yes; several times.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I believe that from this point forward we ought to give the Senator from Alabama the opportunity to proceed with his statement. It will be conducive to good order and good procedure to pursue that course, and to ask our questions following the conclusion of his statement.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I think I have perhaps explained, in my remarks up to this point and in my answers to the inquiries of Senators from the floor, the status with reference to the correspondence which was removed by Colonel Brittin.

At the time when Mr. MacCracken testified that Colonel Brittin had removed correspondence he also stated that other correspondence had been removed by Mr. Givvin, who was and is an employee of the Western Airways Co.

Mr. Givvin came before the committee, and in response to the subpena in the first instance stated that the papers had been sent to Mr. Voorhees in New York at the Essex House.

A telegram was sent by the committee to Mr. Hanshue directing that the papers be returned. The exact hour when the papers, or what is purported to be the papers, were mailed in New York back to the Senate is not known, by reason of the fact that we do not have the original envelop; but the next morning, after the request had been made to return the papers, a group of papers was returned to the Senate Committee by Mr. Givvin, which papers are included in the envelop I hold in my hand.

Mr. Givvin testified before the committee, in substance, that he had been called up over long-distance telephone by Mr. Hanshue, who is, as I understand, either the president or the vice president of the Transcontinental & Western or the Western Air Express. At any rate, whatever his particular title, he is an officer in such company and has been for a number of years, even before merged with the T.A.T. and the Pennsylvania Air Industries to form the Transcontinental & Western. These papers were sent to the hotel by Mr. Voorhees. That hotel was also the hotel of Mr. Hanshue. When they were brought to the committee it was discovered that practically every one of them related to air mail transportation and air mail contracts. They are here in the file, to be used by the Senate, and I have brought them here for that purpose.

Mr. Givvin stated in the beginning that he was instructed to get the papers that were of a confidential or private nature, as I understood, passing between Mr. Hanshue and Mr. MacCracken. The statement was also made with reference to Mr. Hanshue that he utilized the office of Mr. MacCracken and that frequently his private correspondence would appear in the files of Mr. MacCracken.

However, the fact remains that the papers that were brought back, if they are the papers in question, clearly demonstrate that they are with reference to air mail transportation.

The papers in question were removed out of the office of Mr. MacCracken and taken away by Mr. Givvin under the following circumstances. After being directed by Mr. Hanshue to go to the office of Mr. MacCracken, Mr. Givvin called Mr. MacCracken and told him of the directions he had received. Mr. MacCracken told him to sort the correspondence out, and Mr. Givvin said that when he arrived—the evidence is not exactly clear as to the time; he stated at one time that it was dark, and at another time I believe he said it was 5:10 in the afternoon—Mr. MacCracken took the Western Air Express file in his hands and selected from that file the particular papers which were delivered to Mr. Givvin. He stated that he, Mr. Givvin, had nothing to do with selecting the papers that were removed, that the decision was made by Mr. MacCracken, and that the papers were delivered by Mr. MacCracken.

Mr. Givvin, I might state, also denied that he had personal knowledge at that time that the Senate committee sought the papers in question, although he did state that Mr. Hanshue had called him up and told him about the summons that had been served, and had notified him therefore to go down and get out some of the papers.

So that we have two groups of papers which were removed—one destroyed; the other here, if what we have here constitutes exactly the papers that were removed. Of course, there is no way for the committee to determine exactly the nature of the papers that were destroyed by Colonel Brittin. There is no way for the committee to absolutely know whether these are the identical papers that were taken out of the files or not. But it is clear that, as to these papers, they were of vital importance in order for the Senate committee to determine upon proper legislation to pass concerning air mail contracts.

A part of one of these papers was read into the record, and it showed that a serious complaint was being made by the Western Air Express that the Postmaster General was forcing them to form a combination with other companies which they were very averse to forming. This was in connection with other evidence which had been adduced, showing that in the conference the Postmaster General took upon himself the right to determine which companies should consolidate, which should be bought out, which should be merged, and even went to the extent of appraising the value of the property which was to be absorbed by one company, and fixing the price that was to be paid by the purchasing company. The committee could, therefore, very readily see that, insofar as that correspondence and those memoranda were concerned, there could be no question of doubt as to the materiality of that paper in connection with proper legislation to protect the United States Government in the future from such awards of contracts and such action on the part of its designated representative in the Cabinet as Postmaster General.

Mr. President, those are the facts which have appeared before the committee. It is difficult to believe that anyone could take the position that this evidence was not material in connection with the inquiry. The committee has submitted these facts to this body, with the request that the body itself determine what action should be taken. In that connection I desire to discuss briefly the possible actions which can be taken and the question of privilege.

In the first place, Mr. President, some of the members of the committee took the position that there was no legal privilege which must be recognized in a Senate committee insofar as communications between attorney and client are concerned. That was based partly upon the fact that the statute itself provides in section 193 of title 2 of the United States Code:

> Privilege of witnesses: No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact or to produce any paper respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress, or by any committee of either House, upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

Another section provides that insofar as the testimony of a witness before a Senate committee is concerned he cannot thereafter have that testimony used against him in a criminal prosecution.

Of course, it is well recognized that Senate committees, acting under the authority of the Senate, are not bound by the strict rules of evidence that govern in a court of law. Insofar as I am concerned personally, the basis for my conclusion is not limited to this ground. As a matter of fact, I might state to the Senate that on a previous occasion an attorney appeared before this committee who had clearly received a confidential communication as an attorney. It was with reference to legal and legitimate employment; there was no question of the legality of the contract of employment. It was such a clear case of what I considered to be privilege under the general rules of law that I joined with my colleagues on the committee who were present and agreed to accept the claim of privilege, even though, in my judgment at that time, I was not convinced that it was required that the Senate committee do so. I, however, recognized the privilege by reason of the belief on my own part that it was so well entrenched in the general jurisprudence of the country that, even though the Senate committee had the power, I did not desire to transgress upon it in a case where it was a legitimate privilege touching a legitimate contract carried on in a legitimate, legal manner.

This claim of privilege, however, is based upon an entirely different situation. No privilege can spring from an illegal contract; no privilege can spring from a contract which is contrary to public policy. If the contract should originally be legal, covering a lawful subject matter, and it should be carried on such a way as to promise action which might constitute fraud upon the Government, my judgment is that, under those circumstances also, the contract would be void from its beginning. No privilege could spring from a situation with reference to which the Government might be defrauded.

I shall first take up the question of the legality of the contract. The evidence by Mr. MacCracken shows that he was employed for two things: One was to aid in the passage of legislation; the other was to aid in obtaining Government mail contracts.

While, as I have stated, I recognize personally and for myself a legitimate privilege springing from a lawful contract, the mere fact that a man is a lawyer does not mean that with reference to every service he performs there is a privilege. If a lawyer should be employed to mow a lawn, there would be no privileged communications between him and his employer. If a lawyer should be employed to act as clerk in a department store, there would be no privilege as to communications passing between him and his employer. If an attorney should be employed to negotiate a contract for the purchase of goods for a department store, communications with his employer would not be confidential. If a lawyer is employed to aid in securing a contract with the Government—I see no distinction between securing a contract with the Government and securing a contract for a department store.

There are certain well-recognized practices which custom has sanctioned to be those governing the relationship of attorney and client. No one but a lawyer can represent a man in a criminal case. Employment to represent a man in a criminal case would, therefore, come within the privilege. Employment might be with reference to handling a civil case; it might be with reference to drawing up a civil contract. In some States none but a lawyer can draw certain contracts; but all of us know that custom, insofar as the city of Washington is concerned, does not limit itself in the employment of those seeking to obtain Government contracts, seeking to obtain legislation, to those who have a legal license. Evidence before this committee has well demonstrated and proven that multitudes of people are in Washington now, and have been over a period of years, without ever having had a legal license, but who are working constantly with Government departments to obtain Government contracts, even though the law says such contracts shall be awarded to the lowest bidder. All of us are familiar with the fact that the halls of this Capitol are filled from day to day with people who are not lawyers but who are seeking, in every possible way, to obtain the passage of legislation. They seek it by having letters written to Senators and Representatives in Congress; they seek it by having friends approach Members of the Congress; they seek it in every other conceivable manner.

I take the position, in the first place, that the employment of a man, even though he happens to be a lawyer, for the purpose of aiding and securing the passage of legislation or for the purpose of aiding and securing Government contracts is not such legal employment as would justify the recognition of a privilege as to confidential communications.

Further, I take the position that a contract between a lawyer and an individual or a corporation which has as its basic purpose obtaining favoritism in a governmental bid is illegal and is contrary to public policy. I take that position on no less authority than the Supreme Court of the United States; but, even without a decision, common sense would irresistably drive a sensible man to the same conclusion.

This Government has sought in every conceivable manner to throw a protection around the awarding of bids for mail contracts. There has been a statute on the books practically since the Government became a government which made it illegal for people to combine in order to obtain a contract with reference to which competitive bids were required. There has been a statute on the books for many years which not only disqualifies the individual from securing a contract if he combines with another but which stigmatizes him for a period of 5 years so that he may obtain no Government contracts during that period. If there had been no statute, under the common law itself since the very beginning of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence, and tracing its origin back even to the Roman days, contracts between individuals whereby an effort is made to obtain favoritism with reference to Government contracts are against public policy, are against the public interest, and cannot and will not be recognized.

So, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, and speaking my individual views as a member of this committee, I take the position that a contract to aid in the passage of legislation in Washington by conferring with individual Senators on this side and on the other and by having letters written, and by every other means which we know to be adopted, is not a legal contract, but it is contrary to the public interest, contrary to public policy, and we need no laws and no statutes in order to declare it illegitimate and wrong.

There is nothing strange about that. The Supreme Court of the United States has said it; the supreme court of practically every State of the Union has said it; the nisi prius courts have said it; the juries have said it whenever it has been submitted to them; and the common sense of the common people of this Nation has long since declared it to be an outlawed practice.

Let us see for just a moment what the Supreme Court of the United States says about it. I have in my hands the case of Trist against Child, reported in Twenty-first Wallace, page 441. In that case, which was decided in 1874, Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the Court. Let us consider for a moment some of the statements made in that opinion.

> Was the contract a valid one? It was, on the part of Child, to procure by lobby service, if possible, the passage of a bill providing for the payment of the claim. The aid asked by the younger Child of Trist, which indicated what he considered needful, and doubtless proposed to do and did do himself, is thus vividly pictured in his letter to Trist of the 20th February, 1871. After giving the names of several Members of Congress, from whom he had received favorable assurances, he proceeds: "Please write to your friends to write to any Member of Congress. Every vote tells, and a simple request may secure a vote, he not caring anything about it. Set every man you know at work. Even if he knows a page, for a page often gets a vote."

There is nothing unusual about that letter. We have seen hundreds of such letters in the correspondence which has been investigated by the committee. It is an old practice.

> In the Roman law it was declared that "a promise made to effect a base purpose as to commit homicide or sacrilege is not binding." In our jurisprudence a contract may be illegal and void because it is contrary to a constitution or statute, or inconsistent with sound policy and good morals. Lord Mansfield said: "Many contracts which are not against morality are still void as being against the maxims of sound policy."
> It is a rule of the common law of universal application that where a contract express or implied is tainted with either of the vices last named, as to the consideration or the thing to be done, no alleged right founded upon it can be enforced in a court of justice.
> Before considering the contract here in question it may be well, by way of illustration, to advert to some of the cases presenting the subject in other phases in which the principle has been adversely applied.
> Within the condemned category are—

I am reading from the opinion some of the examples the Court gives of contracts that are contrary to public policy—> an agreement to pay for supporting for election a candidate for sheriff; to pay for resigning a public position to make room for another; to pay for not bidding at a sheriff's sale of real property; to pay for not bidding for articles to be sold by the Government at auction; to pay for not bidding for a contract to carry the mail on a specified route.

Not only that one, but I could read from numerous others. Bear in mind that the evidence before our committee shows there was not only a proposal made that certain individuals should secure certain mail contracts, a decision on which was reached in a secret meeting to which the public were neither invited, expected, nor permitted to be present. Contracts were later awarded to the very same companies whose names were placed in the report made by the chairman of that committee.

So, Mr. President, if there were no other ground to strike down privilege it would be sufficient to show that in accordance with an agreement made under these circumstances, participated in both by Mr. MacCracken and his clients, many millions of dollars were paid each year out of the Public Treasury on contracts made where competitive bidding was stifled, where the arm of the Government was paralyzed, and where the individuals who had been selected in a meeting, with reference to which the Postmaster General acted as arbitrator, received the contracts and the money.

I shall not read all the way through the opinion, though it is very illuminating. It strikes at the basic, bedrock principles of public justice and public morality. The Court refers to the fact that the foundation of the Republic is the virtue of its citizens and then, in order to make sure, they say:

> The foundation of a republic is the virtue of its citizens. They are at once sovereigns and subjects. As the foundation is undermined, the structure is weakened. When it is destroyed, the fabric must fall. Such is the voice of universal history. The theory of our Government is that all public stations are trusts and that those clothed with them are to be animated in the discharge of their duties solely by considerations of right, justice, and the public good. They are never to descend to a lower plane. But there is a correlative duty resting upon the citizen. In his intercourse with those in authority, whether executive or legislative, touching the performance of their functions, he is bound to exhibit truth, frankness, and integrity. Any departure from the line of rectitude in such cases is not only bad in morals but involves a public wrong. No people can have any higher public interest, except the preservation of their liberties, than integrity in the administration of their government in all its departments.
> The agreement in the present case was for the sale of the influence and exertions of the lobby agent to bring about the passage of a law for the payment of a private claim, without reference to its merits, by means which, if not corrupt, were illegitimate, and considered in connection with the pecuniary interest of the agent at stake, contrary to the plainest principles of public policy. No one has a right, in such circumstances, to put himself in a position of temptation to do what is regarded as so pernicious in its character. The law forbids the inchoate step, and puts the seal of its reprobation upon the undertaking.
> If any of the great corporations of the country were to hire adventurers who make market of themselves in this way, to procure the passage of a general law with a view to the promotion of their private interests, the moral sense of every right-minded man would instinctively denounce the employer and employed as steeped in corruption, and the employment as infamous.
> We have said that for professional services in this connection a just compensation may be recovered. But where they are blended and confused with those which are forbidden, the whole is a unit and indivisible.

How can we distinguish in a case of that kind which part would be legitimate legal services and which part would be for that which is declared to be contrary to public policy?

> That which is bad destroys that which is good, and they perish together. Services of the latter character, gratuitously rendered, are not unlawful. The absence of motive to wrong is the foundation of the sanction.

This statement then follows:

> The elder agent in this case is represented to have been a lawyer of ability and high character. The appellee is said to be equally worth. This can make no difference as to the legal principles we have considered, nor in their application to the case in hand. The law is no respecter of persons.

Mr. President, this case has been followed by others. In the case of Tool Co. against Norris, Second Wallace, I read from page 55 in order that no one may say there is no distinction between seeking to obtain legislative action and seeking to obtain departmental action. In that case the Supreme Court of the United States said:

> There is no real difference in principle between agreements to procure favors from legislative bodies and agreements to procure favors in the shape of contracts from the heads of departments. The introduction of improper elements to control the action of both, is the direct and inevitable result of all such arrangements.

I shall not go further into detail in the report of this case. It is one of the most illuminating opinions rendered. I have numerous other cases on the same subject, all of them agreeing—there is no dissent—that employment of an individual to seek to obtain the passage of legislation and employment to seek to obtain Government contracts is similar in legal effect. I distinguish between seeking to obtain Government contracts and employing a lawyer to draw up a contract. The latter is, of course, legitimate legal employment, but all of the cases, without exception, from the United States Supreme Court down to the State courts, have uniformly put their disapproval upon such contracts and declare them to be void by reason of the fact that they are contrary to public policy.

In this case, according to the evidence before the committee, contracts were awarded. The courts hold that it makes no difference whether the actual contracts were awarded or not. That is immaterial; but in this case the contracts were awarded. The evidence clearly shows, to my own mind, that they were awarded collusively, that they were awarded fraudulently, and they stand upon a rotten foundation.

The evidence further shows from the very correspondence that was returned in this file that there was evidence in the file which would tend to establish facts with reference to the way contracts had been let in the Department. How can the Congress pass upon the kind of laws it ought to enact, how can it close the loopholes, how can it safeguard the weak spots unless it ascertains what methods have heretofore been adopted in order to deprive the Government of that which was its own?

So, Mr. President, leaving to the Senate the right to determine exactly what steps it desires to take with reference to the individuals whose names have been reported to it, the committee submits the facts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Has the committee any recommendations?

Mr. BLACK. The committee has reported to the Senate that it has submitted the case to the Senate in order for it to determine whether or not these individuals should be cited for contempt or whether or not any other process should be taken against them.

Mr. WALSH. Has the committee taken a position on the question of whether the Senate should cite the parties?

Mr. BLACK. The Senate has not officially taken any position. The committee does not desire, I might state to the Senator, to appear in the role of prosecutor. The object of the committee was to obtain the facts in order to pass upon legislation.

Mr. WALSH. There is always an atmosphere in a matter of this kind that only members of the committee can penetrate. It is very difficult for other Members of the Senate to get the full facts. I did not know whether there were possible sinister influences behind the facts in a case of this kind.

Mr. BLACK. It is my own individual judgment, since the Senator has asked me, that this was a deliberate effort to deprive the Senate of papers which were under subpena and which were material in order to reach the facts.

Mr. WALSH. That is a pretty strong statement. Are other members of the committee of the same opinion?

Mr. BLACK. I would not speak for other members of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. I think we should all like to hear their views.

Mr. BLACK. I am sure other members of the committee will express their views. The committee thought this was such a vitally important question that it could not be ignored. Therefore it has been submitted to the Senate.

Now I desire to make one statement with reference to the law if the Senate concludes to take action.

If the Senate desires to cite for contempt——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has there been any change in the situation since the order of the Senate last week arresting Mr. MacCracken? Has any effort been made to correct the situation which brought about that action?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has asked a very proper question.

Mr. MacCracken answered the order of the Senate. He stated that he had the consent of his last client to permit the papers to be turned over to the committee. The papers have been turned over to the committee; that is, certain papers have been turned over to the committee. Of course, those that were destroyed have not been turned over, nor does the committee have any definite method by which it can obtain absolutely accurate knowledge as to whether or not all the papers have been turned over. The only change is that which I have mentioned—that Mr. MacCracken has stated to the Senate that they could now have these papers, and the Sergeant at Arms has taken charge of certain files.

That leaves the situation in this way:

While the subpena was pending, certain papers were removed. Certain papers were destroyed. Certain other papers were returned. Whether or not those were all the papers that were removed, the committee, of course, does not know. It is clear to my own mind from the evidence of Colonel Brittin and Mr. Hanshue and Mr. Givvin that the deliberate purpose in removing the papers was to take them away from the committee. That is the reason I made the statement deliberately. It is because Colonel Brittin testified that he knew they were under subpena, and he wanted them removed to keep them from being made public and because Mr. Givvin testified that Mr. Hanshue had directed him to get these papers after he had received the Senate subpena. So I am convinced in my own mind that the removal of the papers was a deliberate effort to keep the committee from obtaining them. I infer that from the statements made.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, were they removed after the subpena was issued?

Mr. BLACK. They were removed after the subpena was issued, after it had been served upon Mr. MacCracken, and after he had notified the particular individuals by telegram of the service of the subpena.

Mr. WALSH. I think that is a very important fact.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, my question was prompted by the fact that in the absence of a recommendation from the committee, it seemed to me that we might inquire as to the good faith of the man against whom the charge is brought. Assuming that he had made a mistake, and assuming that it was deliberate, it seemed to me we might inquire whether he had made an effort to rectify the misconduct, if that be what it was, on his part in seeking to have these papers removed. That might have some bearing on whether we should proceed to enforce some penalty.

Mr. BLACK. I may state to the Senator that it is my viewpoint that before the Senate decides whether or not it will seek to enforce any penalty upon Mr. MacCracken under the previous order issued, it should determine whether or not these additional individuals should likewise be brought before the Senate. It is my own judgment, personally speaking, that that should be done. I believe the evidence is of such a nature that the Senate could not, with due regard to the situation, fail to take that action.

I had just started to say that there are two methods by which that could be done. The Senate has the inherent right in the body itself to punish for contempt. It has the right under certain circumstances to certify the proceedings to the district attorney of the District of Columbia. Frankly, I doubt if under these circumstances the law is sufficiently clear to justify submitting it to the district attorney. I make that statement for this reason: Section 192 of title 2 of the code—and I desire the Senate to have the benefit of this statute—reads as follows:

> Refusal of witness to testify: Every person who having been summoned as a witness by the authority of either House of Congress, to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House, or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100, and imprisonment in a common jail for not less than 1 month nor more than 12 months.

It is clear that that makes this a misdemeanor if the facts justify the action.

Mr. BARKLEY. Just there—does the Senator desire to finish reading the statute first?

Mr. BLACK. I desire to finish reading the other two statutes in connection with this one in reference to contempt:

> SEC. 194. Witnesses failing to testify: Whenever a witness summoned as mentioned in section 192 of this title fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or House to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action.

It will be noted that this section is limited to a failure to testify, and that the other section which I have read refers to a failure to testify or to bring the papers required; so that with reference to certifying the matter to the district attorney, insofar as contempt is concerned, there might be some question with reference to the construction of the statute.

Mr. BARKLEY. If this matter is not certified to the district attorney for appropriate action, what punishment can we inflict?

Mr. BLACK. The Senate has the right, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, to cite either one or all of these individuals to appear and show cause why they should not be punished for contempt. At that time they would, of course, be given the opportunity to make any statement in line with what the Senator has said. So that the Senate can take that course, if it desires, and proceed by hearing before this tribunal; or, if it desired, it could refer the matter, so far as the misdemeanor is concerned, to the district attorney for prosecution as a misdemeanor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not examined lately the cases to which the Senator refers, but under those decisions what form of punishment can the Senate inflict?

Mr. BLACK. The Senate could inflict punishment by imprisonment for a term not beyond the session in which the contempt occurred.

Mr. BARKLEY. It could not assess a fine?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; it could assess a fine.

Mr. BARKLEY. Within what limitation?

Mr. BLACK. There is no set limitation upon the fine, because it is recognized as a common-law power of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is what I wanted to clear up. The Senate has power inherent in its own jurisdiction to inflict a penalty or it may certify the record to the courts in order that a misdemeanor may be punished?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. I seek information from the able chairman of the committee on the following lines, because I recognize in this whole proceeding the effect of precedent that shall apply for the future:

Assume that the counsel in the cause, Mr. MacCracken, was wrong. Assume that he was wrong within the law, and yet assume that it was an honest judgment as a lawyer, believing in his right to withhold the information on the theory of the protection of his client. I ask my able friend, the chairman of the committee, if such were an honest belief on his part, though disclosed to be wrong, and with papers which, as owned by the client, might be said to be in a nature representative of something illegal, does the chairman of the committee feel that the counsel under those circumstances is subject to contempt of the Senate?

Mr. BLACK. I do not think that would at all affect the act. It would, of course, like all facts and circumstances connected with any action, be a matter to be taken into consideration by the tribunal trying the case.

Mr. LEWIS. I should like to ask my able friend if his attention has been drawn to the case in the Supreme Court of the United States of Watts & Sachs, One Hundred and Ninetieth United States Reports, upon this exact point.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to have the Senator read it, if he desires.

Mr. LEWIS. No; I will not interrupt my able friend. I only wanted to know whether it has been brought to his attention.

Mr. BLACK. I have read quite a number of cases.

Mr. LEWIS. If not, I take the liberty of tendering to him the Supreme Court of the United States decision on how far a lawyer may be held to be committing an offense in contempt where, though wrong in his construction of the law, he was honest within himself, under the belief of his right. This was a bankruptcy proceeding, and the contempt grew out of the lawyer's refusal to testify. I ask my able friend if, at his leisure, he will examine this case of Watts & Sachs, One Hundred and Ninetieth United States Reports, and see how far it is in line with his own conclusions, or those recommended by his committee.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to look at it.

I have no further remarks to make at this time, unless someone desires to ask some questions.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to know what the Senator thinks of this situation: If Mr. MacCracken in good faith thought he should be protected under the privilege rule, and declined to answer, then could he not have stood on that until your committee certified the question to the Senate to get a ruling as to whether he should be required to answer? And after the Senate so ruled, if he did answer the question, and matters were left in the same condition that they were when the question was certified, he would be free from contempt, would he not?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has stated a case which, if it had occurred in that way, might have had a very material effect with reference to reporting this matter to the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. Then is it not true that the change in the records, the fact that something was done to the records afterward, constitutes the gravamen of the offense at this time?

Mr. BLACK. It is my own judgment, may I say to the Senator, that if the committee had been of the opinion which has been outlined by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], that there was a bona fide effort to stand on what was conceived to be a legitimate legal duty, there probably would have been no citation or report to this body; but, of course, it was very difficult for at least part of the members of the committee to attribute such a motive completely when a part of the files were taken and destroyed during the very time that the Senate committee had the matter under consideration.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree with the Senator; so it seems to me that the destruction of the files is what constitutes the contempt or the seriousness of the offense at this time. I could not find fault with any man who might desire to rest on his constitutional rights and say that he was protected by a rule such as the privilege rule; but he could stand on that no longer than the body that had the power to decide should hold that he was wrong. Then, after having held that he was wrong, he would have a right to testify; but, in the meantime, if he put it out of his power to comply with the ruling of the Senate in this case, of course, there would be no way for him to purge himself of contempt.

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the Senator that, as I said in the beginning, when the question was first raised by the witness, the Senate committee did not seek to act arbitrarily or hastily. It took the matter under advisement for the very reason suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. We took the matter under advisement and discussed it. We then thought of it for another day, and we then met to make a decision; and it was at the time we met to make the decision that we were informed that in the interim certain papers had been removed. The committee then unanimously agreed to report the matter to the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. This is the matter about which I am interrogating the Senator: Is the Senator asking the Senate to act upon Mr. MacCracken's refusal to answer the questions in the first place, or to act upon the destruction of the records in his office after the Senate committee first had the matter up, and before the Senate committee finally decided that the matter was not privileged?

Mr. BLACK. We have reported all the facts, including the original and the latter matter, all of which were a part of one and the same transaction.

Mr. LOGAN. But they are severable. The case of Watts and Sachs was referred to by the distinguished Senator from Illinois. Watts and Sachs were sent to jail by Judge Anderson, sitting in the United States court in Indiana, as I recall, and they appealed to the Supreme Court, which Court laid down a rule which, to a certain degree, protects a man when he questions the authority of the Court or a committee, basing his claim upon a right guaranteed to him by the Constitution, if he is honest about it and in good faith. He has a right to stand on his claim until some authoritative power has said to him, "You are wrong", and after that is said, then he has no right to still refuse to answer, and he purges himself of any contempt by complying with the requirements of the committee after that fact has been determined.

Mr. MacCracken, as I understand, declined to answer on the ground that the letters in question were privileged communications between a client and his lawyers. They may not have been. Perhaps they were not, from what the distinguished Senator from Alabama has said. I do not think they were, after hearing his statement of the facts and his statement of the law. But if Mr. MacCracken thought they were, he cannot be punished for refusing to answer before the committee if the committee had the power, or even if it did not have the power, until the Senate has directed him that he must answer the question.

We never did get to that point with Mr. MacCracken. Before that time came, another thing had happened. He had put it out of his power to give the Senate committee the information which it had requested, and it seems to me that the Senate should consider the matter in its latter aspects; that is, that the records were destroyed or mislaid. The question of privilege does not seem to me to enter into it at all.

Mr. BLACK. May I state in response to the statement of the Senator from Kentucky that the question of privilege has been presented because I desired to state my views on the question of privilege, as a number of Senators had asked about it.

I might also state, as I did a while ago, that I am absolutely sure that if that were the only question involved, and someone had come before the Senate committee claiming privilege in a matter in which the committee was engaged in an honest, bona fide, legitimate desire to assert a privilege honestly entertained, and in order to perform a duty which it believed existed, my own judgment is that the present proceeding would not have occurred. I tried to explain that the Senate committee waited for that express purpose, in order to ascertain for itself, and looked into the matter, and gave 2 days' time before any action was taken, and then Mr. MacCracken was brought back and he was told that it was the unanimous opinion of the Senate committee that the subpena should be obeyed.

In the meantime, however, a part of the papers had been destroyed and others removed. I think there naturally would arise in the mind of the able Senator from Kentucky there some question as to the exact reason for claiming the privilege and the delay.

Mr. LOGAN. I might say to the Senator, if he will pardon my interrupting him, that, from the statement which the Senator has made, I do not think that the communications were privileged.

Mr. BLACK. I understood that.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think so. But at the same time I do think that if Mr. MacCracken believed they were privileged he had a right to rely upon that and not answer the question.

Suppose that the Senate committee had determined that they were not privileged, and still Mr. MacCracken had refused to answer, what would the committee have done?

Mr. BLACK. May I state to the Senator that he is asserting a hypothetical case that does not exist. I have stated to the Senator that even in the hypothetical case I was sure that if other circumstances had not transpired leading the committee to question the very thing which the Senator has asserted, that the matter would never have been brought to the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. But we are going to vote on something directly. What are we going to vote on? That Mr. MacCracken refused to answer questions on the ground that the matter in question was privileged, or shall we vote on the charge that the records were extracted from his files after the subpena had been issued, and that he was a party to it?

Mr. BLACK. The question, as I see it, on which the Senate is likely to vote, Is whether or not, after a subpena is served upon an individual to bring papers, and while that subpena is pending, and while an honest, legitimate effort is being made by the committee to ascertain whether or not its asserted privilege is just and founded upon law, and even during that time papers are removed and destroyed, the Senate desires to pass that over as simply a trivial action on the part of those who participated in it, or whether the Senate believes that it is of sufficient importance to require those who participated in it to appear before that body or to appear before a court to have the facts ascertained?

Mr. LOGAN. Let me state to the Senator that I think the trivial matter involved in it is the question of privilege. The failure of the witness to answer on the ground that the communication was privileged to my mind is rather trivial, because that was a matter that had to be determined by someone later. The important thing, as I see it, is what happened while the committee was considering that question; that is, the extraction of certain papers from the files.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. That illuminates the entire transaction. It throws light upon the claiming of the privilege. It is a part of the whole thing. The question arises, as suggested by the Senator from Illinois, whether the claim was made in good faith. How do we determine whether or not it was made in good faith? By the facts and circumstances which throw light upon the entire transaction, all of which are coupled together and constitute one complete, indivisible whole.

Mr. LOGAN. But not on the question of privilege. It may be shown that he claimed privilege in order to get time to remove certain records, which is still aside from the question of privilege. He may not have made the claim in good faith. But I do not think we are proceeding against Mr. MacCracken because he declined to answer the question in the first instance on the ground of privilege.

Mr. BLACK. I have stated to the Senator and stated to others a number of times that it was my judgment if that were all that had been done it would never have been reported to the Senate. I repeat that now. There is no difference between us on that.

Mr. LOGAN. I think not, except, if the Senator will pardon me, that I should like to separate the matters and forget about the question of privilege and deal with the more important matter, that, while the committee was trying to secure evidence, the evidence was destroyed.

Mr. BLACK. How can we forget it? Would it be right to present the matter to the Senate without letting it be known that the gentleman was basing his right on the claim of privilege? Should we ignore the claim that he made? I have simply tried to present the fact.

Mr. LOGAN. Would it not have been the same if he had said that the records were not available; that he wanted 2 or 3 days to get them together?

Mr. BLACK. It might have been the same; but he did not say it. That is not what he said.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Kentucky, using a hypothetical case: Suppose that a witness who was attorney for clients whose relations to the Government were under investigation, was subpenaed by a Senate committee charged with the duty of investigating such relations, and, upon appearing, he refused to produce the correspondence between him and his clients respecting such relations as were under investigation, justifying his refusal upon the ground that he was under obligation to protect his clients and to not disclose confidential communications between them; and assume that upon such refusal the matter was brought by the committee to the Senate, and the attorney was cited to appear and show cause why he should not be punished for contempt; and assume further that he pleaded before the Senate that he acted in good faith, believing that the communications between himself and his clients were privileged, but that if he were in error, he would obey the order of the Senate and its committee. Under state of facts so assumed, I am inclined to believe that the Senate, if it believed that he acted in good faith, would accept his statement and purge him of contempt.

I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Alabama that the refusal of Mr. MacCracken to produce the correspondence and records which he was directed by the committee to produce, and to testify concerning the same, together with the removal of some of the records and correspondence from the files in his office, presents a different question and unites the two conditions so that they may be considered together; and if the Senate should find that he did not act in good faith in refusing to produce the subpenaed records and to testify concerning the same, the Senate would have the authority, in my opinion, to deal with the matter separately from the question arising from the withdrawal of certain of the records from his files. If the Senate should believe that he acted in good faith in failing to produce the records and testifying, it might, as above indicated, adjudge him as not guilty of contempt.

With respect to the abstraction of correspondence or records from the office of Mr. MacCracken and his partner, if it should appear that the element of good faith above referred to was absent and the removal of the records and correspondence was brought about with the connivance of Mr. MacCracken, then it seems to me that the course of the Senate would be clear. I do not intend to express any opinion in regard to what the Senate should or may do. It is my view that Mr. MacCracken was not justified in refusing to produce the correspondence and records called for by the committee. I do not believe that Mr. MacCracken could, under the circumstances, invoke the rule of privilege for which he contends; but, as stated, if he acted in good faith in declining to testify, and that were the only question presented, the Senate, it is quite likely, could acquit him of the charge of contempt.

But the refusal to produce the records and to testify and the abstraction or removal of the records, linked together, constitute two transactions or episodes and may be considered by the Senate either as separate or connected transactions.

Senators will recall that a few years ago, when the Senate was investigating the question of the right of Mr. Vare to his seat in the Senate, a witness who was subpenaed refused to testify before the committee upon a matter which the committee regarded as pertinent to the inquiry. The committee certified the refusal to the Senate, and this body directed that he be arrested and brought before the bar of the Senate. Conditions arose which warranted bail being granted, and the witness furnished the required bail and was released upon condition that he appear whenever requested by the Senate. The Senate also directed that the refusal of the witness to testify be certified to the United States Attorney. This course was taken, and the witness was indicted under the provisions of the statute, to which attention has been called by the Senator from Alabama. The course adopted by the Senate was challenged in the courts by the witness, and the matter was under consideration for a long time, and finally, as I recall, reached the Supreme Court of the United States. The action of the Senate was approved. However, before trial and before the Senate took action upon the question which remained with it the witness died.

With respect to the matter before us, it is my view that Mr. Brittin, Mr. Givvin, and Mr. Lee should be cited to appear before the Senate and be examined upon the matters referred to by the Senator from Alabama, in order that the Senate may determine whether they have infracted any provision of the statute. Mr. MacCracken is under arrest, and it occurs to me that in view of the fact that the transactions involving each of the persons named are so closely related the hearing upon his case might be continued until the other persons named are brought before the Senate. That would mean, of course, that Mr. MacCracken be released from arrest, but with the understanding that he shall appear when the other persons named appear to answer to the citation which, the situation as I believe requires, shall be issued requiring them to appear before the bar of the Senate.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, it appears to me that we should be driving at some termination of this matter. The statement made by the chairman of the committee was made for the purpose of clarifying the entire record before the Senate. The question now on the supplemental report is not so much as to Mr. MacCracken, for Mr. MacCracken is under arrest by authority and direction of this body, but the supplemental report deals with other individuals named in the report submitted by the chairman of the committee before this body this morning. The question now is, What will the Senate do as regards the supplemental report now on file, supplemented by the explanatory statements of the chairman of the committee?

So, to bring it to a head, if I may, and if I may without violating the rule make the motion not in writing, I therefore move that Mr. Brittin, Mr. Hanshue, and Mr. Lee be dealt with under the resolution the same as Mr. MacCracken has already been dealt with; that they all be cited together with Mr. MacCracken; and that the citation be made returnable on Friday next.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. As the motion was made orally, after it has been taken down I should like to have it read, as I did not catch it all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada that he present a formal resolution.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well, Mr. President; I present this resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant commanding the Sergeant at Arms, or his deputy, to take into custody the bodies of L. H. Brittin, Gilbert Givvin, Harris M. Hanshue, and Frederic P. Lee, together with William P. MacCracken, Jr., and that they be brought before the bar of the Senate, then and there to answer such questions pertinent to the matter under inquiry with reference to facts regarding correspondence, memoranda, books, and files as the Senate may propound, and to keep the said persons in custody to wait the further action of the Senate.

I move that the return date be Friday next at 10 o'clock.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada a question?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. In view of the wording of the resolution, would that leave the present case of Mr. MacCracken in status quo until Friday, at which time the additional persons named would come in with him?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is my idea.

Mr. McNARY. So that that would be the end of the procedure today and on Friday we would continue the whole case with the additional parties named?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; at the time indicated. I cannot view this in any other light than that the parties cited have their right to a day before the Senate and their right to answer. One is under arrest at this time, and the others are to be placed under arrest and afforded the right to have a day to reply, and whatever their reply may be is for them to say.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is it proposed by this resolution to arrest the men named or simply to cite them here to answer the charges which are made?

Mr. McCARRAN. There is one under arrest at the present time.

Mr. BORAH. I know there is; but is it proposed to arrest all the others?

Mr. McCARRAN. It would be my idea to treat them all alike.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. It would be my suggestion, in order to carry out the object which has been suggested, that there be added to the resolution this clause, "and to show cause, if any they have, why they should not be punished for contempt."

That seems to be the object of the proceedings, and anyway the entire matter could be settled at one time.

Mr. BORAH. Is it necessary—and I am asking for information, not being a member of the committee—to issue an order of arrest for these men in order to bring them before the Senate to answer these charges?

Mr. McCARRAN. Is the Senator addressing his inquiry to me?

Mr. BORAH. I am addressing it to any of the Senators on the committee.

Mr. McCARRAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. Will he repeat his question?

Mr. BORAH. I ask, Is it thought necessary upon the part of the committee to include in this resolution the others of these men in order to bring them properly before the Senate to answer the questions which we propose to submit to them? Is it not possible to cite them to the Senate to answer the charges of the Senate and then determine whether or not we want to arrest them on a charge of contempt?

Mr. McCARRAN. I think probably that would be the right course.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that I think that would be the right course; it would be my own judgment; and I suggest that the motion include Mr. MacCracken so that the entire matter may be handled at one session of the Senate rather than to attempt to divide it and have one hearing today and one at a later period.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the honorable chairman of the committee or his efficient aid, the Senator from Nevada, should not the case of a lawyer who stands on his right as a lawyer be separated from the cases of others the charges against whom are based on actual conduct, as related by the honorable chairman of the committee, and, if otherwise uncontroverted, are criminal? Should not the action of the lawyer in assuming within his rights to advise his clients be separated and the question before the Senate as to him as a lawyer be as to his good faith in giving the advice rather than have him commingled in the whole proceeding with the others who do not stand on the relationship at all within the law that the counsel does who advises his clients? I ask would it not be better that the case of Mr. MacCracken be separated from the others and he be heard separately on his legal rights as the adviser of his clients?

Mr. McCARRAN. I will gladly answer the question of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I was simply going to say I do not see how we can separate these cases because one man is a lawyer, for his entire guilt or innocence before this body depends, in my judgment, upon whether he sought this privilege as a lawyer for the purpose of getting time to enable them to destroy these papers. It is all one transaction. In other words, the gravamen of the offense is the destruction of the papers after notice was served upon them to produce the papers, and it is an offense in that whether the papers were properly to be brought before the committee or not, they were not to be destroyed and good faith required that they be presented to the committee. If Mr. MacCracken sought time in order to enable his clients to destroy these papers, he becomes so identified with the transaction that we cannot separate his case as a lawyer from the cases of the others.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I cannot take issue with the statement of the able Senator from Idaho, but what I wish to press upon the members of the committee is that the conduct referred to by the Senator from Idaho is distinctively criminal rather than being a contempt of the Senate; it is a deliberate crime against the statute; but the lawyer's position, as I gather from the statement, is somewhat different. If, as a lawyer, he stood on his rights to advise his clients from an honest belief on his own part that the papers were protected, I feel that that particular part of his conduct as to whether, as a lawyer, he acted in good faith or not in giving advice, ought to be separated from the other cases so that he might be given an opportunity to disclose his privilege and that we may ascertain his rights as a lawyer within the meaning of the law and the procedure that exempts a lawyer from contempt if, as counsel, he believes in good faith in the advice he has given to his clients.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois——

Mr. LEWIS. I am following what I believe to be the Supreme Court of the United States in the case I handed my able friend from Nevada and the chairman of the committee a moment back.

Mr. McCARRAN. In reply to the suggestion of the learned Senator from Illinois, there can be no difference in this case.

If there were an honest difference in the first instance and Mr. MacCracken had reason to believe that there might even be a doubt as to his action, he might have had a right to stand on privilege, but he destroyed that right, even if he doubted the question, when he destroyed the evidence that was then held under subpena in his custody, and he placed himself in the same category with those who wanted to obtain that evidence out of his office, of whom Mr. Hanshue was one and Mr. Brittin was another. Not only that, but he placed himself out of the category under the rule when he, as related by the chairman, collected the very evidentiary matter that should be taken from his office. It was not the agent of Mr. Hanshue who selected that evidence; it was Mr. MacCracken himself, according to the testimony, who selected the individual pieces of evidence and permitted them to be taken away from the office. Therefore, if the learned Senator from Illinois says that the act is criminal as to some but that the attorney might claim his privilege because he was an attorney, it is apparent that he divested himself of privilege because of his own actions.

Mr. LEWIS. No, Mr. President; I would only say that there was a dual position, one where he declined to give the committee papers on the ground that they were confidential communications, and the other which was a participation in the act described by the Senator from Nevada and referred to by the Senator from Idaho, which, if true, was a crime deliberate and in violation of the statute and apart from the relation of a lawyer to his client.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Nevada has indicated his purpose to present a resolution under which all questions pertaining to the issues presented in the committee report may be determined in the presence and hearing and with participation on the part of the accused. I am going to suggest that this is not an appropriate time to discuss the guilt or innocence of the accused of contempt or even to determine what facts or circumstances may constitute guilt or innocence of contempt. The proper proceeding now is for the Senate to determine whether it wishes to take further steps in the matter, and if so, to issue a citation for the parties and bring them before the Senate, when all questions may then be properly determined.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada offers a resolution, which will be read.

The resolution (S.Res. 172) was reduced to writing and was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue a citation directing William P. MacCracken, Jr., L. H. Brittin, Gilbert Givvin, and Harris M. Hanshue to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt of the Senate on account of the destruction and removal of certain papers, files, and memorandums from the files of William P. MacCracken, Jr., after a subpena had been served upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., as shown by the report of the Special Senate Committee Investigating Ocean and Air Mail Contracts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in view of the fact that this entire matter is to be taken up on the citation which has just been issued with reference to the individuals named, including Mr. MacCracken, I move that insofar as the previous citation is concerned it simply requires him to appear here and give testimony and that he be released from custody under Senate Resolution 169, adopted on Friday last.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I should like to suggest that the citation be made returnable on Friday if that is satisfactory to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. BLACK. At what hour would the Senator suggest?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. At any hour the Senator desires. I would suggest 12 o'clock.

Mr. BLACK. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the citation will be returnable at 12 o'clock noon on Friday next.

Mr. BLACK. There is one other matter that has not been disposed of and upon which, in my judgment, action should be taken. I ask that the papers which were subpenaed and which are now in the custody of the Sergeant at Arms, be turned over to the Senate committee investigating ocean and air mail contracts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR TOMORROW

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I wish to state, pending consideration of the unfinished business which will be laid before the Senate at this time, that I have consulted the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], and with his approval make the following request for unanimous consent: That on tomorrow, after the conclusion of morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the able leader of the majority if the program authorizes me to say to those Senators who were expecting to speak on the treaty that that matter is postponed under the present arrangement?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The unfinished business is Senate bill 752. The Senate may proceed to the consideration of the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty at any time it chooses to do so. There has been no definite program as to the time when consideration of the treaty shall be resumed. My suggestion is that Senators should be ready to discuss the treaty whenever the occasion arises.

Mr. LEWIS. I am anxious to be released a couple of days if that may be arranged.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no authority to release anyone. My assumption is that Senators do not desire to stay away from the Senate, but that they desire to stay here and attend upon its business.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Illinois merely desired to know whether the legislative business, to the consideration of which we are at this moment proceeding, would occupy a couple of days. If the Senator has no arrangement contemplating such, I am glad to be so informed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is impossible to say how long consideration of the pending bill will be continued. There is no agreement, as the Senator well knows, to limit debate on the bill. It is a controversial measure, and for that reason I would not undertake to make a prophecy as to how long its consideration may require.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LIMITATION OF JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards.

Mr. JOHNSON obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Caraway	Frazier	Lewis
Ashurst	Carey	George	Logan
Austin	Clark	Gibson	Lonergan
Bachman	Connally	Goldsborough	Long
Bailey	Coolidge	Gore	McAdoo

Reed	Sheppard	Thompson	Walcott
Reynolds	Shipstead	Townsend	Walsh
Robinson, Ark.	Smith	Tydings	Wheeler
Robinson, Ind.	Steiwer	Vandenberg	White

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

I regret to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the bill which is now before the Senate is brief in its terms, but of very grave importance to the States that have endeavored to regulate public utilities and, finally, to have a determination as to the justice or injustice of rates which have been fixed. I read the bill so it may be followed, and, very briefly then, I shall endeavor to show some of the reasons which have led us to present it to the Senate. The bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, no district court shall have jurisdiction of any suit to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order of an administrative board or commission of a State, or to enjoin, suspend, or restrain any action in compliance with any such order, where jurisdiction is based solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship, or the repugnance of such order to the Constitution of the United States, where such order (1) affects rates chargeable by a public utility, (2) does not interfere with interstate commerce, and (3) has been made after reasonable notice and hearing, and where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy may be had at law or in equity in the courts of such State."

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall not affect suits commenced in the district courts, either originally or by removal, prior to its passage; and all such suits shall be continued, proceedings therein had, appeals therein taken, and judgments therein rendered in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

The design of the measure is to correct what has become an intolerable evil. Those who are familiar at all with the various commissions which the States have set up for the regulation of public utilities and the determination of their rates will realize from their experience that the process is interminable where not only the State courts may be resorted to by the public utility which questions the decision of the State regulatory commission, but the United States courts may be resorted to as well.

The bill takes no substantive right away from the public utility corporations. It enables, of course, the public utility corporation to pursue its remedy through all the courts of the States and ultimately through the United States Supreme Court itself, but it seeks to put the public utility as a litigant in the same category that citizens of the States would be put under like circumstances.

It would seem, from looking at the record of the various cases that have gone to the court of last resort, as if our public utility corporations maintain a circumlocution office the design of which is to rival, in the matter of finality of fixing of rates by the various States, the celebrated case of Jarndyce against Jarndyce.

The bill comes here not from one State, but it comes from many States of the Union. It has the approval practically of every public utility commission of every State that possesses such a commission. It has the approval, too, of those who have had great trouble and great labor and great expense in endeavoring justly to fix the rates of public utility corporations in the different States of the Union.

I have with me letters from different States, all approving the measure, all begging for the relief. I have one from California from its railroad commission and from the California Farm Bureau Federation, one from the Public Utilities Commission of the State of Colorado, from the Public Service Commission of Indiana at Indianapolis, from the Board of Railroad Commissioners of the State of Montana, from the National Association of Railroad and Utility Commissioners, which maintains an office in this city, from the Public Service Commission of the State of Nevada at Carson, from the Department of Public Service of the State of New York, from the Public Utilities Commission of Oregon, from the Public Service Commission of Wisconsin, and various others, all uniting in the plea for the passage of this bill and praying that regulation, which has been attempted by the States, may if just and fair, be ultimately put in force without the intolerable and interminable delays which have existed in the past.

Not only this, but the President himself dealt with the subject when he was Governor of New York, and he dealt with it in no uncertain tones.

In January 1930 President Roosevelt, then Governor of the State of New York, sent a special message to the New York Legislature, then in session, from which I quote:

> The recent decision of the Federal court in the southern district of New York permitting the New York Telephone Co. drastically to raise its telephone rates brings to the fore in a striking way the whole question of interference by the United States courts with the regulatory powers of our public-service commission. * * *
> It means that hearings and trials which rightfully should be held before our public-service commission or before State courts are, by a scratch of the pen, transferred to a special master appointed by the Federal court. The State regulatory body * * * is laughed at by the utility seeking refuge with a special master, who is unequipped by experience and training, as well as by staff and assistants, to pursue that searching inquiry into the claims of the company which the consuming public is entitled to demand. The special master becomes the rate maker; the public-service commission becomes a mere legal fantasy.
> This power of the Federal court must be abrogated.

This is the language of the President:

> Only the Congress can give the remedy. Legislation has been introduced in the Congress to carry out this purpose. * * * I recommend to your honorable bodies that you memorialize the Congress to pass this legislation.

There have been classic examples during the last few years of the methods that public utilities pursue in order to delay and to hamper just regulation and to prevent the putting into effect of rates which are fixed by the public-utility commissions of the various States. I cannot better show the wrongs that have been permitted by the existing law, and the necessity for the measure which is today presented, than by reading to you from the Public Service Commission of the State of Montana its peculiar experience in relation to its endeavor to control and regulate Montana's public utilities. It is high time that the public utility was taught by the Congress of the United States that its rights are exactly the same as those of any citizen of any State, but that it has no greater rights and no higher privileges than any citizen of the State; and it is endeavored by this measure to put in the same category, so far as litigation is concerned, the public utility with the citizen of the State.

There is no reason in law, in equity, in justice, in governmental policy, indeed, in saying that two bites at the cherry, as it were—two sources of litigation—shall be open at the sweet will of the public utility, where but one is given to the ordinary citizen, and that a public utility may go on with its litigation in a State court until it thinks it may be defeated, and then go into a United States court, obtain its injunction there, refer the case to a master of its selection, who will go over the same ground that the public-utility commission has gone over and upon that evidence, that has once been taken, again take as it sees fit, through those who have little knowledge of the subject, the same evidence, and then substitute its will in the Federal court for the will of the State court and the will of the people, who are represented by their public-utility commission.

It is that we seek to prevent here. The Judiciary Committee, by a very large majority, reported the bill favorably. My two distinguished brethren—one from Vermont, the other from Rhode Island—are in opposition, and have presented a minority report; but I challenge them to present the view of a single State in opposition to the legislation that is proposed, or in opposition to curtailing the extraordinary and outrageous privilege, from the standpoint of litigation, that heretofore has been accorded to these public-utility corporations.

It is the policy of the Federal court, when these cases relating to rates and the like come before it, not only to try the case de novo, not only to do that which already once has been done by the State at tremendous expense and at the utmost effort, but to substitute its judgment on questions of fact that have been determined, and determined in accordance with the law.

We deprive the utilities of no legitimate legal right by this bill. They may go through every step, as they do, with the commission's trial; they may go through the courts with every step, as they do, in the States that are concerned, and have every right that is guaranteed to a litigant in those States. They may go to the Supreme Court of the United States then, by direct appeal or otherwise. They have the opportunity, thus, in the first instance before the fact-finding commission to have the trial held; in the second instance, before the court, to determine the matters that are in issue; and, in the last instance, to go to the Court of last resort in the United States to pass upon any question which may infringe their rights.

I do not intend to indulge in a constitutional argument upon this proposed law. I am not a constitutional expounder, Mr. President. We have many in the Senate. I am delighted always to hear them. We have not only constitutional expounders in the Senate but we have disciples of Blackstone here who outrival him, leaving his work as a matter of little consequence, and whose words, if they were published in any legal document, would make that tome a particularly interesting and lasting monument to the legal learning and acumen of the expounders and to the Senate itself. But I have observed as to those who talk most of the Constitution in the Senate that however emphatic they may be upon a question involving the Constitution, and however lengthy and apparently convincing they may be, the Supreme Court, with a cheerful disregard of what they have said and with a painful indifference to their eloquence—I say it with grief, and I say it mournfully, and I say it with regret—in practically every instance has decided otherwise.

So I do not intend today to expound the Constitution. If you want some of the cases that have determined that this bill is not unconstitutional, I will furnish them to you. The leading case is the Kline case, where, in so many words, the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States to determine the jurisdiction of Federal courts is most emphatically stated. So I pass that part of the legal argument. I will leave the Constitution here in very safe hands—the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT]—and they undoubtedly will present from every standpoint the stock constitutional objections to this bill; and I will rely, if it should be passed and it should ever occur that it go to the Supreme Court, upon the unbroken precedents of that Court concerning senatorial expositions of the Constitution.

Mr. President, there was a case in Montana that illustrates so thoroughly what we are trying to remedy here that I shall read some of the facts in respect to that case; but first let me read you a paragraph from the majority opinion, written by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], which is a perfect exposition of the whole philosophy of this contemplated enactment. He says:

> If the utility company goes into the Federal court in the first instance, it is the practice of these judges to try the case de novo and to pay no attention to the investigation made by the State commission and to ignore the findings of this commission. In most cases where a valuation of the property is necessary, a complete examination of the question by experts is resorted to, thus greatly increasing the expense, delaying the settlement of the question, and entirely ignoring the work of the commission in its investigation and its findings.
> Indeed, the utility company may pursue these two remedies concurrently. The Supreme Court of the United States had held that State and Federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction in such cases and a utility company can proceed in both State and Federal courts until a final judgment is rendered in one of the two proceedings. This gives the utility an opportunity, as the case progresses, to ascertain the views of the State authorities and the Federal authorities; and when it once ascertains these views and finds it will probably be defeated in one of the proceedings, it can dismiss the case in that proceeding and rely upon the other. It seems quite plain that to give the utility this advantage is unreasonable and unfair.

From Montana the head of the utility commission wrote us of the facts in a particular case that there transpired; and those facts are such as to impress one with the necessity for the relief that is here sought, because they are not different from what we have met with in California, not different from what have been met in various States of the Union. It is the old, old story of the private utility with unlimited resources seeking to tire out the people's representatives, whose resources at best are limited, and, by a process of delay, to prevent justice ultimately being done.

Says the Montana authority thus:

We believe that as a matter of principle there exists no justification for the procedure that permits Federal judicial interference with the orders of a State administrative board until such time as adequate remedies available within the State have been exhausted. Public utilities do not serve the public as a matter of constitutional right. The Supreme Court of the United States has affirmed the doctrine that a franchise to operate a public utility is not, like the general right to engage in lawful business, part of the liberty of a citizen. It being true that a public utility operates in a given State only by reason of a sovereign grant from the State, there appears to be no valid reason why disputes arising between the grantor of the franchise or privilege—the State—and the recipient thereof—the utility—should not be handled within the jurisdiction of the grantor, at least until the matter in controversy has been passed upon, on its merits, by the tribunal of the State having the final say, i.e., the highest appellate court. Then, if the utility is dissatisfied, it should have the right to a review of the strictly Federal question involved by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Montana commission is at the present in the midst of an experience in connection with a public-utility rate order which fairly illustrates the incongruities of the present situation and the desirability of such legislation as you propose. With the thought in mind that a short history of our particular experience might be of informative interest to you, we are appending a summary of the principal features of the controversy. It will be noted that before the rate order in question was promulgated, the commission held three public hearings upon the issue as to the reasonableness of the rates for the service in question; that the utility first resorted to the State courts in testing the validity of the commission's order and was successful in the trial court in securing an injunction against the commission; that the commission appealed to the Supreme Court of Montana and secured a reversal; that the utility having unsuccessfully petitioned for a rehearing by the Supreme Court of Montana filed a suit in the District Court of the United States for the District of Montana, setting forth the identical facts that were pleaded in the case in the State court and urging the same identical alleged violations of the Federal Constitution as were urged in the case in the State court; that thereafter, when the case in the State court was set for trial at the instance of the commission, the utility took a voluntary dismissal thereof, thus preventing any final judgment on the merits from being entered in the case in the State court; that the utility successfully prosecuted an application for interlocutory injunction in the Federal district court and that an appeal was taken by the commission to the Supreme Court of the United States where the interlocutory injunction was affirmed without prejudice to the consideration and determination at final hearing of all questions of law and fact.

This case illustrates how under present procedure the utility can play hide-and-seek with a State regulatory board. It is, as you know, the presently approved doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States that State and Federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction of cases of this sort and that a utility can proceed concurrently in both State and Federal courts until a final judgment is entered in one when that judgment becomes conclusive in the other as res adjudicata. In other words, a public utility has the right to proceed concurrently in both State and Federal tribunals until such time as it ascertains the views of the respective courts on questions of law involved and then it may discontinue proceedings in the tribunal where the rulings have been adverse or unfavorable. The usual grounds for abatement of an action that there is another action pending between the same parties involving the same questions is of no avail nor does the doctrine of election apply. Irrespective of the annoyance and expenses that such procedure causes a State commission, the doctrine that permits it is unsound. In the instant case, the Supreme Court of Montana, in a unanimous opinion, overruled the utility's contention with respect to the commission's order violating the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution in the particulars charged. The court considered the contention at great length and disposed of it by sound logic and with the support of able precedents. Because there was a question of fact involved that had not been determined in the lower court, the case was remanded to the trial court for proceedings consistent with the views expressed by the Supreme Court. The utility, having ascertained that the views of the Supreme Court of Montana were adverse to its contentions on the Federal questions, immediately jumped into an inferior court—inferior in the sense that the Federal district court of Montana is a trial court and not an appellate court—taking the chance of there obtaining a different interpretation. Obviously it had all to gain and nothing to lose. Ultimately, the 3 judges constituting the special district court, revised and reversed, in effect, the 5 members of the Supreme Court of Montana—an anomalous spectacle, 3 judges of a district court reversing 5 members of an appellate court.

The last chapter of this legislation has not yet been written; when it will be written is a matter of doubt. The writer hereof, as counsel for the Public Service Commission of Montana, consulted the senior district judge in this district in his chambers within the past fortnight to ascertain from him the probable date of trial of this cause upon its merits. Counsel was informed by the senior district judge that because, in his opinion, the commission had prevented the case from being heard upon final hearing on the same day and upon the same record as the application for interlocutory injunction was heard (incidentally, an opinion not at all borne out by the transcript of the proceeding), it would be a "cold" day before the senior district judge would reconvene the special court to try this action. When it was suggested to the senior district judge that the right to trial upon its merits was one accorded by the statute, the rejoinder was made that "probably" the case would be heard "in 2 or 3 years."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like the attention of my able friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], to whom the able Senator from California has made reference touching information and complete comprehension of the subject. I am disturbed on this legal thought. Suppose we pass an act which takes away from the district court or the Circuit Court of Appeals the right to hear the utility company which attempts to go into court on the ground they are a citizen of a distant State, and we confine them to the State court, and the question ultimately reaches the supreme court of the State, and the supreme court of the State decides adversely to the utility, where do we have any protection against that same utility taking an appeal from the supreme court of a State under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, claiming their property is being taken without due process of law or without compensation—an appeal from the supreme court of a State to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON. Of course it has that appeal.

Mr. LEWIS. Then how does any act of ours here save us from that?

Mr. JOHNSON. It requires them to go, in the first instance, through the State courts. Now they go to both courts.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator does not assume—may I be pardoned the colloquy in this informal manner——

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator does not assume that we can by action taken here prevent the utility, after final action by the supreme court of the State, from taking the appeal under the provision of the Constitution which heretofore was authorized, from the supreme court of the State to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON. They have a perfect right to that appeal. There is no question about that.

Mr. LEWIS. May I add that I fail to see where we then benefit?

Mr. JOHNSON. We deprive them now of no right except the right of delay by appealing to two different tribunals, a delay oftentimes interminable that destroys the very thing the public-service commissions have been set up to do.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me see if I can make the matter plain.

Mr. LEWIS. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Nebraska do so, because I know of the able Senator's activity in that connection.

Mr. NORRIS. First let me call attention to the question of the Senator from Illinois. I think he will agree with me when he thinks the matter over. He first speaks of a public utility which is the resident of another State. Then before he gets through with his question he refers to rates of a Federal nature under the fourteenth amendment. The two questions are entirely different. The proposed law in the first place repeals the jurisdiction that the Federal court now has in the case of the nonresidency of the plaintiff or the defendant. So that part of it is out.

Mr. LEWIS. Let me beg the Senator's pardon and say that I was assuming that. Assume that we can by an act of Congress prevent litigants from going to the Federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. Then that being disposed of, we still, do we not, reserve the right to them by which they can from the supreme court of the State in its final ruling still go to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. NORRIS. If there is a Federal question, such as the Senator refers to, under the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; they can always claim that, as the Senator knows.

Mr. NORRIS. We cannot take away from them the right to go into the Federal court on a proper appeal. They must, however, go in a different way than they go now. They must go from the supreme court of the State to the Supreme Court of the United States. They cannot go anywhere in Federal court on the question of diversity of citizenship. That jurisdiction is taken away entirely in this class of cases.

Mr. LEWIS. That is the principal object of this measure?

Mr. NORRIS. That is one of the objects. The other is that they cannot go into two courts at the same time. So they cannot do as they did in the Montana case, go into the State court and get a decision, even from the supreme court of the State; and if that decision is unsatisfactory to them, they then dismiss their suit entirely, wipe it off, and commence a new suit in the Federal court.

As it is now, after they have been defeated in the State courts, if they dismiss the case before a final action is rendered they can then commence anew in the district court of the United States, and then they have a right to try everything just as though it never had been tried or heard of before, and go through the various courts of the United States and reach the Supreme Court, thus trying it twice instead of once.

Mr. LEWIS. The bill then has for its purpose—as I know is the purpose of the Senator—the avoiding of any such purpose of obstruction?

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; that is the object of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Illinois in his last remark has very ably described what we are endeavoring to do. We are not endeavoring to deprive a public utility of any legal right. I would not take it from them, and the Senator from Illinois would not. But the object is to make them subject to the jurisdiction of the laws of our States; to give them their rights in every instance to the trial of the question of fact first before the public-utility commission, to give them every legal right they have, and if any right that is guaranteed by the Constitution is infringed upon at all, then, of course, the legal right of appeal ultimately from the highest tribunal in the State to the United States Supreme Court.

But it is unjust to our people, worse than unjust, to have, as we have, for instance, cases that I am familiar with, and that other Senators, if they follow the actions of their public-utility commissions, are familiar with—cases where for 2 long years the people at the greatest expense, expense that could scarcely be borne, have fought, with their experts that they had to hire, of course, with their testimony, that they had to gather; these always are at hand with the great public-utility corporation, before the body that has been selected by the people of the State to try the question of rates and the like, when those rates are alleged to be excessive or unfair, and after a couple of years on both sides of a fight of that character, then with the decision rendered by a public-utility commission that you know to be fair, and to have tried the case upon its merits, and wherein has been given every opportunity for the presentation of the facts—after the decision by the public-utility commission the public utility is permitted now under the law to go into the State court to try out some one judge upon the bench there until it ascertains what that judge's view upon the law may be, and then to go into the United States court as well, after another year or two have been frittered away in the State court, and in that United States court get its interlocutory decree, refer the case to a master, who is simply, of course, the employee and friend of the court, and have that master then take all the testimony, take it de novo, without paying one particle of attention to the 2 years of trial before the public-utility commission and the facts proved there, and have that master then make his report, and the Federal court then sits upon it for an interminable period; or, as was said in the Montana case, in the official communication to me upon this bill by the representative of the Montana commission, have his Federal judge say, "It will be a cold day before the senior district judge would reconvene the special court to try this action"; and then, when his attention is called to the reprehensible character of that statement, hear him say, "Probably, the case would be heard in 2 or 3 years." That is the kind of thing I am seeking to prevent by this enactment; and it is that thing against which practically every public-utility commission in this country now rebels; and it is just that thing against which the President of the United States, when Governor of the State of New York, expressed himself most emphatically and concerning which he insisted there should be some remedy applied. That remedy we are now presenting.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator from California will pardon me for just a moment, this measure proposes to limit the jurisdiction of inferior courts, the circuit courts of appeal and district courts. It does not limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. It could not do so.

Mr. LONG. Congress having created the inferior courts, according to the jurisprudence and the history of this country, it can withhold such jurisdiction from its creature as it desires to do. Without any question Congress can abolish the courts altogether, with the exception of the Supreme Court of the United States, and it can increase the number of judges on the Supreme Court if it wants to. The point the Senator from California is making, I having been a member of a public-service commission for 10 years, can be pretty well exemplified by a depot case where a public-service commission would sit and order a little depot costing, say, $3,000, so as to bring it within the limit of jurisdiction. I have seen a case where an order of a public-service commission for a depot was put in the Federal court and kept there for years, and not even a master's report could be had on it. I have seen that kind of cases. Not only that, but there is intolerable expense involved in public-service commission's enforcing rate orders through the Federal courts. The expense is heavier than the budget of any State justifies, so much so that in one case I remember, of which the record is in the United States Supreme Court and the circuit court of appeals, it appeared that the corporation had expended while the case was pending in the courts several hundred thousand dollars for the record, to obtain which the State would have been required to have spent equally as much from the initial stages in the Federal court, which were before a master.

The elected officials of the State, the supreme court of the State, and the entire functions of the government of an entire State are mere creatures in the hands of a master appointed by a Federal district court in enforcing decrees and orders and regulations of the State. A master, a little two-bit, two-by-four master, is placed over the whole functions and the regulations of a State. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred some man is appointed master by the court who has had absolutely no such thing as experience in public-utility regulation, who never sat in a court in his life, but he is placed above all the processes of the State, and the master's report is, ninety-nine times out of a hundred, the report of the court.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if the able Senator from California will allow me to say a few words, while my interest is really purely personal, and I have a little pique still remaining within me, I have seen much of what Senators describe. I was corporation counsel of the city of Chicago where it was known this position partook of the character, in a small way, of the attorney generalship of the State, for at times the corporation counsel would be acting mayor and might also name the lesser courts in those days. But in a contest against the gas company, with a view of reducing their rates and securing equitable rates, the case was continued from place to place and from time to time until finally, upon an assault upon the legislature, the city council, as having no right to readjust the rates, the case was dragged on for more than 7 years.

In a similar controversy upon the question of the franchise of the street railways, where before the Supreme Court of the United States I was not successful in presenting what I felt were the rights of the city that, too, was dragged through a long period of time. I deplore that it was adjudged by Mr. Justice Peckham, who, known by us in party politics as a Democrat, delivered the most complete Republican opinion that could be conceived of if the doctrine of the Federal Government's right to control the States is Republican, as it seems to be when contrasted with the Democratic doctrine which insists that the States in their sovereignty are exempt from Federal control. There is to be found the first opinion in the Supreme Court of the United States where the Court assumed to take a ruling of a board as the basis for the Supreme Court of the United States taking jurisdiction, on the theory that the decision of the board was equivalent to the taking of property under the fourteenth amendment, because the rate was so small, as was contended, that it robbed the utility of their property.

Here is my contention, here is my real point: That, in view of the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has laid down a doctrine which I regard as utterly destructive of the fundamental rights of the State, how can we avoid a utility company going at once into a Federal court, claiming that the decision of the utility board, upon whatever rate we may say, is equivalent to confiscation of their property under the Constitution? How can we by an act of Congress prevent that utility from going directly into the Federal court on that constitutional ground, apart from its privilege, to which the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has called attention to, on the ground of the mere diversity of citizenship? How can we avoid by an act of Congress the enjoyment of that which under the Constitution, distorted as I insist it has been, perverted as I know from history, but nevertheless by the Supreme Court of the United States held to be a fixed privilege directly of the utilities? Does my able friend from California feel that by an act of Congress we can prevent the utilities from going immediately into the Federal court, the lower court, the district court, and the circuit court, under that constitutional provision?

Mr. JOHNSON. I gather that the question presented by my friend now refers to the right of the Congress to pass such a measure as that now pending?

Mr. LEWIS. No, sir; but I ask the Senator from California would the measure he now proposes, carried to its legitimate conclusion, prevent a utility from going into the Federal court at once—or is that his purpose?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. We do not take away the right in the case the Senator puts, on the ground that under the fourteenth amendment property is being taken without due process of law.

Mr. LEWIS. We are not assuming, then, to take that right away under the law?

Mr. NORRIS. No; we are not. The procedure would be different. Instead of commencing the case in a Federal district court, it will go through the State court and reach the Supreme Court of the United States. A different approach is provided, a difference in procedure; that is the only difference.

Mr. LEWIS. I think I understand the distinction.

Mr. JOHNSON. The utility has its day in court.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. The right to determine the jurisdiction of the Federal courts has been affirmed frequently by the Supreme Court. I said that the leading case upon the subject was the Kline case. I have it before me; but it is not necessary, I take it, to read it to the distinguished Senator from Illinois to demonstrate the right in Congress to define the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. Defining that jurisdiction, the utility may have its right ultimately to go to the Supreme Court of the United States upon any Federal question that may be involved, in view of what may have been done by a public-utilities commission.

Mr. LEWIS. But they cannot use both courts concurrently for the purpose of obstruction.

Mr. JOHNSON. Exactly; that is what we seek to prevent.

Mr. LEWIS. I think I catch the idea.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, if any Member of the Senate should be particularly interested in tracing the gradual development of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in relation to public-utility cases, and the vicissitudes that the views held by many of us have met with during many years of decision by the United States Supreme Court, there is in the hearings a brief, historic in character and which, I think, a very excellent one, presented by the attorneys for the railroad commission in the State of California. This brief begins with the early cases of public utilities and pursues the theme throughout all the different epochs of the decisions that have been rendered by the Supreme Court. I refer that brief to Members of the Senate of inquiring minds, so that if they desire they may pursue the subject. Suffice it to say, in conclusion, upon this bill, that we are seeking to render the processes that have been abused by public-utility corporations no longer possible of abuse. We are seeking to make them bow to the law of the land; we are seeking to give them every opportunity that is accorded any litigant to go to the highest court in the land upon any Federal question, leaving them all their legal rights but subjecting them to exactly what every citizen of every State is subjected to by the laws of his State.

It is a necessary enactment; it is an appropriate enactment; it is an enactment that must be put into operation if our public-utility commissions are to do the work that has been assigned to them and do the work in behalf of the people that is theirs to accomplish.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me inquire of the Senator as to the third condition in section 1 of the bill. Is there not danger there of giving jurisdiction entirely to the Federal courts to determine particularly whether or not it thinks there has been reasonable notice and hearing and whether the equity court thinks that the remedy at law is speedy, plain, and efficient?

Mr. JOHNSON. All that we can do is to describe the situation. We cannot, of course, foresee what a wrong interpretation will be made by a court or that there will be a wrong done by a court.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the Senator as to that; but when we describe all the different conditions and then put power in the district court to pass upon the particular point and say, "Well, it is true that clauses 1 and 2 do not apply; but this hearing before the railroad commission was not full enough; it was not reasonable, and the remedy provided by the State laws is not plain, it is not speedy, or it is not efficient."

Mr. JOHNSON. I think that that is simply to determine that a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy is given by the State courts.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not criticizing the Senator's bill, but I wanted to invite his attention to the fact that danger lurks in the language, it seems to me.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield the floor, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, there is, as the Senator from Texas says, a danger in the provision, and I hope the Senator from California will consider striking out those words. Let me say that quite often the fixing of rates is a mere matter of legislation; that is, rates are fixed by the legislature. The matter of fixing rates and service for a public utility is not a judicial function at all; it is a legislative function, and the courts of the country have said that legislation may proceed without notice. The courts have held that it is not a matter for the judiciary to regulate the time in which a hearing must be held or the kind of evidence which shall be received. I really believe the provision is vesting the court with a power that it has not now.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator is mistaken in that, I think.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. This bill applies to the order of an administrative board or commission of a State; it does not apply to direct legislative measures; and I think it is proper that reasonable notice and hearing should be had in proceedings before a commission.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I say to the Senator from Louisiana that it is not only, as the Senator from Arkansas says, proper but it is essential.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the regulatory body meets without notice, without hearings, and enacts a particular set of rates for a public utility, of course, a situation is created which no one wants in the first place, and that the law will not permit in the second place.

Mr. LONG. I know, but the last clause says "reasonable hearing." What is a "reasonable hearing"?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The provision reads "reasonable notice and hearing."

Mr. LONG. "And hearing."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The word "reasonable" applies to notice and does not modify the word "hearing."

Mr. LONG. It says "reasonable notice and hearing", and I think that would mean both. I am not a very good etymologist—is not that the word?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator will have to excuse me as to what word ought to be used; but it is really a very plain matter, and I think there will be no difference between us if the Senator will consider the language that is used in the bill. The requirement is for "reasonable notice and hearing", and "reasonable notice" is such notice as will give the parties served with it the opportunity for a hearing. The word "reasonable" does not modify the word "hearing." It modifies "notice."

Mr. LONG. I rather disagree. I am not very much of a grammar student. I wonder if it would not be a good idea to make it read "reasonable notice and a hearing", so we would know that the word "reasonable" does not apply to "hearing"?

Mr. JOHNSON. The language that is employed is the usual legal verbiage taken verbatim from what it is asserted is essential in order to have a legal procedure.

Mr. LONG. It is the Senator's bill and I shall not argue it further.

[Mr. AUSTIN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for about 1 hour and 30 minutes he yielded the floor for the day. His speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have been advised that the Senator from Vermont does not desire to conclude his address this evening. I inquire if he is now ready to suspend?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am ready to suspend for the day.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR CIVIL WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. McKELLAR (for Mr. GLASS), from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 261) thereon.

PAPER BY SENATOR LONG

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD not a speech but what is more in the nature of an appeal to the people of America.

There being no objection, the paper entitled "Carry Out the Command of the Lord" was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By HUEY P. LONG, United States Senator

People of America: In every community get together at once and organize a share-our-wealth society—Motto: Every man a king.

Principles and platform:

1. To limit poverty by providing that every deserving family shall share in the wealth of America for not less than one third of the average wealth, thereby to possess not less than $5,000 free of debt.

2. To limit fortunes to such a few million dollars as will allow the balance of the American people to share in the wealth and profits of the land.

3. Old-age pensions of $30 per month to persons over 60 years of age who do not earn as much as $1,000 per year or who possess less than $10,000 in cash or property, thereby to remove from the field of labor in times of unemployment those who have contributed their share to the public service.

4. To limit the hours of work to such an extent as to prevent overproduction and to give the workers of America some share in the recreations, conveniences, and luxuries of life.

5. To balance agricultural production with what can be sold and consumed according to the laws of God, which have never failed.

6. To care for the veterans of our wars.

7. Taxation to run the Government to be supported, first, by reducing big fortunes from the top, thereby to improve the country and provide employment in public works whenever agricultural surplus is such as to render unnecessary, in whole or in part, any particular crop.

SIMPLE AND CONCRETE—NOT AN EXPERIMENT

To share our wealth by providing for every deserving family to have one third of the average wealth would mean that, at the worst, such a family could have a fairly comfortable home, an automobile, and a radio, with other reasonable home conveniences, and a place to educate their children. Through sharing the work, that is, by limiting the hours of toil so that all would share in what is made and produced in the land, every family would have enough coming in every year to feed, clothe, and provide a fair share of the luxuries of life to its members. Such is the result to a family, at the worst.

From the worst to the best there would be no limit to opportunity. One might become a millionaire or more. There would be a chance for talent to make a man big, because enough would be floating in the land to give brains its chance to be used. As it is, no matter how smart a man may be, everything is tied up in so few hands that no amount of energy or talent has a chance to gain any of it.

Would it break up big concerns? No. It would simply mean that, instead of one man getting all the one concern made, that there might be 1,000 or 10,000 persons sharing in such excess fortune, any one of whom, or all of whom, might be millionaires and over.

I ask somebody in every city, town, village, and farm community of America to take this as my personal request to call a meeting of as many neighbors and friends as will come to it to start a share-our-wealth society. Elect a president and a secretary and charge no dues. The meeting can be held at a courthouse, in some town hall or public building, or in the home of someone.

It does not matter how many will come to the first meeting. Get a society organized, if it has only two members. Then let us get to work quick, quick, quick to put an end by law to people starving and going naked in this land of too much to eat and too much to wear. The case is all with us. It is the word and work of the Lord. The Gideons had but two men when they organized. Three tailors of Tooley Street drew the Magna Carta of England. The Lord says:

"For where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them."

We propose to help our people into the place where the Lord said was their rightful own and no more.

We have waited long enough for these financial masters to do these things. They have promised and promised. Now we find our country $10,000,000,000 further in debt on account of the depression, and big leaders even propose to get 90 percent of that out of the hides of the common people in the form of a sales tax.

There is nothing wrong with the United States. We have more food than we can eat. We have more cloth.3 and things out of which to make clothes than we can wear. We have more houses and lands than the whole 120,000,000 can use if they all had good homes. So what is the trouble? Nothing except that a handful of men have everything and the balance of the people have nothing if their debts were paid. There should be "Every man a king" in this land flowing with milk and honey instead of the lords of finance at the top and slaves and peasants at the bottom.

Now be prepared for the slurs and snickers of some high-ups when you start your local spread-our-wealth society. Also when you call your meeting be on your guard for some smart-aleck tool of the interests to come in and ask questions. Refer such to me for an answer to any question, and I will send you a copy. Spend your time getting the people to work to save their children and to save their homes, or to get a home for those who have already lost their own.

To explain the title, motto, and principles of such a society I give the full information, viz:

Title: Share-our-wealth society is simply to mean that God's creatures on this lovely American continent have a right to share in the wealth they have created in this country. They have the right to a living, with the conveniences and some of the luxuries of this life, so long as there are too many or enough for all. They have a right to raise their children in a healthy, wholesome atmosphere and to educate them, rather than to face the dread of their undernourishment and sadness by being denied a real life.

Motto: "Every man a king" conveys the great plan of God and of the Declaration of Independence, which said: "All men are created equal." It conveys that no one man is the lord of another, but that from the head to the foot of every man is carried his sovereignty.

Now, to cover the principles of the share-our-wealth society, I give them in order:

1. To limit poverty:

We propose that a deserving family shall share in our wealth of America at least for one third the average. An average family is slightly less than five persons. The number has become less during depression. The United States total wealth in normal times is about $400,000,000,000, or about $15,000 to a family. If there were fair distribution of our things in America, our national wealth would be 3 or 4 or 5 times the $400,000,000,000, because a free, circulating wealth is worth many times more than wealth congested and frozen into a few hands as is America's wealth. But, figuring only on the basis of wealth as valued when frozen into a few hands, there is the average of $15,000 to the family. We say that we will limit poverty of the deserving people. One third of the average wealth to the family, or $5,000, is a fair limit to the depths we will allow any one man's family to fall. None too poor, none too rich.

2. To limit fortunes:

The wealth of this land is tied up in a few hands. It makes no difference how many years the laborer has worked, nor does it make any difference how many dreary rows the farmer has plowed, the wealth he has created is in the hands of manipulators. They have not worked any more than many other people who have nothing. Now we do not propose to hurt these very rich persons. We simply say that when they reach the place of millionaires they have everything they can use and they ought to let somebody else have something. As it is, 0.1 of 1 percent of the bank depositors own nearly half of the money in the banks, leaving 99.9 of bank depositors owning the balance. Then two thirds of the people do not even have a bank account. The lowest estimate is that 4 percent of the people own 85 percent of our wealth. The people cannot ever come to light unless we share our wealth, hence the society to do it.

3. Old-age pensions:

Everyone has begun to realize something must be done for our old people who work out their lives, feed and clothe children and are left penniless in their declining years. They should be made to look forward to their mature years for comfort rather than fear. We propose that, at the age of 60, every person should begin to draw a pension from our Government of $30 per month, unless the person of 60 or over has an income of over $1,000 per year or is worth $10,000, which is two thirds of the average wealth in America, even figured on a basis of it being frozen into a few hands. Such a pension would retire from labor those persons who keep the rising generations from finding employment.

4. To limit the hours of work:

This applies to all industry. The longer hours the human family can rest from work, the more it can consume. It makes no difference how many labor-saving devices we may invent, just as long as we keep cutting down the hours and sharing what those machines produce, the better we become. Machines can never produce too much if everybody is allowed his share, and if it ever got to the point that the human family could work only 15 hours per week and still produce enough for everybody, then praised be the name of the Lord. Heaven would be coming nearer to earth. All of us could return to school a few months every year to learn some things they have found out since we were there; all could be gentlemen; "Every man a king."

5. To balance agricultural production with consumption:

About the easiest of all things to do when financial masters and market manipulators step aside and let work the law of the Lord. When we have a supply of anything that is more than we can use for a year or two, just stop planting that particular crop for a year either in all the country or in a part of it. Let the Government take over and store the surplus for the next year. If there is not something else for the farmers to plant or some other work for them to do to live on for the year when the crop is banned, then let that be the year for the public works to be done in the section where the farmers need work. There is plenty of it to do and taxes on of the big fortunes at the top will supply plenty of money without hurting anybody. In time we would have the people not struggling to raise so much when all were well fed and clothed. Distribution of wealth almost solves the whole problem without further trouble.

6. To care for the veterans of our wars:

A restoration of all rights taken from them by recent laws and further, a complete care of any disabled veteran for any ailment, who has no means of support.

7. Taxation:

Taxation is to be levied first at the top for the Government's support and expenses. Swollen fortunes should be reduced principally through taxation. The Government should be run through revenues it derives after allowing persons to become well above millionaires and no more. In this manner the fortunes will be kept down to reasonable size and at the same time all the works of the Government kept on a sound basis, without debts.

Things cannot continue as they now are. America must take one of three choices, viz:

1. A monarchy ruled by financial masters—a modern feudalism.
2. Communism.
3. Sharing of the wealth and income of the land among all the people by limiting the hours of toil and limiting the size of fortunes.

The Lord prescribed the last form. It would preserve all our gains, share them among our population, guarantee a greater country and a happy people.

The need for such share-our-wealth society is to spread the truth among the people and to convey their sentiment to their Members of Congress.

Whenever such a local society has been organized, please send me notice of the same, so that I may send statistics and data which such local society can give out in their community, either through word of mouth in meetings, by circulars, or, when possible, in local newspapers.

Please understand that the Wall Street controlled public press will give you as little mention as possible and will condemn and ridicule your efforts. Such makes necessary the organizations to share the wealth of this land among the people, which the financial masters are determined they will not allow to be done. Where possible, I hope those organizing a society in one community will get in touch with their friends in other communities and get them to organize societies in them. Anyone can have copies of this article reprinted in circular form to distribute wherever they may desire, or, if they want me to have them printed for them, I can do so and mail them to any address for 60 cents per hundred or $4 per thousand copies.

I introduced in Congress and supported other measures to bring about the sharing of our wealth when I first reached the United States Senate in January 1932. The main efforts to that effect polled about 6 votes in the Senate at first. Last spring my plan polled the votes of nearly 20 United States Senators, becoming dangerous in proportions to the financial lords. Since then I have been abused in the newspapers and over the radio for everything under the sun. Now that I am pressing this program, the lies and abuse in the big newspapers and over the radio are a matter of daily occurrence. It will all become greater with this effort. Expect that. Meantime go ahead with the work to organize a share-our-wealth society.

Sincerely,

HUEY P. LONG,
United States Senator.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

DATA OF INTERDEPARTMENTAL BOARD ON GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter from the manager of the Port of Philadelphia Ocean Traffic Bureau addressed to myself with regard to the interdepartmental report on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence project.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PORT OF PHILADELPHIA OCEAN TRAFFIC BUREAU,
Philadelphia, February 2, 1934.

Hon. DAVID A. REED,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Thank you very much for sending us the copies of the data prepared by the Interdepartmental Board on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence project.

When we read the newspaper accounts of this report the figures therein quoted appeared to be so out of line with the situation, as we view it, that I thought them seriously open to question. We have made a rough analysis of this report and should like to call the following to your attention as indicative that the report cannot be accepted as reliable, particularly that portion beginning on page 6 headed "Potential Commerce via Seaway", and that on page 8 headed "Coordination of Transportation Agencies." That portion on page 9 headed "The Power Project" we have not analyzed. The statements in the report to which we take exception are as follows:

On page 3 there is a statement that in the present St. Lawrence Canal the rate of growth of the traffic is "approximately 16 percent per annum."

In all normal uses of this phrase it would be assumed that it meant a growth each year of 16 percent of the former year's traffic. If this were the case, the traffic would have increased from 2,000,000 tons in 1908 to 38,921,000 tons in 1928. The actual increase was to 8,400,000 tons in 1928, which is at the rate of 7.44 percent per annum.

On page 8, in the sixth paragraph, there is estimated a potential traffic in foreign trade of 13,483,833 tons, which would be carried at a gross saving of $78,893,130. This is a saving at the rate of about 29 cents per 100 pounds.

At the present time there is a system of lake-and-rail rates in effect which generally bring the traffic down the Lakes in boats as far as Buffalo, where it is transshipped into cars and carried to seaboard. Most of the traffic which it is assumed would travel by water is of those commodities which take the fifth- or sixth-class rates and the railroad share of these through rates for the service they perform in carrying the goods from Buffalo to the seaboard varies from 18¼ to 23¼ cents per 100 pounds. It is obvious that if 29 cents per 100 pounds is to be saved, the ships which are to carry this traffic to foreign countries must accept from 5¾ to 10¾ cents less to carry these goods from the lake ports to the Atlantic Ocean than they now receive to carry them from the lake ports to Buffalo only. Such an assumption is absurd on its face and the claimed saving is questionable.

On page 8 there are cited typical examples of savings in domestic shipments. The first one cited is $5.44 to $12.64 per ton on lumber from Grays Harbor, Wash., to Detroit, Mich. The present rate for lumber from Grays Harbor, Wash., to north Atlantic ports on vessels traversing the Panama Canal is about $6.80 per ton and the through rate to Detroit, including the rail haul from the seaboard, is $12.60 per ton. How it would be possible to save $12.64 we fail to understand. If $5.44 were saved, it would be assumed that these ships would be willing to travel an additional distance of about 2,000 nautical miles to Detroit for an additional revenue of 36 cents a ton.

The second item cited is the saving of $9.332 per ton on fifth-class commodities from Philadelphia to Chicago. The present rate for fifth-class commodities from Philadelphia to Chicago is $10.20 per ton. If $9.332 is to be saved, it would be necessary that the water rate from Philadelphia to Chicago via the St. Lawrence seaway and the Great Lakes be $0.868 per ton, which is, as a practical matter, probably insufficient to pay the cost of loading and unloading the material onto and from the ship. At the present time there are motor barges operating from north Atlantic ports via the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Great Lakes which we have known of offering a rate of $6 per ton. This is probably a faster service than would be supplied by the St. Lawrence seaway, and we fail to understand how it would be possible to save 50 percent more than the total rate.

The third item cites a saving of $84.947 per ton on automobiles from Detroit, Mich., to Los Angeles. The present rate on automobiles from Detroit, Mich., to Los Angeles, when carried by rail to the eastern seaboard and then by steamer through the Panama Canal is $70.60 per ton. You will note the saving is cited $14.947 per ton in excess of the total rate.

If the other figures in regard to potential commerce are figured in the same way as these typical examples, we feel the entire report is misleading and open to serious question, particularly that section headed "Coordination of Transportation Agencies", which purports to show that any diversion of traffic to the St. Lawrence seaway "will benefit rather than injure the roads" (meaning railroads).

It would seem particularly pertinent to inquire why the War Department, Department of Commerce, and the Power Authority of the State of New York—which, I understand, make up the interdepartmental board of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence project—should express an opinion upon the effect of this operation on the railroads or on the coordination of transportation agencies when there is available the Federal Coordinator of Transportation and the Interstate Commerce Commission, who are well equipped to speak accurately and with authority on the subject.

We have given you our thoughts on this subject thinking that they might be useful to you in your efforts against ratification of this treaty, which we wish to assure you are thoroughly appreciated.

Very truly yours,

R. H. HORTON, Manager.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP-WATERWAY TREATY

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two communications expressing opposition to ratification of the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty. One, signed by John S. Fisher, former Governor of Pennsylvania, and now president of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, discloses unanimous opposition on the part of that body. The second, written by Mr. A. F. Whitney, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, treats most comprehensively of the subject of transportation and the effect ratification would have on labor employed in transportation services.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 2, 1934.

JAMES J. DAVIS,
United States Senate:

At a public hearing on the St. Lawrence seaway project, held today at the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, at which the trade industrial transportation and power interests were fully represented, strong protest against ratification of this treaty was unanimously recorded. Pending full report of our meeting will you not call attention of the Senate to action taken?

JOHN S. FISHER,
President Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce.

RAILWAY LABOR EXECUTIVES' ASSOCIATION,
January 31, 1934.

The Honorable JAMES J. DAVIS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In compliance with your wishes I am presenting herewith some of the important reasons why our employees are opposing the St. Lawrence waterway project.

We believe that the St. Lawrence transportation project cannot be justified on the basis of cost or economic necessity. The Nation has a railroad system with a capacity capable of carrying the peak transportation load at all times of the year. One of the most important facts to be kept in mind in considering the vast sum of money involved in the development of this project, is that the St. Lawrence River has been closed to navigation on an average of 152 days a year for the past 10 years. Those familiar with the conditions that prevail in the St. Lawrence Channel during the winter months well know that the proposed improvement will not remedy this condition.

Railway employees believe it is unwise for the Federal Government to spend money on an unnecessary project, particularly at this time, when so many programs vitally necessary to the lives of our people should receive the benefit of public funds.

It seems ridiculous for the people of the United States to spend huge sums to help an adjoining country build a parallel and competitive route in a territory extrinsic to the United States. Why should the American people possessing facilities more than capable of fulfilling their transportation requirements, spend money on a route that will be a rival to an existing all-American route wholly within the territory of the United States?

We also believe that any savings which might accrue as a result of cheaper rates would benefit only a few shippers, the farmers not included. These small benefits would be at the expense of the taxpaying public. It is a demonstrable fact that no actual savings to the people is possible when all the costs of construction and maintenance of the St. Lawrence waterway project are considered.

The current belief that waterway transportation on the St. Lawrence would be incomparably cheaper than land traffic is due to errors in estimating the total costs. Railroad rates have to cover the roadbed, the terminals, and all other incidents of capital outlay. However, the rates on waterways cover only the carriers' costs. To compare these costs with railway charges and overlook the large amount of money the people of the United States must expend for the construction and upkeep of waterways is a gross mistake.

For many years the railway employees have submitted without protest to technological improvements which have thrown many of their number into the bread lines. In 1931, 1,167,000 employees moved the same ton-miles of freight as it required 2,000,000 men to move in 1913. With 370,000 fewer employees in 1929 than in 1920, $100,000,000 more revenue was produced.

The employees do not wish to be understood as objecting to progressive steps which give reasonable hope of benefit to the general public. We have no objections to flood control and water-power projects. We do, however, object to the needless expenditure of public funds to create free rights-of-way for water carriers when railroad facilities already exist which are more than capable of satisfying the Nation's tremendous needs.

When the Government has found it desirable to loan large sums of public money to support the financial structure of the railroads, it does not appear to us to be wise to expend public funds for the construction of less efficient and unnecessary transportation agencies.

Railroad employees feel, in view of the hundreds of thousands of former railroad workers who are unemployed and several thousand others working only part time and receiving less than a living wage, that the Government should not needlessly intensify the problems of the railroad industry and impair the ability of the railroads to carry the Nation's peak transportation load at all times. It must be remembered in this connection that because the St. Lawrence waterway would be incapacitated a substantial part of the year, due to climatic conditions, the railroads will be expected to maintain facilities sufficient to carry the Nation's full requirements, however successful the waterway may be during certain months of the year.

I hope the above views will be helpful to you in your efforts to defeat this proposed wasteful expenditure of public money. I enclose herewith a concise statement on this subject prepared by the Association of Railway Executives printed in the Railroad Trainman, our official monthly publication. I believe this will be helpful.

Assuring of my appreciation of your interest in this subject and of my desire to be helpful, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

A. F. WHITNEY, Chairman.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONERGAN in the chair). Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Chester J. Todd, of Alaska, to be United States marshal, division no. 3, District of Alaska, to succeed Harvey P. Sullivan, term expired.

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Harry C. Blanton, of Missouri, to be United States attorney, eastern district of Missouri, to succeed Louis H. Breuer, whose resignation was effective at the close of January 31, 1934.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

J. Hilary Keenan, of Pennsylvania, to be United States marshal, western district of Pennsylvania, to succeed Walter W. Meyer, appointed by court;

Percy Brewington, of Pennsylvania, to be United States marshal, middle district of Pennsylvania, to succeed Robert M. Vail, resigned; and Joseph B. Reing, of Pennsylvania, to be United States marshal, eastern district of Pennsylvania, to succeed Walter C. Fetters, resigned.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the nomination of Leo T. Crowley, of Wisconsin, to be a member of the board of directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for the unexpired term of 6 years from September 6, 1933, vice Walter J. Cummings, resigned.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Frank J. Duffy, of Nogales, Ariz., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 26, with headquarters at Nogales, Ariz., in place of James W. McDonald.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION—LEO T. CROWLEY

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I understand the Committee on Banking and Currency today recommended a favorable report on the nomination of Leo T. Crowley to be a member of the board of directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. I am making certain inquiries respecting Mr. Crowley; and if I should be absent from the floor when the calendar is taken up, I request 2 or 3 days' time to complete the inquiry before the nomination shall be submitted to the Senate.

POSTMASTER AT GONIC, N.H.—RECOMMITTAL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, several days ago the nomination of Mr. Edward E. Crossette to be postmaster at Gonic, N.H., was confirmed. The notice of that confirmation has not as yet gone to the President, and I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the nomination was confirmed may be reconsidered and that the nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the nomination was confirmed is reconsidered, and the nomination will be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar is now in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I again ask, at the request of other Senators who are absent, that the first nomination on the calendar go over for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the first nomination on the calendar will be passed over.

The next nomination on the calendar will be stated.

GOVERNOR OF HAWAII

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph B. Poindexter, of Hawaii, to be Governor of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief sketch of Judge Joseph Boyd Poindexter, whose nomination as Governor of Hawaii has just been confirmed.

There being no objection, the sketch was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Poindexter, Joseph Boyd, lawyer; b. Canyon City, Oreg., April 14, 1869; s. Thomas W. and Margaret (Pipkin) P.; student Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio; LL.B., Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., 1892; m. Margaret Conger, of Dillon, Mont., April 22, 1897. Admitted to Montana bar, 1892, and practiced at Dillon; county attorney, Beaverhead County, Mont., 1897–1903; district judge fifth judicial district of Montana, 1909–15; attorney general of Montana, 1915–17; United States district judge, district of Hawaii, by appointment of President Wilson, March 16, 1917; retired from bench and resumed law practice. Democrat. Episcopalian. Member American and Hawaii Bar Associations. Mason (32d degree; Shriner). Home: Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Horace Frierson, Jr., to be United States attorney for the middle district of Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of James R. Worley to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James R. Jetton to be United States marshal for the middle district of Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the postoffice nominations may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the nominations for promotion of sundry officers of the Army and a reappointment in the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that all Army nominations may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

TREATY OF EXTRADITION WITH TURKEY

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, on Friday last I called up the treaty between the United States and Turkey with regard to extradition. At that time the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desired an opportunity to read the treaty, and stated that he would have no objection to its coming up today; in fact, he expected it to be considered today. I now ask that the Senate consider that treaty.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive AA (68th Cong., 1st sess.), a treaty of extradition with Turkey, signed at Lausanne, Switzerland, on August 6, 1923, which was read as follows:

EXTRADITION TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND TURKEY

The United States of America and Turkey, having deemed it advantageous, with a view to assuring a better administration of justice, to surrender, reciprocally, under certain specified circumstances, persons sentenced or prosecuted for the crimes and offenses indicated hereinafter, have resolved to conclude a new Extradition Treaty and to that end have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries, to wit:

The President of the United States of America,

Joseph C. Grew, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Swiss Confederation;

The Government of the Grand National Assembly of Turkey,

Ismet Pasha, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Government of the Grand National Assembly of Turkey, Deputy of Adrianople in the said Assembly;

Doctor Riza Nour Bey, Minister of Sanitary Affairs and of Social Welfare of the Government of the Grand National Assembly of Turkey, Deputy of Sinope in the said Assembly; and

Hassan Bey, former Minister of National Economy of the Government of the Grand National Assembly of Turkey, Deputy of Trebizond in the said Assembly;

Who, after having exhibited their full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following provisions:

ARTICLE I

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Grand National Assembly of Turkey agree upon requisition to deliver reciprocally persons who, being prosecuted or condemned by the judicial authorities of one of the High Contracting Parties for any of the crimes or offenses enumerated in Article II, committed in territory subject to the jurisdiction of such Party, may seek asylum or be found in the territory of the other Party. Nevertheless, the extradition shall take place only if the evidence of culpability is such that, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or accused is found, it would justify his apprehension and warrant penal proceedings had the act been committed there.

ARTICLE II

Extradition shall be granted for the following crimes and offenses, provided they are punishable both under the laws of the place of refuge and under those of the State making the requisition, to wit:

1. Wilful homicide, including parricide, assassination, poisoning and infanticide.

2. Arson.

3. Piracy; mutiny on board a vessel when the crew or a part thereof or other persons on board shall have taken possession of the vessel, by means of fraud or violence against the captain.

4. The act of breaking into and entering a dwelling house in the night time with intent to commit therein a crime, the character of which shall be specified in the documents referred to in Article VI. (Crime of burglary.)

5. The forgery or falsification of public or private documents; fraudulent use of forged or falsified documents.

6. Counterfeiting, forgery or alteration of money (either coin or paper), public bonds and their coupons, bank-notes, debentures, or other documents or instruments of credit; the issuance, circulation or use thereof with fraudulent intent; forgery or counterfeiting of public seals, dies, stamps or marks, as well as the fraudulent use of such forged or counterfeited objects.

7. Embezzlement of public funds by the depositaries of such funds or by public officers, when the funds embezzled exceed 200 dollars or the equivalent in Turkish money.

8. Embezzlement by a person or persons employed or salaried, to the detriment of their employers, provided that such crime or offense is punishable by imprisonment or more severe penalty under the laws of both countries, and that the funds embezzled exceed 200 dollars or the equivalent in Turkish money.

9. Wilful and unlawful destruction or obstruction of railroads, which endangers human life.

10. Abortion; rape; violation; kidnapping of minors or adults, defined to be the abduction or detention of a person or persons, for the purpose of exacting money from them or their families, or for any other unlawful end.

11. Robbery; house-breaking or shop-breaking.

12. Larceny, if the money or the value of the objects stolen exceeds 25 dollars or the equivalent in Turkish money.

13. Swindling; receiving money, securities or other property knowing the same to have been embezzled, stolen or fraudulently obtained; when the amount of money or the value of the property exceeds 200 dollars or the equivalent in Turkish money.

14. Fraud or breach of trust by any person; notably, by a depositary, agent, banker, or trustee, or by the president, a member or any officer of a company or association, if the loss suffered exceeds 200 dollars or the equivalent in Turkish money.

15. Perjury or subornation of perjury.

16. Crimes or offenses against the laws of both countries relative to the suppression of slavery and the slave trade.

17. Fraudulent bankruptcy.

18. Bribery.

19. Serious woundings the minimum punishment of which is not less than 1 year of imprisonment.

20. Attempt to commit offenses mentioned above, when such attempt is punishable as a crime.

21. Complicity in any of the above mentioned crimes or offenses provided such complicity is punishable by imprisonment or a more sever penalty by the laws of both the Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE III

Extradition shall not take place for political crimes or offenses nor for acts connected with such crimes or offenses.

The attack upon the life of the Head of a State or the members of his family shall not be deemed a political crime or offense.

No person surrendered by one of the High Contracting Parties to the other Party shall be prosecuted or punished for an offense committed before the demand of extradition other than that for which the extradition has been granted, unless such person expressly consents in writing, which shall be communicated to the Government of the Party which effected the extradition; or unless, having had during 30 days since his definitive release the opportunity of leaving the territory of the State which demanded his extradition, he has not availed himself of this opportunity; or finally, unless he returns to such territory after having left it.

ARTICLE IV

When the person whose extradition is demanded is under prosecution, whether in custody or out on bail, for another offense committed in the country in which he has sought asylum, or when he has been convicted of such offense, his extradition may be deferred until the penal proceedings be determined and until he shall have been definitely set at liberty in due course of law.

ARTICLE V

The High Contracting Parties shall not be bound to accord the extradition of their respective nationals.

ARTICLE VI

Demands for extradition shall be made through diplomatic channels.

When the person whose extradition is demanded shall have been sentenced for the offense which occasioned the demand for extradition, the demand must be accompanied by an authentic copy of the sentence pronounced. If the person claimed is merely charged with an offense, the demand must be accompanied by a duly certified copy of the warrant of arrest issued by the competent magistrate of the Party demanding the extradition, as well as by duly authenticated copies of the depositions or other evidence upon the basis of which the warrant was issued. These documents must contain the precise indication of the offense charged and of the place where and the time when it was committed. They must be accompanied by a duly certified copy of the provisions of law applicable to the offense charged as well as by the elements necessary to establish the identity of the person claimed.

The documents above indicated shall be drawn up in the form prescribed by the laws of the Party demanding the extradition and shall be accompanied by a translation, in the language of the Party from which the extradition is demanded or in French, certified to be in conformity with the original.

It is understood that the extradition procedure shall be governed by the regulations in force at the time of the demand in the State upon which the demand is made.

ARTICLE VII

When provisional arrest of a person is requested before the demand for extradition has been presented, the demand relating thereto shall be made through the diplomatic channel or addressed directly to the competent authorities of the Party on which it is made by the competent Consul of the Party making the demand or by another person duly authorized by such Party. The procedure to be followed for the arrest shall be governed by the regulations in force in the State on which the demand is made.

The provisional detention must cease and the person arrested must be set at liberty unless within three months, dating from the arrest, not including the day of the arrest, a formal demand for extradition, accompanied by the necessary documents, is presented in the manner prescribed in Article VI.

ARTICLE VIII

Extradition shall not be accorded when under the law of the Party on which demand is made or under that of the Party making the requisition the prosecution or the penalty imposed is barred by limitation.

ARTICLE IX

All articles seized which are in the possession of the person demanded, at the time of his arrest, shall, at the time of the extradition, be delivered up with his person to the Party making the demand; such delivery shall extend not only to articles acquired by means of the offense with which the accused is charged but also to all other articles that may serve to prove the offense. The rights of third parties with regard to the articles in question shall, however, be duly respected.

ARTICLE X

The expenses of the arrest, detention and transportation of the persons extradited shall be paid by the Party making the requisition.

ARTICLE XI

The present Treaty shall come into force two months after the date of the exchange of ratifications and shall remain in force for 5 years.

If this Treaty is not denounced by one of the High Contracting Parties at least 6 months before the expiration of the said period of 5 years, it shall remain in force until it is denounced, such denunciation becoming effective only after the expiration of a period of 6 months.

ARTICLE XII

The present Treaty, in French, English, and Turkish, shall be ratified. In case of divergence the French text shall prevail.

The ratifications shall be exchanged at Constantinople as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the above mentioned Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Treaty and have affixed their seals thereto.

Done at Lausanne, August 6, 1923.

(L. S.) JOSEPH C. GREW. (L. S.) ISMET.
(L. S.) DR. RIZA NOUR.
(L. S.) HASSAN.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive AA, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, a treaty of extradition with Turkey, signed at Lausanne, Switzerland, on August 6, 1923.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty, with the resolution of ratification, is in the Senate, and the question is, Shall the treaty be read the third time?

The treaty was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty having been read the third time, the question is upon agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is adopted and the treaty is ratified.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, February 6, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father of all goodness and God of all comfort, we pray that Thy truth may be wrought into all laws and institutions. O God, the sea of human life rolls on. Forms change, generations come and go, but the mercy of the Lord endureth forever. We wait these moments at the altar of prayer; we open our hearts to Thee, that our severed love may be renewed and the broken threads of our faith may be gathered up. O strengthen us with that faith that satisfies our best needs and gives us power to produce the finest type of life. O bring us to that serenest life of faith which is permanent, which time cannot touch, and which belongs to the upper sphere. Ripen in us all good impressions and right tendencies. O Love Divine, hallow our hours with a spiritual background of brotherhood; shine through all words and blend all thoughts. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 2, 1934, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 682. An act to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States;

S. 1975. An act to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1934, and for other purposes;

S. 2347. An act to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended; and

S.J.Res. 80. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to be held May 12 to May 19, 1934, inclusive.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, Mr. WILLIAM D. THOMAS, newly elected Representative from the Twenty-ninth District of New York to succeed Mr. James S. Parker, deceased, is present this morning, and I would like to have him receive the oath of office. His certificate has not yet arrived. He was elected by about 9,000 majority. There is no contest in any way contemplated, no irregularities or anything in connection with the election charged.

I ask unanimous consent that Mr. THOMAS may receive the oath of office at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAM D. THOMAS appeared before the bar and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

BEEF AND DAIRY CATTLE INDUSTRY

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H.R. 7478) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, so as to include cattle as a basic agricultural commodity, and for other purposes, may be given a privileged status so that it may be called up at some convenient time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Texas has spoken to me relative to the consideration of this legislation. Of course, the section of the country from which I come is deeply interested in the dairy industry. There is a feeling there that a large amount of this money, if left to the Department to expend as they see fit, will go to what is called the "beef-cattle interests." I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] if he would be willing to make some provision in the legislation whereby at least one half of this money should be used in connection with the dairy interests of the United States.

Mr. JONES. The Department has suggested that it would probably be used on something like a 50-50 basis. I would not want to use straightjacket methods on them, but I would not object to a stipulation that not more than 60 percent should be used for one or the other so that it could not go above that. I would be willing to make that kind of stipulation.

Mr. SNELL. Perhaps my request to have it definitely divided 50-50 would be a little too much. I will accept the statement made by the gentleman from Texas that a stipulation shall go in the legislation that not to exceed 60 percent shall be used for either class.

Mr. JONES. I can see no objection to that.

Mr. SNELL. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I shall make no objection.

By permission granted me, I wish to insert the following telegram:

ALBANY, N.Y., February 2, 1934.

Hon. PHILIP A. GOODWIN,
Member of Congress:

As New York State is a consuming rather than a producing State, I regard it doubtful if any processing tax will be helpful to the State. If a processing tax is levied on milk and dairy products, I recommend that it be administered on a regional basis rather than on a Nation-wide basis.

CHARLES H. BALDWIN, Commissioner.

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what this bill really contains.

Mr. JONES. It makes cattle a basic commodity and authorizes the appropriation of $200,000,000 to be used as advance payments in connection with both the beef- and dairy-cattle industries. The question which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] raises is as to the division of the authorized appropriation between the beef- and dairy-cattle industries. As the bill is drafted, it is a lump sum that may be divided any way the Department may want to divide it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] suggests some limitation, and I agree that as far as I am concerned a limitation may be put in the bill that not more than 60 percent should go to one or the other.

Mr. SABATH. Of the $250,000,000 that is provided for the dairy and beef cattle industry?

Mr. JONES. Yes; of the $200,000,000. The gentleman from Illinois ought not object.

Mr. SABATH. I am not interested in the stockyards. I am interested in the people.

Mr. JONES. Surely. We all realize that.

Mr. SABATH. I said that in answer to some other gentlemen who are under the impression that I am interested in the stockyards. I am not. I am interested in the people. If this is going to aid the stockyards or the packing industry, I am naturally opposed to it, because I do not think they need any relief.

Mr. JONES. This legislation is in behalf of the people, I assure the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. In view of the report I have received as to the tremendous price we are paying for milk I do not know why this legislation is needed.

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will find the tremendously low price that is being paid the producer of both beef and milk cattle, he will change his idea.

Mr. SABATH. I know the poor people are paying a tremendous price for milk. I do not know where the difference lies or who is the beneficiary.

Mr. JONES. This is in behalf of the producers who are all along the line receiving less than the cost of production decidedly.

Mr. SABATH. My sympathy goes out to all producers who are obliged to produce for less than cost, but my interest is that the poor people who have not only been milked but mulcted, have some opportunity.

Mr. JONES. I understand in some localities that is true, but this certainly will not accentuate that condition.

Mr. BOILEAU. Reserving the right to object, some statement has been made about $250,000,000. It was $250,000,000 originally, but now it is only $200,000,000?

Mr. JONES. Two hundred millions dollars. It was that from the beginning.

Mr. BOILEAU. I would like to state further that in the statement which the gentleman made to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], the gentleman said there was no objection on his part to allocating this amount as between the two, dairy and beef cattle?

Mr. JONES. No. I said there was no objection to putting a limitation on the maximum percentage out of the fund that might be allocated.

Mr. BOILEAU. There might be some objection in writing that into the bill, however, because the experts appearing before the committee, I believe, made it clear that they thought they could help the beef industry to some extent by disposing of a certain amount of dairy cattle.

Have we made any particular arrangement as to that provision?

Mr. JONES. I think a limitation to the effect that not more than 60 percent should be used for either purpose would be proper.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman to be willing to have such a provision specifically incorporated in the bill?

Mr. JONES. So far as I can see personally, there would be no objection to it.

Mr. BOILEAU. There might be serious objection if the Department were to purchase dairy cattle, we will say, for the purpose of trying to help the beef-cattle industry.

Mr. JONES. I think that would help the dairy industry as well.

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes. I am merely mentioning a possible difficulty that may arise.

Mr. JONES. I can see no objection. It is fair to both sides to say that not more than 60 percent shall go for either.

Mr. BOILEAU. I see no objection to it if it can be worked out.

Mr. JONES. If a serious objection should arise, it could be taken care of at that time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I could not hear what the gentleman said to the Members on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. JONES. I am sorry, but I have such a cold I cannot talk very loud.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the $200,000,000 mentioned in the bill come out of the Treasury or is this another one of the consumer taxes which now reach over a billion dollars?

Mr. JONES. Of course, the original $200,000,000, like the advance payments heretofore made in the case of other commodities, will be appropriated out of the Treasury. The question of replenishing will be one that must be worked out.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But it will become a consumer's tax before we get through with it.

Mr. JONES. I do not know. That depends on those producing these animals. They agree on these programs.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is some agitation looking toward making sugar a basic commodity and placing a processing tax on it. I do not know just what the present status of this proposal is, but is such a proposition before the gentleman's committee; and does he contemplate following this bill with another bill relating to making sugar a basic commodity and levying a processing tax against it?

Mr. JONES. Up to the present time, I may state to the gentleman from Michigan, so far as I know there is no such bill pending before the committee. There has been some conversation about it, but I am not in a position to give the gentleman any information at all.

Mr. MAPES. I understand a bill to this effect has been introduced in the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I have been told so; yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is it not a fact that the beef-cattle people have been practically assured that this money is going to come out of the Treasury and that there will not be any processing tax?

Mr. JONES. No. No such assurance has been given, so far as I know. I feel sure that some provision will be made for at least a portion of it to be repaid. But whether it is or not, the cattle industry has been in such desperate straits that I feel that with the hundreds of millions that have been spent for relief largely in the cities, the expenditure of this sum as an outright proposition would be thoroughly justified.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ROBERT H. ANGELL

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted, I herewith desire to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and thereby make a matter of permanent record a brief outline of a most interesting meeting held in Roanoke, Va., on the evening of February 2 last. The occasion was the Twenty-first annual meeting of the Ground Hog Club of America. The Ground Hog Club of America is a voluntary organization of the citizens of Roanoke and surrounding territory which meets once a year, on February 2, Ground Hog Day, and engages in an evening's wholesome fun. Hon. Robert H. Angell, pioneer citizen of the city of Roanoke, former State chairman of the Republican Party in Virginia, and closely and intimately connected with the growth and development of the city of Roanoke, was the originator and founder of this unique organization. Mr. Angell passed away last November, and the meeting this year on February 2 was in the nature of a memorial service.

An interesting program was held in the city auditorium. The meeting was opened by the secretary, Postmaster E. L. Keyser. There was an invocation by Rev. Dr. Francis Hume Scott. Former Governor E. Lee Trinkle, an intimate friend and business associate of Mr. Angell, was chairman of the meeting. Brief interesting addresses were given by Mayor S. P. Seifert; Rev. Dr. Walter Binns, pastor of the First Baptist Church; Rev. Dr. Richard S. Owens, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church; Hon. John Smith, attorney at Martinsville, Va., a close and intimate friend of Mr. Angell. Appropriate music was rendered by Breakell's Chanters. The memorial address was delivered by myself and broadcast over radio station WDBJ.

Because of the high esteem and loving affection in which Mr. Angell was held not only by the people of his home city but of the State, I am taking the liberty of inserting this matter in the RECORD.

Following is the memorial address I delivered:

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, on a bright May morning in 1884 a barefoot lad of 16 years left his humble home near Callaway in Franklin County, Va., and set out upon the highway of life, there to find his place and make his mark. It was with a heart filled with determination and courage that Robert H. Angell left the home of his parents upon this morning and started out upon this great journey. For 50 years he traveled that highway. There were obstacles to be overcome. There were handicaps to be mastered. At times it led him to the highlands of happiness and success. At other times this winding trail led down into the valley of sorrow and disappointment. Such is ever the way of life. On a bleak November night 50 years later this footsore traveler, worn and weary of the battles and the encounters of the way, lay down by the wayside to rest for a season, and, with his burdens for a pillow, "passed into that dreamless sleep that kisses the eyelids still."

It is for the purpose of considering the pilgrimage of this traveler that we have met this evening. We come reverently and thoughtfully to meditate upon his life and service, and to raise thankful voices and grateful hearts to a divine Providence that blessed us with the privilege of knowing and working with this our late friend.

We do not come as those who mourn the dead! We fling back against "the ever-brightening skies the thoughtless speech that calls him dead." He lives! The influence set in motion by his life will continue down through the ages while time shall last. The suggestion has been made that a monument of some description be erected to commemorate the name of Bob Angell. Let us do so by all means. But remember, my friends, that bronze will yield to the corroding hand of time, and the passing of the years will cause marble and granite to crumble into dust, but the influences set in motion by a great life of unselfish service go on forever and forever:

Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light,
Still traveling downward from the sky,
Shine on our mortal sight.

So when a good man dies,
For years beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men.

Pericles commended the idea of the traditional Athenian public funeral but doubted the wisdom of any spoken words, holding that where a man's deeds had been good, it were best that he should be remembered by them alone and not by the feeble efforts of any chosen orator.

I have somewhat that feeling as I address you tonight. To those of us who knew Bob Angell and lived with him, worked with him, and loved him, any effort to formulate an estimate of his life and service must seem feeble and inadequate. Already you have heard eloquent tribute paid to our friend as a churchman, a citizen, and a friend.

I shall not undertake to emphasize at length his characteristics and ability as a successful business man. His indefatigable courage and industry, his plain common sense and wise judgment, his shrewd executive ability, his keen foresight and leadership, all of which, crowned and leavened with an undying faith and belief in his country, placed him in a natural place of leadership in every effort that had for its purpose the building and development of his city, State, and country and of his own private fortunes.

Starting as a farm hand on the farm of Gideon Turner, in Roanoke County; serving as janitor in the public school at Salem and attending its classes; day laborer in a brickyard in this city in its early days; and finally a connection with W. P. Huff & Co., coal and lumber dealers, were some of the steps in the early life of Bob Angell. Always a determination to succeed, an optimistic outlook, and a charming personality enabled him to meet and overcome obstacles.

Time does not permit any very detailed allusion to the various business enterprises that engaged his attention. He organized and developed the Virginia Lumber Manufacturing Co., the Central Manufacturing Co., of Roanoke, and for many years devoted most of his time to this business. He was president of the Colonial National Bank until its consolidation with the American National Bank in 1928, after which he was chairman of the board. He was president of the Shenandoah Life Insurance Co. and devoted much of his time and energy to the development of this splendid outstanding business enterprise. Various other business organizations had the benefit of his wise counsel, his keen business judgment, and his active interest. When the welfare of Roanoke City and the State of Virginia were involved, Bob Angell was ever ready to give of his very best.

Nor shall I in the brief time allotted to me on this program undertake to appraise him as a political leader, though his characteristic sincerity and directness and his firm convictions on the fundamentals of government made him distinctly a leader in thought and action. Politically Bob Angell was a Republican. His warm heart and his tolerant soul, however, prevented him from entering heartily into those bitterly partisan contests that so often mark the career of men who are placed in high positions of political leadership. He believed devoutly in a two-party system of government. Only on a few occasions did he ever seek political preferment for himself. He was more often content to try to help his friends in their ambitions. He held many places of prominence and honor in the councils of his own political party, serving for a season as State chairman of the Republican Party, and was serving in that capacity when the State of Virginia in 1928, politically speaking, left the faith of its fathers and registered its electoral vote for the Republican Party. He was twice elected a member of the legislature in Virginia and was once selected for a 4-year term a member of the Nonpartisan Commission that was first selected to govern the city of Roanoke when it changed its form of government. He was often, however, called upon to serve on committees and commissions of great importance to the city, the State, and the Nation. As local and State fuel administrator during the World War he gave freely of his time and talent in the service of his country.

May I bring you now what I consider to be his crowning glory: His capacity for friendship and unselfish service. The distance was never too far, the task never too great, for Bob Angell to respond to a call to serve his fellow man individually or collectively. Possessed naturally of a never-failing spirit of optimism, ready always to greet his fellow man with a hearty laugh, a slap on the shoulder, an encouraging word, and a hearty handshake, he was in truth and in fact an ambassador of good cheer and an apostle of sunshine.

This optimism, this good cheer, this faith, never failed him, even in those later days when the clouds of economic stress gathered and the burdens of physical infirmity bore heavily upon him.

It is quite natural that a man of his temperament should become identified closely and actively with various fraternal organizations. I wish I might name them all. To do so would be practically to call the roll of all those splendid organizations that have for their motto the principles of friendship and helpfulness. Probably the fraternity that claimed the greater portion of his time and to which, certainly in later years, he devoted great thought and energy was the Masonic fraternity. Owing more largely to his efforts than to the efforts of any other person, Kazim Temple of the Mystic Shrine was granted a charter at Roanoke many years ago, with Bob Angell as its first potentate. His sponsorship and interest were also largely responsible for the location at Roanoke of the various chapters of the Scottish Rite bodies. This fraternity honored him with its highest degree; he was a Mason of the 33d degree.

I have purposely saved for the last, mention of the fact that he was the originator and founder of the Ground Hog Club of America—this characteristic and unique organization that once a year for 21 years has gathered informally to bring again this company of friends and fellow citizens here to join hands and hearts in a few hours of clean and wholesome fun. It is typically a Bob Angell institution, and I want to express the very earnest hope that it will continue through the years to meet to carry out the mission for which it was founded.

I do not know what Bob Angell would have selected for his life motto; but as I have thought about him, it seems to me that the motto selected by Abraham Lincoln would have more nearly characterized his life. Lincoln said, "Die when I may, I want it to be said of me by those who knew me best, that I plucked the thistle, and planted the flower, where I thought the flower would grow." Bob Angell plucked many thistles and planted many flowers, and those flowers have grown and blossomed, and their fragrance has spread all down the highway of life as he passed that way.

We miss him tonight. We shall continue to miss him as the days come and go, but can we not be very happy in the thought that it was our happy privilege, as we traveled down the highway of life to meet and know, to labor with and to love so great, and so good a man. Where is he? At work.

An old homely story tells us that in a quaint country village lived Dr. Thomas Riley. He was not a member of the fashionable medical fraternity in the nearby city and devoted most of his time to the alleviation of human suffering among the poor people of the countryside. He was not able to afford fashionable offices and equipment.

If you wanted to find Dr. Riley, you might go to the country village, and at the foot of the rickety stairs leading up over the livery stable you would see a sign crudely painted on the hitching post. It was a hand pointing up the steps and these words: "Dr. Thomas Riley. His office is upstairs." The night was never too dark nor the storm too fierce for Dr. Thomas Riley to hitch up his old gray plug to his broken-down buggy to travel out in response to some call for help. One morning his friends and associates missed his familiar face from his usual haunts. When going to his office over the livery stable, which also served for his simple living quarters, they found that Dr. Thomas Riley, worn and bent and weary and tired of his long years of unselfish service, had answered the last call and had passed on. Lying by his side was the account book wherein he had kept the accounts of those simple people who were his patients. His last living act had been to go through that account book and mark on each page, "Paid in full."

It was a motley crowd that followed the funeral cortege out to the potter's field the next day to there lay away the mortal remains of this great and good man. Some kind and admiring friends gathered wild flowers from the wayside as they passed and heaped them upon the crude mound. As the crowd dispersed, one grateful recipient of many acts of kindness at the hands of the good physician thought in his own mind that it was a terrible thing that the remains of so good a man should lie in an unmarked grave, and he resolved that something should be done about it. If you should go back now to this quaint country village and find your way out to the potter's field, you would be able to identify the resting place of Dr. Thomas Riley because at the head of the grave has been planted a hitching post, torn up from the foot of the rickety stairs at the old livery stable, and on that hitching post is a hand pointing upward, and these words: "Dr. Thomas Riley. His office is upstairs."

Our friend, whose memory we honor, has passed on to a new country, and to greater fields of usefulness and activity, and there, we believe, will be waiting the time when we shall renew these severed bonds of friendship and love.

"Bob Angell. His office is upstairs."

COMPARISON OF HOOVER AND ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATIONS

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, we have heard much said on the floor of this House recently by the minority leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], and by the friends of ex-President Hoover in trying to compare his administration with the present administration of President Roosevelt.

They assign as a reason for his unsuccess that the Congress did not follow the suggestions and plans of Mr. Hoover as they have followed Mr. Roosevelt. The reason is not so much in the man as it has been in the plan, if it be conceded that Mr. Hoover had any constructive plan at all.

When Mr. Hoover became President, he had a majority of 108 in the House, as I now remember, and he also had a Republican Senate, and having complete control of each legislative branch he could have passed any legislation he wanted to pass. What did he have passed that was constructive? Absolutely nothing.

Mr. Hoover advocated some things that I think have been very hurtful. With no request from foreign nations, he advocated a moratorium of millions of dollars that were due us, and put the burden of meeting the deficit caused by this on taxpayers of the United States. Not only that, it also created a feeling in the minds of those nations that they would not be required to pay all of the amount that was due us. We have been able to collect but little since then; and I wired Mr. Hoover in response to the telegram he sent to each Member of Congress that I did not think it should be done.

They owe us $11,000,000,000, which, if collected, would pay about half of our national interest-bearing debt. I shall not vote to reduce it one cent. We sold bonds to get money to loan them, and now let us collect it and pay off the bonds and save interest.

Nearly $2,000,000,000 was in his administration poured into big business, but did no good so far as relieving conditions and helping the needy. Conditions grew worse, and in the last election people demanded a change and got it.

We have not yet had a year of Mr. Roosevelt's administration, and one must be blind who cannot see a great change. Confidence has been restored and business is much better, as shown by all reliable reports. More than 4,000,000 people have been given employment, and each of them would testify if given a chance that the change has been very helpful to them.

More constructive legislation has been passed by Congress since Mr. Roosevelt became President than had been passed in 25 years, as the records will show.

The present administration has been really helpful to agriculture. Cotton a year ago was 5 cents per pound. Now it is 12 cents per pound, and I am sure it will be 15 cents or more by the time the marketing season opens up next fall. Of course, the President did not do it all and could have done nothing without the cooperation of Congress. We have worked with him because he was right and trying to do something for the forgotten man.

When we forget those who clothe and feed the world, we may expect disaster to follow. The action of President Roosevelt in revaluing gold is a move that will help the world. I hope to see him place silver in its place as a money and give us a double standard of both gold and silver, so we can have trade relations with all the world. Then we would not hear the cry to cut acreage and cut production everywhere.

Our people can then have work to do at gainful pay. Congress has given the President power to do this, and I feel sure that he will do it as speedily as he can.

Gold will not be used as a circulating money any more. It will be kept in the Treasury in bars, and a controlled paper money will circulate. The gold certificate is no better than the greenback. The only difference is that one is yellow, and the other is green, and the Government is back of both of them, and one is just as good as the other.

This legislation is getting back to our Constitution, which says Congress has the power to issue money and to regulate the value thereof. This Government has in the past few years has been drifting very rapidly toward the wrack and ruin by issuing nontaxable interest-bearing bonds. We are today paying out $760,000,000 per year interest on bonds.

Who gets this 760 millions of interest per year? The international bankers and the big central banks. Is the bond bearing interest any better than the money issued by the Government? The Government is now back of both the bond and dollar. If I were President, I would call the outstanding interest-bearing bonds and pay them off as fast as they are collectible, and set a fixed policy that the Government will no longer pay for the privilege of using its own credit and its own money. Then we will have a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people, and not a Government controlled by hoarded wealth, as we have had in the past quarter of a century.

By the act of the President in reducing the gold content of the dollar, the United States dollar gain by devaluation is $2,805,512,060. This is quite a sum to be gained in one day by this Government, but it is just a pittance in comparison with what it will mean in the future to us.

THE PITTSBURGH PRESS, A SCRIPPS-HOWARD NEWSPAPER, ADVOCATES PASSAGE OF THE ELLENBOGEN RESOLUTION LOOKING TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL CONTRIBUTORY SYSTEM OF OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Pittsburgh Press, a Scripps-Howard newspaper, on the subject of old-age pensions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert the following editorial from the Pittsburgh Press:

[From the Pittsburgh Press, Feb. 1, 1934]

THE PENSIONS SURVEY

Congressman ELLENBOGEN'S resolution for the creation of an old-age pensions commission is finally receiving the serious attention from Congress that it deserves.

A Washington dispatch says that Speaker RAINEY and other powerful party leaders have endorsed the measure and are likely to support it if a vote is taken. Provided Congress does not adjourn too early, their support should be sufficient to insure the resolution's passage.

Congressman ELLENBOGEN rightly argues that old-age pensions should not be disregarded by the Federal Government, especially when so few of the States have laws that are sufficiently liberal as to qualifications or generous as to the amount of assistance.

Pennsylvania, for instance, has a 15-year-residence clause, which would mean that a man of 55 dare not leave his State to become eligible for a pension at 70. There are similar State restrictions which also tend to minimize the amount of relief that can be given.

The Pittsburgh Representative's resolution calls for the appointment of an old-age security commission consisting of seven members, whose duty it is to study and recommend legislation for a national old-age pensions system. It would interfere with no existing State law, but would simply authorize the survey that should properly precede any national consideration of this subject.

Regardless of how short the present session of Congress is going to be, the House can and should find time to act favorably upon Mr. ELLENBOGEN'S proposal. Yesterday's dispatch is the first welcome indication that it may do so.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in connection with the statement I made to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] I may include a telegram from the department of farms and markets of my State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, the industrial panic or depression here is a part of a world-wide crisis, resulting from a fall of values and the price level, multiplying debts, and the tax burden upon the people, and destroying their buying and consuming power. But the industrial depression here is more than a part of the world panic. It is a prelude to the economic cataclysm brought upon the unsuspecting people of the earth, planned, ordered, and directed by our own financiers, not only from America as a base of operations but by using the powers and instrumentalities of our own Federal Reserve money system.

On last Monday, January 29, I briefly presented to this House, and which appears at page 1508 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, the story of the criminal participation of our own international financiers and bankers, with the Rothchilds, the Normans, Baldwins, and other financial magnates of Europe, under a secret gentlemen's agreement, organizing an international money conspiracy which brought on this world industrial crisis. But the blackest chapter of this crime of the ages has not been told. The darkest picture of this world industrial crisis has not been shown. The story of the foulest and most diabolical conspiracy against human welfare and life has not been exposed. On entering upon these further remarks, explaining the world industrial crisis, finally forced upon India, China, and the Orient, I realize my weakness, my inability to contemplate, consider, and grasp the enormity of the crime, the criminality of purpose; and words and language fail me, groping for terms to describe the anguish and depths of despair of starving, suffering, gasping humanity, brought on by a course of infamy, in conception, in wanton disregard for human welfare and life and deliberate murder for profit and gain.

In order to realize and understand this world-war Black Friday conspiracy, the world industrial crisis resulting in India, China, Indo-China, and the Orient, it must be further realized and understood that the money of a country represents the purchasing power, the value of labor in exchange, of the people of that country, the buying power of the people, the consuming power of the people, the power of the people of that country to buy, take, and consume the goods and products not only of their industries but the industries of our own and other nations. And any policy, system, or manipulation which interrupts or interferes in a way with the money supply of that country or with the free movements or circulation of money among the people as a medium of exchange and as a measure of value or makes or results in the scarcity of money destroys or impairs the purchasing power of the people of that country not only to purchase their own products but the products of other countries as well. And without a sufficient volume and supply of money and a free circulation and movement of money consumption is delayed, paralyzed, and fails; production is congested in surplus stagnation; industry is unbalanced, prostrated, and broken down; and an industrial panic or crisis follows.

The money and currency of the world were and always had been made up of both gold and silver, with more people using silver and depending upon silver for money than people using and depending upon gold. There is not now and never has been enough gold alone or silver alone, over and above what was used in the arts, to supply the world for use as money, even as a reserve or basis for money. It is only with the use of both of these two metals, and by further using both as a redemption basis upon and against which to issue currency, that these two metals, gold and silver, have been made to serve the needs of the world as a measure of value and medium of exchange. The destruction of either gold or silver would create a fatal scarcity of money. And as more people use silver as money than rely or depend upon gold for money, the destruction of silver as money would create a greater scarcity of money in the world's volume and supply of money than the destruction of gold as money.

India is an old, old country, with laws, customs, and usages fixed during the long lapse of centuries, through the weary ages of time. The people of India are a great saving people, but they do not leave their money in banks. One man does not trust his money with another man. They hold their savings in silver and silver money. There is another law, custom, and usage which must be realized and understood. Women are not allowed to hold property in India for reasons long fixed by custom and usages and forms of religion and which are observed as obligations greater, more binding, and imperative upon the people than the decrees of governments and the laws of states. But these women are allowed to hold their savings in certain ways and manner only, and that is in jewelry and ornaments. These savings are held in ornaments of silver and are kept for use on a rainy day.

When the emergency for use arises, the women of India sacrifice and exchange their silver ornaments for coined silver money to supply their wants and needs. Anything which would destroy silver for use as money in India, or the value of silver as money, would have the same effect in India as a failure of savings banks here. With these facts in mind now before us, we are in position to understand the hard times coming to India and the Orient. There is nothing mysterious about the panic or depression in India. When you understand India, her money, customs, usages, and ways, it is all plain, simple reason, all under unerring cause and effect and the immutable law of supply and demand. The man who tells you that this panic is a bewildering, confusing mystery is an imposter, practicing deception. He is a man who does not want you to know, realize, and understand the cause of this world panic or depression and is crouching under cover and shadows to shield the perpetrators from responsibility for the infamous crime against the people of India. [Applause.]

India, China, and Indo-China include more than one half of the people of the earth. These people for centuries past have been using silver for money. Silver has been and was their only money on which they were relying and depending to carry on their industry, business, and trade, and from which to provide for themselves and live. These people have no other money. By the operations of this Black Friday world gold-monopoly conspiracy and the melting up of silver money and dumping silver on the markets in bullion as a commodity, destroying both its use and value as money, silver has been depreciated by two thirds in value or its use as money destroyed, leaving one half the people of the earth without money for their use, not only to buy their own products but the products of foreign countries as well.

The threatened demonetization of gold in retaliation against our financiers would be a criminal blow, a criminal error, a mistake, at the world's supply of money. But the destruction or demonetization of the silver money of the world would be a fatal movement against the world money supply. It is not a question of gold. It is not a question of silver. It is a question of a measure of value. It is a question of a medium of exchange. It is a question of a sufficient volume of money, whether of silver, gold, or other money material, to enable the people of the world to buy, sell, and exchange the products of the industries of the world. Without a sufficient volume of money in circulation, the stream of industral life will dry up, stagnate, and the body of industry will be poisoned from the sluggish flow. Its organs will fail to act. Its functions will be impaired, until the world is in want, suffering, and distress in the midst of plenty and great abundance.

Coming now to this second chapter of the world industrial crisis, there was another means resorted to, a means other than the contraction of money, to which I have before alluded and explained, a plan stealthily and secretly carried out by this gold-monopoly syndicate to bring about a scarcity of gold, to lower property and commodity values and thereby to establish the international gold standard and double and triple the value of their war bonds and claims. Under this conspiracy the nations were led to melt up their silver money and to sell and dump silver on the market as a commodity, as silver bullion, to destroy its use and value as money. And the United States of America, under the hypnotic control of our manipulating financiers, was the Nation to take the lead in this criminal international movement to decoy the nations of the earth into a vortex of want and suffering, a world calamity and disaster.

Pausing to illustrate and explain we are now restoring to the power of money in the gold revaluation plan in the reverse order of operations to increase the price or value of gold. This is not to bring a scarcity of money but to be used as a base for more money, for the good and useful purpose of creating and maintaining the gold supply upon which to issue and maintain a greater volume of money in circulation. But if this was all that was coming, if a second and further step is not taken in the gold revaluation program, there will be no rise of values and the price level. Revaluation would be a vain maneuver, an empty gesture without force or effect to restore to our own people here the tax and debt-paying power and the buying and consuming power and revaluation will fail of its purpose and the declared goal of the 1926 price level.

Mysteriously and under guise and pretext of providing for an emergency foreign loan on the application of three of our own international bankers, the Federal Reserve Board or Treasury Department late in 1919 or early in 1920 first ordered and directed 29 million silver dollars, in gross violation of United States law, melted up and exported out of the country, destroyed as money and dumped as bullion upon the silver markets of the world. Following our lead of melting silver money, selling and dumping it upon the markets of the world, England melted up and sold her silver money. France melted up and sold her silver money. Germany melted up and sold her silver money. Belgium melted up and sold her silver money. Switzerland melted up and sold her silver money. Poland melted up and sold her silver money. Italy melted up and sold her silver money. Mexico melted up and sold her silver money. The French Government for Indo-China melted up and sold Indo-China's silver money. The British Government for India melted up and sold India's silver money. [Applause.]

Never before in the history of the world have all the nations melted up and sold their silver money. And never before in the history of the world have the nations all moved together in concerted action, in silent secret harmony to accomplish a certain effect and purpose without objection, dispute, or reservations. No other action of nations taken and moving together has ever been carried out without dispute or contention, without objection and prolonged strife, without the strain of controversy and protracted delay. But in this destruction of silver money the nations moved as servient tools, promptly without delay or hesitation. It was not for them to know or reason why but to do and carry out the mandate which could only have been directed by a secret, unseen central power, a silent, moving, controlling hand.

And as their puppet rulers did the bidding of their money masters, destroying one half of the world supply of money, doubling and tripling in value the World War debt bonds, and reducing one half the world price level and values, and with the fall and destruction of one half of the world's money, the purchasing power of the people fell one half, the buying power of the people fell one half, the consuming power of the people fell one half, the tax- and debt-paying power fell one half, until the people of India and China were without power to buy, take, and consume not only the products of their own industry but the products of foreign industries as well, including the products of our own land; and until the world's industry was paralyzed and prostrated; and until the people are in want and distress in the midst of plenty and great abundance; and until the per capita normal circulation of the world has been reduced and contracted more than two thirds of its former value; and until there is a world scarcity of money, until there is a world famine of money. [Applause.]

Nations today do not suffer alone. In many respects and to a certain extent they suffer together, they prosper together. The destruction or debasement of silver money—the only money of China and India and the Far East—has not only destroyed the tax-paying power, the debt-paying power of the Far East people and their buying and purchasing power to buy and consume not only their own products, but to buy, take, and consume the products of other nations. And the United States has lost in export trade and is losing annually in export trade by reason of destroying the Far East purchasing power in the value of millions of dollars, all representing an irreparable economic loss to the American people and country, and all to the end that the World War money lenders may double and triple the value and worth of their loans and investments in war-time claims.

These two criminal international conspiracies, these two crimes against the money of the world, contracting and reducing the money volume of the world, melting up and destroying the silver money of the world, the money of more than one half of the people of the world, doubling, tripling the tax burden, doubling, tripling the debt burden, doubling, tripling the World War bond burden, upon the people and nations of the world, have brought a world uprising of socialism, communism, and bolshevism in protest, antagonism, and retaliation against the existing order of things, and prompting, threatening outbreaks in every nation of the world. And wherever this conspiracy has touched money it has poisoned and dried up the fountains of commerce, trade, and industrial life and has shaken and jeopardized the very foundations of civilization and the peace and order of the world. And Gandhi, mistaking the galling burdens brought upon India by money under the international gold standard for tyranny and misrule of England, is inciting India to passive revolt and threatening to flood the Ganges and Tigrus, inundating the Indian peninsula with a tide of human blood. [Applause.]

The first outward visible steps, or coincident with the first steps taken, for the monopoly of the world's gold supply, to be followed by the destruction of silver as money, were taken in the United States of America on the 18th day of May 1920, in Washington, D.C., in a secret bankers' meeting held on that day, crouching behind closed doors and curtains, and in the very shadows of this Capitol. This meeting was a planned part of the concerted demand upon gold to increase and multiply the value of gold by a contraction and withdrawal of currency and credit and to make the demand promptly effective by a fall of commodity values and the price level. While the panic followed promptly in all the gold countries of Europe, it was not until 6 years later, 1926, that the international gold standard was forced upon the unsuspecting people of India by decree of the British Government for India, manipulated by Montague Norman and Stanley Baldwin, supported by the Rothschilds and the Brussels bankers and prompted by American financiers.

In August 1926 a currency commission, a puppet body created in India, assuming a study of money for monetary reform, recommended a gold-bullion standard for India. But on anticipation and even before the puppet report, English bankers were already selling silver looking to melting up and selling the money of India. With the dismayed and stricken people of India praying, supplicating, and protesting against the order, the time-sacred silver rupees of the Indian people, which have served them for centuries past and upon which their trade and industries were based and in which their life savings were held, were demonetized or destroyed as money, called in and cast into the melting pot, and in the form of bullion and a debased commodity was carried off to London, to Bombay, and Hong Kong, China, and dumped upon the world's markets, all to complete the monopoly of international gold by destroying the silver rupees to create demand for gold in China.

This produced a double harmful effect upon the money and the industry of the world, first, by destroying a part of the world's money and forcing down values and the world's price level, reducing and destroying the world's debt-paying power, reducing and lowering the world's consuming power; and, second, by destroying the value of silver, the value of silver as money, the debt-paying power of silver money, the buying and purchasing power, the consuming power of silver money, of all the silver-using nations of more than one half of the people of the world—and until silver was destroyed for use as money among the nations whose only money was silver money, destroying their buying and consuming power, not only of their products of their own industry but the products of industries of other nations, including the products of American industries as well.

The effect of this international conspiracy and the servient actions of the nations was threefold destructive of the money of the world: First, to contract, reduce, and deflate the volume and supply of the world's money by melting up and destroying vast quantities of silver as money; second, to depreciate, lower, and reduce by one half the tax- and debt-paying power of the remaining part of the silver money; and, third, by so increasing the demand upon gold as a money metal for use as money that gold has been hoarded and held from circulation as money, with the result that both gold and silver has been destroyed as money or driven out of circulation as money, creating a money scarcity and famine the like of which the world has never seen since the dawn of history. [Applause.]

But some will say that this is inconceivable, this is unbelievable; that all the nations of the world could be led to join and unite in such a criminal diabolical conspiracy, destroying one half of the world's money, destroying the only money of one half of the world's people, all to double the value of the war-debt bonds upon their subjects and the taxpaying people. And such deliberate scheme as the designed course and action by the most intelligent and civilized nations may shock the conscience and moral conceptions of men as inconceivable, unbelievable, revolting. Yet there are the facts standing out before the world, clear as the noonday sun, to convict the leadership of civilization of greater credulity and stupidity than the savage barbarous chief who sells a few of his vassel subjects for a bronze or glittering trinket.

But it is not so hard to accept and believe when we know more of the leaders who control and direct the nations, more of the men at the helm of state. Axenstjerna, a great Swedish chancellor, speaking to his favorite son before leaving on a world tour, said:

> Go forth, my son, behold the nations and see by what fools the world is governed.

[Applause.]

And the immortal Shakespeare has said:

> Some men are born great, some men achieve greatness, and some men have greatness thrust upon them.

And this is true of some public men today. Greatness has been thrust upon some men, with all their ignorance in office, with all their want of experience and training, with all their want of talent and ability, and without a single redeeming feature to qualify them to act for and conserve the interests and welfare of the people. And, above all, without stamina or moral courage to stand out against wealth and high social position, to champion and defend the cause of the poor and lowly of the world who are left with no one to do them honor and fewer to do them justice before the law. [Applause.]

China, being an independent sovereign state, and not a subject, vassal government, as India, long using and only using silver as money, the operations of the international financiers to debase money and depreciate silver money were taken in another and different way, but no less destructive of the money of China. The silver money of suffering, gasping India was torn from her protesting people, melted up, and used as bullion upon the silver markets of Hong Kong, at the door of China and her port of entry, to destroy the value of silver as money and coerce China to accept the gold standard. Or, in other words, figuratively speaking, the blood from torn, mangled, and murdered India was used by the international bankers to strangle peaceful, unsuspecting China and to rear upon the debris of her economic ruin and the gasping, mangled bodies of her people the brazen image of the god of gold.

A great part of the wealth of China is held in silver. China buys and sells upon the basis of her silver money. An increase in the price of silver means that China can buy more and pay for more. A decrease in the price of silver means that China can buy less and pay for less and destroys the buying and consuming power of her people. This failure of the Chinese buying and consuming power is reflected in the idle factories in the United States and the unemployed supported by the dole in America. Orders from China, mounting in the millions, have been canceled and shipments have been returned. But the debasement of silver in China has not only destroyed her buying and consuming power, it has multiplied the foreign debts upon China held by the international bankers, as measured in her silver money—the money and only money which China can pay—and has left China with far more to pay and far less to pay with.

I can only point out the ghastly scenes to the eye to witness. I can only speak to the ear to listen to the sobs of anguish—the dying. I can only pray to the tongue to describe and tell. I can only call to witness the ghastly scenes—the wreckage of human welfare and life, the world calamity and disaster befalling the helpless race of men in the gloom and darkness of appalling death—following in the wake of this mad, desperate drive for wealth and riches and money. E. Kann, international authority on the currencies and finances of China, said:

The sale by the governments (referring to the melting and sale of silver money), has been a huge, black cloud overshadowing the silver market like the Angel of Death.

[Applause.]

The human mind fails to grasp the enormity of the crime, the magnitude of the disaster, which human gluttony, avarice, and greed has brought upon the defenseless—the helpless race of men.

John B. Walker, correspondent of the New York Times, writing from China said:

The effect on India and China will never be known in its full horrors. The immediate depreciation of the only stock of money, silver, stopped trade and starved whole provinces—it caused millions of deaths.

[Applause.]

H. G. Stevens, former secretary of the treasury of the Dominion of Canada, in an address to the Canadian Legislature, said:

One billion people in the Orient, in China, in India, in the Malay States, and in Mexico are deprived of two thirds of their purchasing power by the action of the nations (in melting silver money).

There is one reason (or cause) for the agricultural and commercial depression which exists today all over the world—one half of the human race is living below the margin of decent living.

In fact, one million in China during the present year have died largely on account of the inadequacy of their purchasing power (meaning for the want of money).

[Applause.]

The effects of these two money conspiracies upon the people of the world cannot be told in time allotted here, nor more than faintly touched upon. The want, suffering, destitution, and death following in the wake and footsteps of this mad grasping money power calls for volumes to describe and for language I cannot command. I realize my weakness. I am powerless to characterize, to stigmatize, to condemn. I will call only one more witness to the stand. Thomas W. Lamont, one of our own international financiers speaking of this world depression has admitted:

One of the chief causes of world depression is the scarcity of gold and the depressed price of silver.

The gold was made scarce by the gold monopoly conspiracy, multiplying the demands upon gold, and silver was depreciated and depressed by the nations melting up silver money and dumping silver upon the markets of the world.

[Applause.]

There may be some collusive agreement among men, looking to selfish gain and profit, without deliberate criminal intent or disregard of human welfare, suffering, and life, which can be styled or alluded to as gentlemen's agreements, without travesty before men or sacrilege before the Almighty. But this deliberate, premeditated conspiracy entered into, with system and method, in gross disregard of human welfare and life, is not of such mild character or susceptible of such compromising reference. To deliberately plan, hold, or insist on a cruel conspiracy, bringing starvation, suffering, and death to millions, all to increase loan and debt values, is a criminal conspiracy, a diabolical crime against humanity, the human race, which not only merits punishment before men and nations, but calls for the vengeance of God.

[Applause.]

And now from this last, but not final, closing chapter of this World War money conspiracy, we read of the foreign people struggling, staggering under the burdens of monopoly in their own land, of the servitude of exacting capital, of the strangle hold upon the throats of millions gasping for economic, industrial breath, and the crushing war-debt loans multiplied and tripled upon them in the corner of gold and basic money by an organized, conspiring money power. We read of them falling exhausted under the burdens of multiplied war debts, private loans, taxes, and industrial tributes, of their final failure to pay and live.

And unless the evils, tyrannies, and cruelties of this exacting, relentless money power are removed, eradicated, and overcome, unless the black shadows of want trailing upon the nations of the earth like a withering blight and scourge is lifted from the struggling, writhing, gasping masses there will be another chapter written, and, if written, will be written in blood, to be read from fire, flame, and torch, in carnage and death, destruction, in cruelty, and the frenzy of desperate conflict, in antagonism, retaliation, and revenge, and in which all men will suffer, the innocent, the blameless, and inoffensive along with the cruel, misers, and shylocks whose insatiable greed and avarice brought on the deluge and conflagration, and fanned it into the flame of death, a hurricane, a tornado of destruction. And the pendulum of human progress will falter and tremble in the balance over a vortex, a chasm of death, and the hand upon the dial of civilization will reverse and turn back a thousand years. [Applause.]

EMERGENCY RELIEF

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide additional funds for carrying out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, approved May 12, 1933 (48 Stat. 55), and for continuing the Civil Works program under the Federal Civil Works Administration as created under authority of title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 200), there is hereby appropriated for these activities, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until June 30, 1935, the sum of $950,000,000, which shall be available for expenditure for such projects and/or purposes and under such rules and regulations as the President, in his discretion, may prescribe: Provided, That nothing contained in the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 shall be construed as precluding the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator from making grants for relief within a State directly to such public agency as he may designate: Provided further, That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916 (U.S.C., title 5, sec. 785), as amended, shall not apply to persons given employment by the Federal Civil Works Administration, and any rights of such persons to compensation or other benefits which may have accrued under such act shall terminate upon the date of the approval of this act: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as precluding the furnishing to such persons at the expense of the United States of such medical, surgical, and hospital treatment as may be necessary to meet the emergency of an injury sustained in the performance of duty: Provided further, That no part of the appropriation herein made shall be allotted for expenditure for any Civil Works project under any other department or establishment of the Federal Government except such sums as may be necessary for maintenance and operation of reemployment agencies, and medical, surgical, and hospital services, and for administration, supervision, inspection, disbursing, and accounting purposes, and printing and binding, in connection with State and/or local Civil Works projects: Provided further, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not be construed to apply to any purchase or service rendered for the Federal Civil Works Administration when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $100.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is a member of the committee. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. TABER. I am.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there may be 3 hours of debate on this resolution, to be equally divided and controlled between the gentleman from New York and myself.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, here is a bill before the House that the entire Membership is going to vote for. I do not see the necessity for 3 hours' debate on a measure of this kind. If the gentlemen would confine themselves to debate on the bill it would be a different matter, but all we will hear on the floor of the House in the 3 hours will be mud slinging, and therefore I object. This is not a gag rule, it is part of the regular rules of the House; in fact, this rule, according to the manual, has been built up gradually on an old rule of 1794. It was amended in 1822 by a clause that provided that no rule should be suspended except by a two-thirds vote. The Republicans used this rule almost every other week when they were in power. This is emergency legislation, and a rule to expedite its consideration is being used. We should not set aside this rule by unanimous consent. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am sure if the gentleman from Texas would ask for an hour to a side, debate to be confined to the bill, there would be no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I will agree to an hour and a half, three quarters of an hour on each side, and no more. That is sufficient, as there will be no votes against the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Debate to be confined to the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. To be confined to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would agree to a little more perhaps?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I modify the unanimous consent request to 45 minutes on a side, the debate to be confined to the bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. Reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from Texas whether there will be opportunity to amend this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. No.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Suspension of the rules is asked for and amendments will not be in order.

Mr. BOILEAU. Then why debate it? I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] is recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] for 20 minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time it will be impossible to discuss the various phases of this bill. Therefore I will content myself with saying to the House that it carries an appropriation of $950,000,000, the same amount as the estimate sent up by the President for emergency relief, and to carry on the C.W.A., which program now contemplates that the C.W.A. will last until the middle of May. However, the $950,000,000 is carried in a lump sum so that any amount of this can be used for the C.W.A. and any amout can be used for relief. The whole matter is vested in the discretion of the President. The money in this bill is in a lump sum because the two services—C.W.A. and relief—are so closely interlocked and related that it is necessary to have such flexibility as will permit the expenditure of whatever amount of the $950,000,000 is essential for either C.W.A. or relief. Either activity can be contracted or expanded as experience dictates and conditions demand. The administrator's testimony and the committee report set forth the tentative division of this sum as $450,000,000 for C.W.A. and $500,000,000 for relief. It is not intended thereby to say to the administration that such a hard and fast division of the appropriation should be followed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Assuming that $450,000,000 was set aside for C.W.A., and no more, how long would the balance for direct relief last?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It would last about 3 months after the 1st of next January.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. On page 2, line 23, "Provided further", then we go on until we reach the words "necessary for maintenance and operation of reemployment agencies." Will the gentleman state the meaning of this language? Would it include, for instance, the use of Salvation Army posts in reemployment agencies?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman will notice that it says "public agency." This must be a public political agency of the State. The funds could not be turned over to a private organization, but the State administration could accept the cooperation of philanthropic organizations.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I may say to the gentleman and to the Members of the House—and I am authorized to do so by Mayor LaGuardia, of New York City, our former colleague—that unless this aid is made adequate and is extended beyond May 1 in New York City, there is grave danger, with so many men out of employment. Riots and all kinds of havoc and disturbances are in the offing. I hope the committee may extend the time beyond May 1 and recommend the appropriation to this House of a much larger sum of money so that the C.W.A. activities may extend beyond May 1. We should take no chances. We cannot afford to allow any family breadwinner to be out of work.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Congress and the Government would make a mistake to extend by legislative act the C.W.A. to any specific date in the future. When that is done you are running the risk of paralyzing private industry all over this Nation, because the people on the C.W.A. rolls, if they are assured of work and the opportunity of staying on that job, may not hunt employment in private industry.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman not think that by limiting the amount of appropriation the gentleman is setting a date and thereby limiting the time?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman not really limit the date by that procedure?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No. We have $950,000,000 appropriated in this bill. The President may extend the C.W.A. just as long as this money lasts and curtail the relief fund if he wants to. He could extend the C.W.A. for about a year under this appropriation, if he desired, and curtail the relief fund. He can use any amount of $950,000,000 for either activity.

Mr. CELLER. In Brooklyn today there is a march of protest, probably miles long, of unemployed people. A good many of them are those who have had their allowances curtailed by the C.W.A. administration in Brooklyn—curtailed so that they cannot keep body and soul together of themselves and families. There is grave danger at this very moment on account of the severe curtailment of the amount of relief, not taking into consideration thousands of others who are out of employment—grave danger of disorder and discord, violence and wrecking of property.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The curtailment of the number of hours of employment and the number of days per week was occasioned by the diminishing fund. When this appropriation is passed some of that curtailment will be restored.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. There has been some complaint that men over 40 years of age are not getting their just representation in this work. As I understand it, it is not now possible to amend this bill to provide for, say, 25 percent of the employment to be furnished under this bill to men over 40 years of age?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No. This is not possible under the suspension of the rules. I think it should not be done anyway, because I think that there are not just grounds for such complaint.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In the committee report on page 2 it is stated that the committee anticipates that the $450,000,000 allocated to Civil Works will enable the Civil Works Administration to continue until about May 1, and then the $500,000,000 which is allocated for relief will allow them to continue such work for about a year. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is the gentleman asking a question or making a speech?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am asking a question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yielded for a question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Under the bill which was reported last May and which carried $500,000,000, according to the report we have only about $20,000,000 left now.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman is mistaken. We have $50,000,000 uncommitted in that fund which was carried in the bill passed last May.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. For a question only.

Mr. TRUAX. Is there any provision in this or in the other bill that will eliminate the discrimination against war veterans that is now being practiced in my State and many others?

Mr. BUCHANAN. My information is, there is no discrimination against war veterans; on the other hand, there is discrimination in favor of war veterans under this administration as under the Public Works Act preference must be given to ex-service men with families when they are qualified.

Mr. TRUAX. There is discrimination in my State against war veterans.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, we have here two activities, the C.W.A. and emergency relief. They are so closely related and interlocked that it is absolutely essential for efficient administration to appropriate money in one lump sum in order to give them the flexibility which is so essential to carry on the work of both in proper proportions.

The funds now available for C.W.A. will be exhausted on the 10th of this month; in fact, the checks that will have to be issued on the 10th of this month will probably overreach the available amount by two or three million dollars. It is therefore essential that this bill be passed at once so there will not be a hiatus in the employment under the C.W.A. of 2 or 3 weeks in which we will have no funds and in this way disrupt the organization and throw these men out of employment.

During the last Congress in 1932 the Federal Government made available, through the R.F.C., $300,000,000 for relief which was entirely expended prior to the present Relief Administration. The Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, approved May 12, made available $500,000,000 from funds of the R.F.C. Harry L. Hopkins was appointed Relief Administrator and took charge on the 22d of May and coordinated relief administrations in every State and in local communities. The relief funds have been well and impartially administered without fear or favor. Necessity and adequacy of relief being the controlling factors in granting it. Of the $500,000,000 made available, $100,000,000 was transferred to the C.W.A. to pay the wages of those who were transferred from the relief rolls to the C.W.A. rolls, which left $400,000,000 for direct relief, all of which has been committed in different forms of relief except $50,000,000 which is now on hand uncommitted and which will be sufficient for relief purposes until March of this year.

On March 4, 1933, there were 4,560,000 families on the relief rolls; on May 4, 4,250,000; September, 2,995,000; November, 3,400,000, or 11 percent of the total number of families in the United States. The monthly relief disbursements now amount to between thirty and forty million dollars. There are now 25 or 30 times more people on relief rolls than there were in 1929. The Federal Government's contribution to relief is 62 percent while State and local contributions are 38 percent. When Administrator Hopkins took charge he strenuously insisted on State and local contributions to the relief fund and by his efforts succeeded in procuring an increase from $7,000,000 to $17,282,000 per month. There is no question that many of the finest men and women in the United States are on the relief rolls, victims of the depression, ready and willing to earn a living for themselves and those who are dependent upon them by the sweat of their brow. We have on the rolls also the mendicant, the beggar, the decrepit, and afflicted who will always be with us and a public charge. This class will be enormously increased by the aged who have been bankrupted by the depression and who are beyond the age of employability; this is a problem for the future.

A census was taken covering 3,134,678 families on relief rolls. This census was tabulated and applied as a measure or rule to the 12,500,000 persons on the relief rolls. The startling fact was disclosed that 46 percent of the 12,500,000 on the relief rolls were under 18 years of age; that 42 percent were 16 years of age and under. In other words, the 46 percent under 18 years of age on relief would, according to the 1930 census, be about 13 percent of all those under 18 years of age in the whole United States.

It would be a national calamity if these children, the future fathers and mothers of the United States, should not receive proper food and care for their natural development. Provision of these funds for extension of the purposes of Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 will be a wise investment to aid the States in their burden of doing this.

The President quickly realized that the only legitimate remedy for unemployment is employment.

That direct relief or the dole for the able-bodied produces moral disintegration, destroys industry, self-reliance, and initiative. It dims ambition, converts energy and industry into indolence and idleness. If permanently continued, its recipients become as satisfied with their existence as a miserable worm that ekes out its miserable existence in the dust of the earth; therefore the President by Executive Order No. 6420–B established the C.W.A.

The development of the C.W.A. has been remarkable; it pays off by the week. On the first weekly pay roll there were delivered 1,108,692 individual checks to those employed thereunder; the second week there were 460,000 additional; the third week there were 600,000 additional, and so on, until December 31 there were 3,600,000 individuals on the C.W.A. pay roll, who had received a total of over $175,000,000 in pay checks. It was required that all projects worked on by them must have a social and an economic utility with a permanent value. In the rush to employ 4,000,000 men in 35 days it was ascertained that State, county, and city governments could not procure approved projects to put 4,000,000 men to work, therefore allotments were made from C.W.A. funds to Federal projects to employ 440,000 additional people. Some of these allotments supplemented existing congressional appropriations and some of them were new projects and some of them were projects that Congress had disapproved.

For the information of the House the present Federal Surplus Relief Corporation has no direct appropriation, and is essentially a centralized purchasing agency organized to purchase surplus agricultural products from the farmer and distribute these products as part of the relief program. Under the present plan they expect to have purchased through April 400,000,000 pounds of pork, which will take 4,000,000 hogs off the existing surplus; 50,000,000 pounds of beef, which will require the slaughtering of 260,000 animals; 60,000,000 pounds of butter and 6,500,000 pounds of cheese. Three hundred and fifty barrels of flour a month are to be distributed, which will require 1,610,000 bushels of wheat from the existing surplus. There has been distributed 5,000,000 barrels of beans and 15,000,000 dozen eggs from the existing surplus.

These are the main items. There are many others, such as sheep, apples, rice, oats, corn, and other products of which we have a surplus and are suitable for food and are to be purchased by this corporation from the funds for the relief of the States and Territories and A.A.A. and delivered to the needy.

The program is carried on so it will benefit our country as much as possible in decreasing the surplus agricultural products that now exist and are destroying the market prices thereof.

Mr. Speaker, to those who advocate increased appropriations over this $950,000,000 let me say that relief in a nation the size of ours is like a rapacious maw. It would absorb every dollar you appropriated, whether it was one billion or five billion dollars. We must conduct this relief project with a discriminating judgment so we will have just enough money to relieve the actual necessities and the real suffering of our people.

Therefore, the President, in his judgment, after full consultation with the chief administrator and the administrators in the various States who are handling this matter, has decided that $950,000,000 is sufficient, and who are you or whom am I, who represent small districts in the different States, and know very little or nothing of other sections, to say that we know more about it or have better judgment in the matter than the President of the United States, with all the avenues of information open to him.

The President inaugurated both the relief program and the C.W.A. The C.W.A. was intended merely to carry throughout the winter months, because C.W.A., carried too far, takes employees from industry and prevents industry from getting the necessary employees.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. KVALE. Before the gentleman concludes his remarks will the gentleman discuss briefly the second proviso of the bill which terminates certain benefits to the injured or the killed?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The second proviso of the bill eliminates the employees of C.W.A. from the benefits of the Compensation Act. Now, why should they be included? They are not Federal employees except in a technical sense. The Federal Government simply pays their salaries. It does not receive the benefit of their work. They are working on State and city projects under the direction of State or city authorities, and the benefit of their work goes to the States and the cities in which they work; therefore, the compensation laws of the States should take care of them when injured.

They are not in the true sense of the word Federal employees. So why should they be under the Federal Employment Act?

Let me tell you something else. I looked into this question carefully. The compensation commission estimated that up to February 15 the accrued compensation for those injured in C.W.A. work would cost the Federal Government $14,000,000, and that is a conservative estimate. The probabilities are it will cost $30,000,000.

Information furnished me shows that there are 12 cases of fatal accidents already allowed where the total compensation runs as high as $20,000 in one case, another as high as $14,000, $9,000, $8,000, $5,000, $4,000, or an average of over $9,000 for each of the 12 cases. They have had 146 fatalities and over 14,000 not fatal injuries.

I know this, that if you give them any character of compensation, there ought to be a maximum limitation placed on the amount any individual can receive as is done in the compensation of longshoremen or as is practiced by our Claims Committee so that the pension roll of the Government will not grow too rapidly and become too large and constitute too great a burden upon the taxpayer. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, never in the history of America has there been a situation so acute as at the present time. In January 1933 there were on relief rolls families totaling 3,850,000, and the total cost on account of that was $60,827,161. In March 1933 the number of families on relief was 4,560,000, and the cost was $81,205,631. Today there are on the relief rolls 7,000,000 families of one kind or the other of relief, and the total cost of carrying them along is running at the rate of $425,000,000 a month. These families on the relief rolls are made up as follows:

	Number	Cost per month
On C.W.A. pay rolls	4,000,000	$225,000,000
On direct relief	2,650,000	50,000,000
Increase in number employed on public-works projects	350,000	150,000,000
Total	7,000,000	425,000,000

My figures on the direct relief and the C.W.A. include contributions on the part of States, counties, and municipalities. Of these figures above, $175,000,000 for C.W.A. wages is paid by the Federal Government; $30,000,000 of the direct relief is paid by the Federal Government; and practically all of the $150,000,000 a month for P.W.A. is paid by the Federal Government.

It is apparent from these figures that there is no substantial employment in this country except relief employment of one kind or another.

I am familiar with just one part of the country from the standpoint of personal contacts, but I believe one part is no different from another. Since the rise in prices which followed the advent of the N.R.A. and the fear of inflation, which took place in the summer, there has been no general movement of merchandise, and so far the priming of the pump which we have done has been a failure.

The raising of prices clogs the channels of trade and trade does not move.

For employment in September as compared with the normal figures we find that it was, according to the Department of Labor:

	Employment	Factory pay rolls of normal
	Percent	Percent
September	74.3	57.6
October	73.9	57.4
November	72.4	53.6
December	71.8	53.1

Of course, the number employed and the pay roll were very much smaller in November and December on account of the seasonal drop, as the number in those 2 months is much below the September figure, and so the pay-roll figure is much below the normal in those 2 months. It indicates practically no regular factory employment in November and December. I am making no predictions at this time because I have not the time to go into it, of the result to follow. I hope there will be an improvement in business conditions, but it is not in sight now, nor in immediate prospect.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Not at this time. This appropriation is not needed because the bureaucrats have taken $1,500,000,000 out of the $3,300,000,000 which we appropriated for relief last June, and they have " pork-barreled " it over beyond the 1st of next July, into projects that are purely propaganda projects, and which provide no substantial relief or employment. That money can be transferred back to the relief roll and relief taken care of without the stroke of a pen or an act of Congress, but that probably will not be done.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I cannot at this time.

Now, down to the 1st of December with reference to the C.W.A., an effort was made to reduce the relief rolls, but after December 1, those who came first were taken on first, and many were taken on who did not need employment to keep them going.

I had a situation in my own district where in one town the entire list of those to be employed were not in need. I took it up with the C.W.A. as best I could. I tried to get to Mr. Hopkins, but an ordinary Congressman cannot talk with Mr. Hopkins. I finally got a subordinate and I was told that the job was to pour the money out and not necessarily to take care of those who needed it most. Now, that has been called to Mr. Hopkins' attention as forcibly as I could call it when he was before the committee. I hope that in the future he will provide for those who are most needy as he gives out the employment.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. With reference to the local question to which the gentleman alluded, there was a local board of representative citizens acting with the representatives of the Labor Department, who determined the allocation of these funds, and as to who should be employed.

Mr. TABER. They were bound by rules. The local board was bound by rules set up here in Washington, which provided a definite method by which the order of priority should be determined. It was the fault of Washington, and not the fault of the locality.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. On that very point, would it not be possible for the Administrator in such community as the gentleman spoke of to call in the services of other philanthropic agencies, such as, for instance, the Salvation Army, to assist in carrying out the administration of this measure?

Mr. TABER. There are no restrictions whatever upon the manner in which the administration can handle this situation. I cannot yield further.

There have been many abuses in connection with this proposition. In San Francisco those abuses were very marked. People who had considerable property were given jobs. The supervisors were often people without any experience whatever. Private employment agencies procured fees to obtain employment. That even existed some place in Washington, as was shown by Dr. SWICK on the floor of this House the other day. This situation in California was not cleared up until after Governor Rolf has taken care of the situation.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Were not those abuses comparatively few considering the magnitude of this project?

Mr. TABER. Perhaps somebody may say that. At the same time, the abuses of employing people who absolutely did not need employment were not comparatively few, and that was the fault of the set-up here in Washington. This abuse is great and dangerous. I cannot yield further.

In Idaho the Governor has stated, under date of January 21, that a large number on the pay roll there had other income and were not in need. I am speaking of these things in the hope that they will be corrected insofar as they can be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. TABER. I yield myself 1 additional minute.

We have to take care of what need there is for relief, which the States, counties, and towns and cities are unable to meet; but we must come to a point somewhere, where normal channels of business provide employment in the future for people, and we cannot do this unless there is an end to this type of employment, and that was pretty well recognized by Mr. Hopkins when he said that he would plan to end it on the 15th of May.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. In a moment. I am afraid that these operations are delaying and preventing the return of business. I am afraid that all this effort, in view of the fact that the people have once tasted blood, is going to fail. The one encouraging sign was the attitude of Mr. Hopkins, that he hoped to end it on the middle of May.

I yield to the lady from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think it would be fair to earmark and set aside a certain sum of money for the women? Thus far they have not had their share of employment and aid. There are many widows and children and women with dependent fathers and mothers who are in need. There are many pitiful cases.

Mr. TABER. Frankly, I am not in a position to pass on that at this time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think it would be fair, as a matter of judgment?

Mr. TABER. I cannot yield further.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 1 additional minute in order that I may ask him a question.

Mr. TABER. It is time for somebody to stand up and have the courage to say that soon this relief employment must cease and that we must build up our industries and provide employment through them. It takes more courage than it did a year ago to do this. It takes far more courage to stand out now to fight to put things on an intelligent basis than it did before. Let me ask you, Is the bureaucracy going to have the courage? Is this House going to have the courage? Is the Congress going to have the courage? Frankly, there is a fear in this House and elsewhere that if this bill does not go along something worse will pass, and a great many people who feel that this thing ought to be taken care of out of funds which have already been provided are going to vote for the bill, but they are going to do it in the hope that it will not be raised away out of all proportion beyond what the President of the United States has asked for.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one half minute to ask the gentleman a question. I think it is a very important question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that each Member of the House so desiring may have 5 legislative days within which to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I am for this bill. I hope when the time comes that the funds we appropriate today are exhausted, industry again will have resumed its proper place and that we will not need further appropriations for this purpose. I rose particularly to say I think it is a mistake to deprive the employees under the C.W.A. of the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act as is provided in this bill. I believe this is a serious mistake; not that the present rates should apply, but that the United States Employees' Compensation Commission should be instructed to set up a separate schedule covering these employees.

Up to the present time 142 deaths have occurred and there have been 14,000 accidents. Unless something is done, unless some provision is made to cover these employees, we will have a flood of claims presented to Congress for the next 20 years.

Harry L. Hopkins, Administrator of the Civil Works Administration, appearing before the committee considering the bill, stated he was not in favor of this proviso.

The committee report accompanying the bill stated on page 6, that—

> The termination of the compensation rights and the denial of any future compensation rights is a difficult question.

Thus showing that the committee itself was doubtful as to the wisdom of its course in permitting this proviso to remain in the bill.

In my opinion the bill should be amended in the following manner:

Page 2, lines 18 to 23, inclusive, strike out the following:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed as precluding the furnishing to such persons at the expense of the United States of such medical, surgical, and hospital treatment as may be necessary to meet the emergency of an injury sustained in the performance of duty.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission and the Administrator of Civil Works shall establish a special schedule of rates for compensation which shall be payable to employees of the United States for fatal and nonfatal injuries sustained in employment under the Federal Civil Works Administration and for emergency medical, surgical, and hospital treatment of such employees sustaining injuries in the performance of their duties, and shall formulate and promulgate the necessary rules and regulations for such purposes, subject to approval by the President of the United States. Such schedules and the payment of compensation shall be effective retroactively from the date of the inauguration of the Civil Works program and in no event shall the rates of compensation exceed those prescribed by such act of September 7, 1916, as amended, nor shall the total aggregate compensation in any individual case exceed the sum of $5,000. Nothing contained in this proviso shall be construed to authorize the duplication of any payment heretofore made by the Employees' Compensation Commission and/or the Civil Works Administration under such act of September 7, 1916, as amended.

If this amendment were incorporated in the bill, it would be fair to the employees and to the Government. I hope the parliamentary situation may be changed to admit of this action. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, the Members of the House are familiar with the rule that was issued restricting hours of employment in counties having towns under 2,500 population. I have been assured by the Administrator that this restriction will be eliminated or modified and that when the funds under this appropriation are available increased hours will be ordered in those counties that were adversely affected by the order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I want to take enough time to register myself in favor of this appropriation.

The Civil Works Administration program has done more in my district to revive, temporarily at least, not only the spirits of the people but business as well, especially retail business, than any other thing, if not more than everything else combined, than the Government has done since this depression started. It has brought renewed hope and courage to multitudes of people; given them a new lease on life. It does not take much imagination for one to realize something of the feeling of a man and his family who brings home at the end of a week for the first time in years a check for $12 or $14 that he has worked for and earned after he has been out of work for several years and been obliged, perhaps for a greater part of that time, to accept help from the city. In a great many cases it is the only money he and his family have seen, or that they could call their own and do with as they saw fit, for 2 or 3 years.

Before I left home to attend this session of Congress I announced publicly on several occasions that I would support an appropriation to continue this work. I do not know how long it can be continued, but certainly now is not the time to stop it.

During the last 2 weeks I have received communications from the responsible officials of practically every incorporated city and village in my district and several of the township boards urging the continuation of this work.

I gladly support this appropriation for that purpose.

The money should be honestly and efficiently used, but that is the responsibility of the administrative officials, not ours.

While we are passing this appropriation no one ought to fool himself about the actual situation throughout the country. The Civil Works Administration has not taken care of all those in need or unemployed, far from it. It has only scratched the surface. There are still more looking for work than have been given temporary employment by the Civil Works Administration. The estimates of the American Federation of Labor are that industrial employment increased only about 800,000 during the 4 months of September, October, November, and December of last year, and that even with the help of this Government work, more than 6,800,000 are still without even temporary employment. I heard the University of Chicago Round Table over the radio yesterday estimate that, including the unemployed and those dependent upon them, there were between thirty and forty million souls all told in need in this country.

It will take more than this temporary palliative to permanently relieve the situation. Business must be encouraged and stimulated so that those out of work can go to work in private industry before any permanent relief is afforded. As stated by the University of Chicago Round Table, we must stop thinking of unemployment in terms of tomorrow only or with the idea that prosperity is just around the corner and begin to think of it from a long-distance viewpoint.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that I am not allowed more than 2 minutes to follow up the remarks which I made on this subject the other day, inasmuch as I have now read with great interest the report of the committee and Mr. Hopkins' testimony.

I have called attention to a large section of the country where they apparently could not afford to pay the wages on the farms which are being paid by the C.W.A. for other work. I find now that in the future at least 30 cents an hour will be paid. Protests have come to me about this from the farmers of the South, from Indiana, and from Illinois. The burden of these complaints is that large numbers of farm help will refuse to leave C.W.A. projects and resume their former employment.

I wish to inject this thought because, although somewhat political, it refers plainly to the situation which exists. A very fine-looking gentleman whom I did not know—and I do not know whether he is a Republican or a Democrat—a day or two ago told me that if the Republican Party had brought about these disrupting conditions in the field of wages it would not now be safe for a Republican to live in his particular city. It would seem that, in the light of recent experiences, the director in charge of these disbursements should be able to proceed more wisely and see to it that proper methods are followed and restrictions provided to prevent the disrupting of wage scales and, likewise, to end the wide-spread graft, corruption, and political favoritism, the record of which has been appearing in newspapers from coast to coast during the past weeks.

Allocate these funds where the greatest need exists, and let them not be given to greedy municipalities which are well able to take care of their own welfare problems. I stated the other day that the P.W.A. could not come to the relief of all localities, and now I find the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] telling Mr. Hopkins that his State and others are in such condition that they were able to obtain little or no P.W.A. money. I endeavored to make it clear that the P.W.A. will not be able to take up the slack and that there will be a great demand, even after May 1, for C.W.A. funds from sections of the country which cannot be assisted otherwise.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to be permitted to demand a second to this motion and secure the time for a real discussion of this all-important subject, but was denied that privilege. This is actually a bill to throw 4,000,000 men out of employment because it fails to supply the money to keep them at work.

The Civil Works Administration is the first thing in our recovery program that has given work to men—the first act of the Government that begins at the bottom. It is the best money that we have spent. All the billions heretofore provided for have been poured in at the top, hoping it would trickle down, and then it failed to trickle.

This sorry appropriation of $450,000,000 to throw 4,000,000 men out of jobs by May 1 is an economic blunder, a moral tragedy. To throw 2,000,000 back into the bread lines ought to be unthinkable. The first obligation of Government is in fact to see that when private industry fails the Government itself must provide a job for every man and woman who wants to work.

The last second of my fleeting minute of protest against this national parsimony approaches. I shall vote for this poverty-stricken measure only because it is just that much better than none. But I am going at a future time to express the full protest of my heart against this tragedy.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I wish to thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] for his graciousness in yielding me the balance of the time, but I can say in a few minutes as much as I could say if I took longer time, for I wish only to say that I expect to vote for this measure. I think this is not the proper time to withdraw financial support from this work. Apparently the program has not been carried through and to quit now would be disastrous to many who have depended upon the program being carried on through the winter. While I am a Republican, I do not wish to hamper a program that is claimed to be for the relief of the unfortunate of the country. I hope that in the future this C.W.A. program will be carried on much more strictly and not with so much waste and overhead expense. I wish it understood that I do not justify this terrible waste, and I am voting for this measure in spite of this waste, but in the hope that in the future the Civil Works Administration will be carried on more economically and with the aim of bringing to the deserving the maximum of benefit and relief. I think those in charge of carrying on this work have in many instances misinterpreted the spirit of the law. They have made many unwise expenditures. Their actions cannot be condoned, except from the standpoint that frequently grave injustices are done in the name of charity and justice.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, those who criticize this bill will find little justification for their criticism when they read the frank, comprehensive, and informative statement submitted by Mr. Hopkins, the Director of this Service. This bill carries the full appropriation requested by the President, and it is pleasing to see that it liberalizes the authority of the President over the funds appropriated.

You will be interested to read the liberalizing proviso on page 48 of the hearings. Suffice it to say that the broadest possible authority is now vested in the President to make grants for relief to and within any State to such agency as he may designate.

Referring to the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, permit me to say that the people of Alabama have the utmost confidence in the President and have no complaints to offer other than what they think may have been some mistakes heretofore made and which they confidently believe will be avoided and corrected in the future. Mr. Hopkins himself recognizes, as will appear from the hearings, that in hurriedly setting up a great agency like this many mistakes must inevitably be made. He assured the committee that he stood ready, when definite and well-founded complaints are called to his attention, to make every effort to correct them.

Reference has been made to the conditions of the schools of my State. I hold in my hand a telegram from the Governor of Alabama, and have received many telegrams from other leading citizens of the State, asking for large Federal appropriations for our schools. We have felt that since this bill confers on the President full and plenary authority in the spending of this $950,000,000, it would be unwise to undertake to earmark any part of it. States that have emergency needs will have the right to go to the President and present them, whether they relate to schools or other matters of great public concern.

The schools in Alabama are in dire need of funds to keep them open for the remaining months of the school year, and it is gratifying to know that Mr. Hopkins on last Friday announced that funds were available to help keep the schools open not only in Alabama but in other States where real emergency exists.

I will say, however, that the Governor of my State holds in his hands the only power to enable the people of the State to do what they earnestly desire to do to the extent of their ability and within the limitation of our constitution to provide funds for our schools so as to ask of the Federal Government aid to meet only such part of the burden as they are unable to assume.

If the Governor will call the legislature in extra session—and he alone has that right—they will provide some way to lessen their requests of the Federal Government for funds. It is not my purpose to discuss the reported differences, real or imaginary, between the Governor and the legislature, but it is very distressing to know that the Governor at a time like this should refuse to assemble the legislature to consider ways and means to provide funds in aid of keeping the schools open in the State. If, as reported, he is apprehensive that the legislature might pass some bill contrary to preelection promises he made, then he will have fully discharged his duties by vetoing any objectionable measures so passed by the legislature, and under our constitution his veto can be set aside only by a two-thirds vote in the house and senate. In taking this action he will have discharged his full constitutional duty to the people of the State, for surely no one will insist that any Governor is clothed with powers not granted by the constitution or statutes of the State. The Governor, I am informed, recognizes the compelling necessity for the convening of the legislature if our schools are to be kept open, and recognizing this necessity, the right to call the legislature in session, resting as it does alone on him, becomes in my opinion a mandate.

May I say this in conclusion that the American Legion and the parent teachers' organizations of my State are deeply interested in seeing that necessary funds are provided to keep the schools open. When this bill passes, as I am sure it will, if the Governor should continue to refuse to call the legislature in extra session, then I express the hope that a representative committee from the American Legion and from the parent teachers' organizations, after conferring with all of the candidates who have announced for Governor, will come to Washington and give to the President moral assurance that if aid is extended to carry on our schools that the new State administration, which will assemble in January next, will provide ways and means to repay the Federal Government whatever the President may say should be our State's contribution in the way of a refund and under such terms and conditions as the President may prescribe.

There are other States in the same condition that Alabama is in and I hope that they may take steps necessary to provide in the future for a fair return to the Federal Government of any moneys that may now be lent for school emergency needs such as Alabama is confronted with. This is a responsibility resting not primarily on the Federal Government but on the States, and speaking as a citizen of Alabama, I believe that our people, if given the opportunity, will find a way, notwithstanding certain legal limitations, for doing their full duty in providing for this great emergency that now obtains in Alabama relating to a continuance of our schools. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 386, nays 1, not voting 46, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—H.R. 7527

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, this bill makes an additional appropriation of $950,000,000 for purposes of emergency relief by the Government under the act of 1933, and also for continuing the Civil Works program.

It is estimated that the available funds for continuing the purposes for which this money is intended will, so far as the Civil Works program is concerned, be exhausted by February 9, and, so far as the relief act is concerned, early in March.

The appropriation is made in one sum but the committee tentatively divides the amount estimating that $500,000,000 shall go to relief and $450,000,000 for the continuation of the Civil Works. The same Administrator is in charge of the supervision of the distribution of both funds. He estimates that the amount allocated to Civil Works will carry the program forward to about the middle of May, and that the relief fund will be sufficient for about 1 year. It is hoped to gradually diminish the number to whom relief is necessary to be distributed and transfer them to the Civil Works rolls.

Congress, by the act of May 12, 1933, made available a sum not to exceed $500,000,000 from funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and $100,000,000 of this has been used for relief work in connection with the Civil Works. There was allocated to Civil Works $400,000,000 out of the appropriation of $3,300,000,000.

The demand for this additional appropriation is most pressing. The House Committee on Appropriations has recommended it and the same is true of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and it is hoped that the relief work will not be interrupted through any delay in the enactment of this bill.

It is estimated that in March 1933 some 4,560,000 families, or 1 out of every 6 in the United States, were securing relief through some governmental source, but in November it is estimated the number was reduced to 3,400,000 families. The financial strain became too great to be borne by the State and local authorities and appeal was made to the Government.

There are two ways of giving relief—by direct relief and work relief. Every effort is being made to provide work, either through the Civil Works or the Public Works, so as to decrease the number in need of direct relief. The situation is distressing beyond description. There was hardly a bright spot in the entire United States when Congress convened on March 9, 1933. Much legislation has been enacted since that time.

The President saved the depositors in the banks throughout the country through the moratorium order which he issued on March 5, 1933, and Congress later ratified and confirmed his action.

Civilian conservation camps were established throughout the country and young men given employment, which afforded some measure of relief to their families. Then came the Wagner bill, making an appropriation of $500,000,000, and States and local communities were encouraged, through that legislation, to supplement Government funds with their own funds to the extent of their financial ability.

The rural sections of the country were aided through legislation amending the Federal Land Bank Act, first guaranteeing the interest and later, during the present session, the principal of Federal land-bank bonds to the extent of $2,000,000,000. Similar legislation was enacted for home owners through the passage of the Home Loan Act, which guaranteed the interest on $2,000,000,000 of home-loan bonds. However, it is hoped the principal, as well as the interest, will be guaranteed on these bonds at an early date by Congress.

The National Recovery Act was passed by Congress making available $3,300,000,000 to find jobs for the unemployed, and $400,000,000 of this amount was allocated to the building of roads, which I favored. Much other legislation has been enacted by Congress in an effort to relieve the depression.

Legislation has also been enacted guaranteeing bank deposits up to $2,500, and a larger amount on and after July 1, 1934.

Legislation authorizing the President to fix the gold content of the dollar has been enacted and other wide discretionary powers given to the President.

In the enactment of such a comprehensive program there have been many delays and disappointments. Boards and commissions had to be created and men and women secured to assist in the preparation and administration of the several measures enacted.

The Administrator of the Civil Works and relief funds, Mr. Hopkins, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and gave a detailed and comprehensive statement with reference to his work. Boards were set up in each State to carry out the work. Conditions were different in the various localities. Enrollment of the unemployed had to be made. Applications for funds from the several States had to be submitted for consideration. Members of Congress have had innumerable complaints as to alleged injustices in the administration of the work. There are 48 States, all with different set-ups. Then there are more than 3,000 counties, and each county has its own set-up under the general charge of the Federal Administrator but under the immediate charge of the administrator for the State.

The people throughout the country, generally speaking, have endorsed the legislation enacted by Congress in behalf of humanity. The complaints against it have been leveled at its administration. I have had some complaints to the effect that men over a certain age, though able-bodied, were not given work. Other complaints have been from women's organizations to the effect that a sufficient amount of money has not been allocated to them; but, as above stated, all of these complaints have been against the administration of the act.

Everyone has applauded the courageous fight of President Roosevelt against the depression and the bold legislation he has recommended. Congress has responded splendidly. Now that Congress is appropriating new money to supplement the appropriations made during the extra session of Congress, and rules and regulations have been promulgated, let me express the hope that the administration of the act throughout the country may be done with justice and fairness to all alike. The women and children of the country should not go undernourished when there is plenty of food for them. They should not be humiliated for want of sufficient clothing when there is plenty of material.

Never in the history of the country have we seen so many people out of employment and really pleading for work. Schools have been dismissed in thousands of rural communities because of want of money to pay the teachers. The teachers are in an unhappy plight and in many localities are discounting their warrants at a ruinously low rate. Congress is doing all it can to aid in the solution of these vexatious questions.

The cattlemen of the country are pleading for help. They have been as hard hit as any other class of people in the country. Today Congress passed a bill to authorize the expenditure of $200,000,000 in behalf of the cattle and dairy industries.

Recognizing that the farmers are without means in many localities to secure funds to make crops, $35,000,000 has been authorized to be expended in making crop loans, limiting loans to not to exceed $250.

I call attention to this varied program for the purpose of showing that there has been more legislation enacted since March 9 last, when Congress was convened in extra session, in behalf of the forgotten man than in any other period of time in the history of the country.

I have not attempted to enumerate all the legislation enacted but have been content to invite attention to the legislation enacted in an effort to relieve the depression, and for the purpose of showing the intent of Congress, and to further express the hope that in the further administration of these several acts, now that rules and regulations have been promulgated, and those in charge of the work are more familiar with it, that it be administered in the spirit of its enactment.

Attention has been invited to the fact that in many areas no work can be secured except that which the legislation enacted by Congress has made possible.

I am therefore glad to support the pending bill, as I have the enactment of all the other legislation to which I have invited attention.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this bill appropriates money to relieve human misery. It seeks to continue in employment for several months 4,000,000 of our citizens who, though able and willing to work, have been unsuccessful for several years in securing employment. How can anyone vote against such a measure when he knows the cause that it seeks to cure.

I objected to the request of my good friend from Texas, Mr. BUCHANAN, to extend the time for debate 3 hours. He was recognized under a rule that has been in force over a hundred years, and this rule has been used to expedite legislation in this House by Republicans as well as Democrats since that time. It is not a gag rule, but one of the regular rules of the House.

Talk would never stop the passage of the bill nor would it change a single vote. Why, then, should we debate the measure simply for the purpose of having some Members engage in mud slinging.

Everyone admits that radical changes in old-established policies had to be discarded for the time being to meet a situation that the present administration inherited from the Hoover regime. All we want is to try and correct this situation. Private industry cannot at this time take care of the unemployed, but it is hoped that in a few months the millions that this money will take care of will find work among our industries.

Mr. Hopkins, the Director of the Civil Works Administration, frankly tells the Committee on Appropriations that he has found graft. He tells them what he is doing, and some of those who have taken food from the mouths of little children by stealing some of this money are behind prison bars. My wish is that they will be kept there, and it would be well to see that their menu is hard bread and water for an unlimited period. When they are sent to trial, if found guilty, they should receive the maximum penalty, and no labor can be too hard for them during the period of their confinement. Our Republican friends point to some of the graft that has been uncovered. There is no denial that this has occurred, but those who have violated this sacred public trust by misappropriating this money are going to suffer. They are not Democrats, nor would I be so mean to say they are Republicans or members of any other political party. No political party would claim them or permit them among its membership. They are the lowest of criminals, and we should not blame any party or the Civil Works Administration for their dastardly crimes. We should all join together to put them where they belong, back of iron bars.

This is emergency legislation to meet an emergency. When word goes out that we have extended the time for this emergency work the Members will receive the prayers of the millions of good men and women who will be given employment and benefit thereby.

As part of my remarks, I include an editorial from the St. Louis Post Dispatch of yesterday. It is well worth reproducing:

[From the St. Louis Post Dispatch]

THE TWOFOLD ROLE OF PUBLIC WORKS

The Government's activities and expenditures in the gigantic task of putting the people back to work have proved themselves indispensable, and the people have accepted them as such. This accounts for the volume of protest against the proposal to terminate the C.W.A. by May 1, since it is realized everywhere that private industry is not yet prepared to absorb the 3,800,000 persons who would be thrown out of employment if the Civil Works program ended thus abruptly. Figures by the Commissioner of Labor Statistics show that, of the 7,000,000 persons returned to work between March 1 and January 1 (excluding agriculture), private industry has found places for only 2,600,000, and the Government has provided employment for 4,380,000.

Even when industry returns to normal production, competent authorities estimate, 5,000,000 persons will be left unemployed, so steady has been the march of labor-saving machinery. Reduction of working hours offers a solution to this problem, as we have often pointed out. Until the revival of industry is complete, however, and the revolution in working hours has been achieved, continuation of Government activities is essential to bridge the gap.

The physical improvements bestowed upon the country by the recovery activities prove that governmental expenditures are in reality investments. All over the Nation necessary public buildings are springing into being, long-neglected work in forest conservation is being accomplished, huge power and navigation projects are under construction. The Government is getting something for its money. More than that, its money is being circulated, freshening the shrunken rivulets of trade into a healthy stream. The money does not stop in the banks, as so much Federal largess has. It goes straight to the people.

The C.W.A. worker does not hoard his money or invest it in unnecessary productive enterprises; he hastens to distribute it among the grocer, the clothier, the furniture dealer, etc., and the creditors whom he owes. Reviving business always means more revenue for the Government, and so it has been recently.

The Government cannot afford to drop half done its great undertaking of pulling the people out of the depression, if we are not to return to the heart-sickening days of last March and the months preceding. There is enough work to be done in improving our comparatively new country, and it would be the course of wisdom to undertake major activities now, when the stimulus of public works is needed to complete our economic rescue. The present Congress may be expected to order such undertakings, perhaps of such magnitude that will make the dwindling adherents of laissez faire gasp for breath. The Tennessee Valley and Columbia River projects indicate the sort of tremendous undertakings that this country needs, both in its era of reconstruction and for the welfare of future generations.

A project possessing the essentials, both of widespread employment and widespread benefits, is the Mississippi Valley plan, as discussed by Secretary Ickes in the current Survey Graphic. This vast central domain of 27 States is beset by various problems, which the Mississippi Valley Committee, an agency of P.W.A., has classified as follows: Erosion, forestation, flood control, agriculture, navigation, and power.

Erosion, Mr. Ickes points out, washes 3,000,000,000 tons of good earth each year from America's fields and pastures. He quotes Prof. N. S. Shaler, the late geographer, who warned that unless man learned to check erosion the time would come "when our kind, having wasted its greatest inheritance, will fade from the earth because of the ruin it has accomplished."

The problem of forestation is closely linked with erosion in addition to its bearing on the lumber supply of the future. Unregulated exploitation has left only 250,000 square miles of forest land in the Mississippi Valley, and 10 percent of it is well on the way to devastation. Mr. Ickes envisages flood control—not as barricading against high water by building more and higher dikes along the lower Mississippi but as controlling the floods where they originate—on the upper reaches of the stream by diverting the water into drought reservoirs.

The welfare of our agriculture is endangered by the continued use of poor lands, while fertile soils await only irrigation and cultivation to yield rich crops. Mississippi navigation has long been a dream of the inland empire, but Mr. Ickes foresees no Utopia where the barge will supplant the railway and motor truck. As to power, he points out that few farmers enjoy the use of electricity, and a vast field for construction and sale of equipment is offered.

Accomplishment of all these things would furnish employment for thousands of workers, who would leave behind them rich assets to the country's future. A similar plan for the Missouri Valley already has been introduced in the form of a bill by Senator NORRIS. He, too, envisages a wide program of flood control, navigation, power, and irrigation development. He agrees with Mr. Ickes in saying:

"For many years we have been building dikes on the lower Mississippi to prevent damage by flood. The very waters that do that damage, if properly impounded, will be of great benefit for navigation, irrigation, and development of power."

Such plans as those of Secretary Ickes and Senator Norris furnish food for thought and a basis for our next great program of putting the people to work and developing the country. The Roman emperors constructed great aqueducts, roads, and other public works in periods of depression and contributed to the glory of their nation. Our own country is at last learning this valuable lesson.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for this bill because it provides for an appropriation of $950,000,000, to be expended $450,000,000 for Civil Works and $500,000,000 for direct-relief disbursements, according to the committee's report. I am not entirely satisfied with this measure because it is intended that the Civil Works expenditures will cease on May 1, and I strongly favor their being continued long beyond that date and, if necessary, for the remainder of this year. However, this is the best that can be obtained under the parliamentary situation, as this bill is submitted to the House under suspension of the rules and no amendments to increase the amounts can be presented. I am assured, however, by the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] that a greater proportion of the $950,000,000 will be disbursed for Civil Works and its tenure extended if necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I also desire to point out briefly the fact that Civil Works and Public Works projects giving employment to millions of citizens, in addition to the vast sums granted to aid agriculture and refinance the mortgages on the farms and homes of the Nation, are very worthy and furnish a striking contrast to the failure and refusal of the Hoover administration to furnish such aid. President Hoover contended that the Federal Government should leave this gigantic task to the bankrupt States and municipalities and to private charity, and he nullified by a pocket veto the Wagner bill appropriating $500,000,000 to the States for relief after it had passed both branches of Congress. The Republican majority in the Senate killed the Garner public works bill which would have provided public works projects and direct loans to industry throughout the United States, while the Roosevelt administration has provided $3,300,000,000 for Public Works projects throughout the Nation. To the very end of his administration Hoover maintained that the Federal Government could not and should not interfere with the right of the individual American citizen, his wife and children, to starve.

There is not another chapter in the history of the world which depicts such two widely different pictures as those presented by the cruel refusal of Herbert Hoover in the winter of 1932 to aid the unemployed and his rejection of the plea of the hunger marchers who asked for $50 each for the unemployed and their families, and the noble action of Franklin D. Roosevelt in the winter of 1933–34 in granting $400,000,000 through the Civil Works Administration to the unemployed, which was the finest Christmas present ever provided by any government to its unfortunate citizens.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, on the 25th of January I addressed the House on the subject of the Civil Works program and pointed out that a very unjust regulation had been promulgated by the Administrator, because it divided our people into two classes and provided that a man who happened to live in a town under 2,500 population could not work more than 15 hours a week, while his brother, working alongside of him but living in a town of greater population, would be employed 24 hours.

At that time I ventured to say to the House that such a regulation was unjust and unfair and undemocratic. I stated that it could not be justified and was an entirely artificial regulation not supported by any facts or figures or statistics. No answer has been made to my criticism. There is neither rime nor reason in the regulation. There is no basis for the distinction. With just as much propriety you could make a regulation that would give 24 hours of work per week to men who live in white houses and only 15 hours per week to men who live in brown houses. There are only 3,165 cities or towns in continental United States of over 2,500 inhabitants, while there are 13,433 of them under that amount. The population of those who live in communities over that amount is practically 56 percent of the total, while the population of those who live elsewhere amounts to nearly 44 percent of the whole. Why discriminate against the smaller villages?

I hear much said on the floor and elsewhere about the great man who is President of this country. Surely he would not countenance a regulation of this character if it were brought to his attention! He would make no such classification. He would not make such a distinction even in favor of the men who wore the uniform in times of stress and danger, because he said in his speech to the American Legion in Chicago last summer:

> No person, because he wore the uniform, must therefore be placed in a special class of beneficiaries over and above all other citizens. The fact that wearing a uniform does not mean that he can demand and receive from the Government a benefit which no other citizen receives.

I do not agree entirely with this sentiment as applied to veterans. Nevertheless I quote it to ask my Democratic colleagues and others how it came about that this unjust rule was promulgated. If it be true that a veteran is to have no class benefits over and above other citizens, then by what token or through what process of reasoning do they arrive at a regulation of the sort to which I refer?

Indeed, Administrator Hopkins, who promulgated this order, apologizes for it himself. He said before the committee, as shown on page 55 of the hearings, that he thought that 15 hours of labor in the Civil Works Administration in rural territory was too small. On page 56 he is reported as saying that he believed that this regulation may have worked some hardship and was unfair, and that it was his thought to increase these hours of labor as soon as the appropriation which we are voting on today is approved. He added that he could not defend "up to the hilt" that regulation, and that he would like very much to make some increase in view of the facts.

And here today, during this debate, the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON], who is on this committee, states that he has been assured by Mr. Hopkins that this regulation will be modified and that smaller communities may look for better treatment in the future. I call the attention of the House to these facts, and sincerely hope and trust that a wrong is now about to be remedied and that justice will hereafter be done. In this belief, I will vote for the bill.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am supporting this bill appropriating additional funds for the continuance of the Civil Works Administration, for I recognize the necessity of maintaining this program at the present time. Urgent requests have come to me from the mayors or municipal councils of Lockport, Niagara Falls, North Tonawanda, Kenmore, and the city of Buffalo, important localities within my district. Failure to appropriate this money would undoubtedly place a burden upon these cities which could not be carried.

At the same time may I point out to the Congress, and particularly to the relief administration itself, some considerations which must be borne in mind from now on in the proper administration of this billion-dollar fund. I have received much criticism of late in regard to the current handling of the C.W.A. program. I admit that any program so large as this has been, and one which of necessity had to be put into effect quickly, could not be perfect, so criticism was to be expected. This leads to my point, which is that the relief administration for the protection of the Government and those citizens out of employment must exert the greatest possible care to remedy faults which we are now recognizing.

Carelessness and lack of proper planning and direction led to the expenditure of the last appropriation in advance of the time for which it was set up, with the resulting curtailment in work and reduction of hours during the past month. I have no argument with organized labor in its demand that skilled labor should receive just reward for its services even under the C.W.A. set-up. On the other hand, everyone must realize that with less padding of the pay rolls, particularly in the higher-paid classifications, the money which we are now appropriating can be made to last for a longer period. I take the liberty of quoting from a letter which I have just received from a C.W.A. worker within my district, as follows:

I am now working for the C.W.A 24 hours a week at 50 cents per hour, and thankful to get it, but I have a lot of fault to find with the set-up of the work over here. Too much difference in pay. For "straw bosses", 80 cents per hour. That is more than they ever made in their lives. Most of these men worked with me last winter in the park digging stumps. Now 7 or 8 of these men get 80 cents and I get 50 cents. Why are these men worth 30 cents per hour more than I am? They have no more experience than I have in regard to being boss; politics, as I see it. We have 8 carpenters where I work. These men are supposed to be skilled men, but only three of them are. Two are garage men, 1 is a farmer, and 2 are laborers, all getting $1.20 per hour; more politics. Some families over here have two members working in the park C.W.A. 24 hours a week and they also get coke from the welfare and a lot of clothing, and so forth. I asked a foreman for some firewood to take home, and he said "no." But it seems that they get all the wood they need for two or three stoves. The C.W.A. men have to saw it and put it in sheds for them. I don't think it's fair, do you? I would name a lot more things, but maybe this is enough for one time. It seems that if everybody got the same pay—50 cents per hour, which is good for these times—they would be better satisfied and the money would go farther. I agree we have to have a couple of foremen, but why 10 or 15 on one project? A lot of the boys would work on here as carpenters for 50 cents per hour if they wouldn't pay them any more. One man I know of quit Booth & Flynn, bridge contractors. He was getting $1 per hour as a pile driver and gets $1.20 here. The head of the town here is surely playing politics.

I am a war veteran, married, and have two children. That's why I am writing you all this and asking if you could do anything to have everybody paid the same, 50 cents per hour outside of foremen, and the money would go farther; still the work could get done. Today C.W.A. men are filling the bosses' icehouses. Free rent, free wood, free ice. Is it fair? Please give me an answer to this in a few days.

Yours very truly,

——— ———.

This letter suggests a thought which should be borne in mind and it comes from a former American soldier who has three dependents. The situation as this man has outlined it is not an American one. The real and final objective of the present administration is the turning of the wheels of industry. Purchasing power of the individual is the factor which will make this possible and only through the increase in industry will we be able to absorb the C.W.A. worker and the unemployed.

Above everything else, the C.W.A. program must be fairly handled by the Government. It is our last resort to defeat the depression and, to my mind, presents the most serious question confronting the present administration. The funds indirectly are provided the Government through taxes affecting millions of our citizens who are striving to keep their homes; and if we fail to administer properly, the Government and administration will break faith with its people, and, furthermore, it cannot go on forever.

Mr. MONAGHAN of Montana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I shall not vote against this measure, but I wish to protest the manner in which it was considered. I believe that the great and high purpose of the bill is the continuance of that relief and emergency employment which so nobly has been set afoot by our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt. The wisdom of that I shall not question—in fact, I shall give every ounce of my energy and my strongest support to any measure which will contribute to giving work to the jobless people of our country who are unwillingly unemployed.

There is only one regret that I have thus far with the program that has been initiated by the administration, and that is the failure to crack down, so to speak, upon industry and compel such a reduction of the hours of labor and such an increase in wages as will really guarantee an adequate prosperity to our country. I have introduced into the United States Congress H.R. 7144, which I deem one of the necessary steps looking to the promotion of work for the unemployed by the retirement of those who in decency and justice should be retired at a reasonable age, with a reasonable sum to provide for their future subsistence.

But, Mr. Speaker, I affirm what my colleague and good friend from New York, Congressman BOYLAN, has said—that there is a vicious provision in this bill which takes away from the C.W.A. workers any expectation of compensation in the event of injury. This does not become the Government of the United States. I had an amendment prepared to this bill which would have eliminated this vicious feature, but under the gag rule which was propounded in this House by those who lacked the foresight to see that they were endangering one of the finest principles of Government—promotion of general welfare—I was unable to present it. It grieves me to see the Federal Government take a backward step on this very worthy proposal of adequate compensatory legislation for workingmen. While a member of my State legislature, I stood alone in an endeavor to promote the interests of the workingman and better the workingman's compensation act of Montana.

Further, it was my desire to present an amendment making this bill provide for twice or thrice the amount carried for the C.W.A. provision. As long as the Government of the United States does not compel industry to put men back to work, its own duty is to provide that every unemployed man receive a job.

I shall, therefore, with mingled emotions of joy and grief, cast my vote for this measure. Grief, because it not only strikes at a very fundamental principle of justice—compensation for the injured, no matter where they may be injured—but in addition to that, because the amount of the appropriation is inadequate. I vote for the measure, therefore, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, believing that a crust of bread is better than no bread at all, but with the hope that we may pass in the future in this House adequate legislation that will compel industry itself in one way or another to correct this unemployment problem. Industry benefited in good times by the laboring man, and now if it must take a loss, then it should take that loss willingly that proud American citizens may not be reduced to charity and public relief. Let us pass, during this session of Congress, a 30-hour week, an old-age pension, and the remonetization of silver; let us give the American people a fair, a square new deal.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, Hon. Harry L. Hopkins, Civil Works Administrator, has recommended an appropriation of $950,000,000 to carry on the work of the C.W.A.

It gives me a great deal of pleasure to vote for this measure, but personally I should have liked to have seen it raised to $2,000,000,000 in place of $950,000,000. Passage of this appropriation by Congress will mean that the President has taken another step in keeping his faith with the American people, that our people who are in need shall not starve.

Moneys now available for C.W.A. will be exhausted February 10; therefore, it is necessary that this measure be passed at once so that relief and employment may continue uninterrupted throughout the country. I think that it would be a national calamity if this relief were not continued, because some of the finest men and women in the United States are victims of the depression and are on the C.W.A. rolls because they are willing to work to earn their livelihood. You will find on the rolls the once rich man and the afflicted working side by side. You will find on the rolls men and women who once held down responsible positions, but who, because of the depression, have been forced into idleness and are now glad to find honorable work to do and take that offered by the C.W.A.

Funds expended so far but which now are exhausted have brought joy and happiness to the widow and her orphan and all classes of people in this Nation regardless of color, creed, and nationality because work has been created. Therefore, I say again, that it would be a national calamity if our American citizens and their families should not receive the proper food, care, and employment at this time. The only direct remedy for unemployment is employment, and this is what the C.W.A. does. Another fine feature of the C.W.A. development is that it pays off every week. C.W.A. workers do not hoard their money or invest it in unnecessary enterprises; he hurries to distribute it among the grocer, the butcher, clothier, and other business men with whom he deals and the creditor whom he owes. Reviving business always means more revenue for the Government and better times for all, and that is what the C.W.A. has been doing.

This Congress cannot afford to drop this undertaking now of pulling our people out of the depression if we are not to return to the dark days of last March when banks were crashing on all sides, smokestacks were smokeless, factories idle and "No help wanted" signs greeted applicants for jobs at every turn.

There are hundreds of people in my district, in the large cities of Gary, Hammond, East Chicago (Ind.) Harbor, and Whiting, Ind., who have renewed hope and courage since the C.W.A. gave them work. You can imagine the jubilant feelings of a father who brings home on a Saturday night for the first time in months and, yes, years, his pay of $12 or $14 that he has worked for and earned as an employee of the C.W.A.

Hundreds of instances of this kind have happened in my district and in a great many cases it is the first money that the family could call their own in years. I made numerous speeches in my district before I came to Washington to attend the Seventy-third session. In these speeches I declared I would support all appropriations for the continuance of this work because I believe that this work should be continued for the sake of humanity.

I hope that when the time comes when this money is exhausted that the wheels of industry will be turning with such speed that the ranks of unemployment will be depleted sufficiently so that there will be no need for additional appropriation. My heart beats in sympathy for the working man and woman and their family and I want to help them in every way I can. I believe that my support of this measure is a help to the working class of people of my district, because coming from the working class I know something of their problems and their plight.

Before this session ends I hope I will have the pleasure of voting for a measure that is designed to guarantee the principal on Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds. I have been informed on reliable authority that there are prospects of such a bill being introduced and sentiment favorable to passage. I hope that is true because it will be a distinct aid to the people of my district. A bill of this type will save the depressed home owner from $300 to $600 which is now being lost to those who are having their homes refinanced because of the condition of the bond market. Until reports were current that a bill of this nature was to be presented to Congress H.O.L.C. bonds were being quoted in the low 80's. Publication of reports gave impetus to these bonds and today these bonds are listed as selling in the high 90's.

I am sure that if Congress does not pass some law to guarantee the principal on these Government-guaranteed interest-bearing bonds that they will again sink to the low 80's and cause great loss to the humble mortgagor who is striving to pay off his debt on his little home.

The reason the H.O.L.C. Act was designed and passed was to save the small home for the owner. Under present conditions, a loss of several hundred dollars is suffered by him because of the refusal of the mortgagor to accept the bonds which the Government does not guarantee the principal of but only the interest.

I believe that a continuation of the C.W.A. appropriation and adequate appropriation to guarantee the principal on home-loan bonds will do more than anything else at this time to inspire the people of this country and to renew their hope and courage that their great leader and Members of this Congress are striving to do their utmost to break the depression, reduce the ranks of the unemployed, and bring joy and sunshine into every home in this land; and you may rest assured that I, as the Representative of the First District of Indiana, will continue to fight for every man, woman, and child in my district.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, the only reason that can be given for the vast expenditures we have been appropriating for is that it is for the relief of the unemployed, and, as it is money that will at a later date have to be repaid by the taxpayer, great care should be taken by the various departments entrusted with its disbursement that it should not be used to promote enterprises that will at a later date cause more unemployment and defeat the purpose which the people expect to see achieved when they willingly acquiesce in the expenditures of the necessary funds to accomplish the purpose.

It is to be hoped that the present appropriation to the C.W.A. is only a stopgap to the time when the allotments made by the P.W.A. are actively under way.

This report shows that at present about 18,000 men are at work on the various projects, but that when all of the work is underway there will be sufficient to give actual work to approximately 255,000 men for 1 year, using 30 hours per week as a basis.

The loans that are to be used for new construction by the railroads will give many more men work, probably a greater percentage than in the other work provided for, unless, of course, the man hours are included in the estimates. There may be also many hours of work not estimated for in supplies and material of different kinds that will be used in completing these proposed developments.

Careful study should be given these enterprises so that while some of the proposals may be most efficient, and under ordinary circumstances extremely desirable, they do not defeat the purpose of all this expenditure.

I am informed, for instance, that a power plant was erected in Kentucky burning oil when the town is surrounded by coal fields, and that another is contemplated at Carbondale, Ill., again in the coal fields. It is a question whether these plants so located are even efficient, but both of them will displace labor; even at the academy at Annapolis an oil plant is being installed, throwing about 40 men out of employment.

Such proposals as these should have no place in our work to bring back employment to those who need it.

The most vicious of these propositions, and the one that will react in the future, is the nontaxed propositions. At the rate we are building Government projects which will be tax free and are competitive to present private operations, it will become a question in the future as to how the balance of the public on the outside will be able to bear the burden placed upon them to meet the Government's demands. Many will fail, and eventually the only solvent business in the country will be the Government itself, and it will be obliged to perform all necessary forms of endeavor with the individualism and personal liberty of which our America was so proudly submerged.

Let us look into one of these projects and see if they generate unemployment. Take the St. Lawrence seaway—for every 1,000,000 horsepower developed here 3,000,000 tons of coal will be displaced. Canada is now our best customer for exported coal, so we could readily estimate that our loss will be twice as great and 6,000 miners and their families will be permanently added to the unemployed.

Further than this, when this canal is open the market for the Northwest will be open to foreign anthracite and bituminous coal, also destructive to our home people when we consider the labor involved.

Money used in such projects defeat their own purpose and add greatly to the unstability of our institutions, causing hesitation in the advancement of many private projects which today, if placed in progress, would go far in assisting our recovery.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and my pleasure to support the Federal Emergency Relief Act and the C.W.A. appropriation. It is true that $950,000,000 is a lot of money. But when one considers that the income of the Nation in 1928 was estimated at $90,000,000,000 and in 1932 the estimates run as low as $37,000,000,000, it is readily seen that someone needs help. A great part of that loss of $53,000,000,000 was by labor and the farmer.

These two great groups must be rehabilitated. There can be no prosperity in this country until they are revived. I have consistently and regularly, all the time I have been in Congress, and before that, urged public works and relief as the only sure relief from this terrible calamity and panic. In November 1930 in an address I urged this.

Several years ago when England was facing a crisis, when millions were unemployed, she started the outright dole. We have adopted something much better, more humane. Self-respecting men and women desire work. They want something to do. These Civil Works projects can and all should be projects of some value and something needed.

But suppose part of it is lost? We are then no worse off than if used as an out-and-out dole. However, it is not all lost, as most of the money is being spent for useful projects.

What do we do in calamity of war? In case of war, we leave nothing undone to win. We spend by the billion—not one billion, but two, five, ten, twenty, even $30,000,000,000 to win. And if it becomes necessary to go to war, we should spend any sum needed in order to win. Let us reverse the picture. In war the money is all spent for destructive purposes. Every dollar is wasted, destroyed—vessels sunk, homes wrecked, ammunition burned, lives lost—but we do not hesitate to spend until we win. Today we are in a dilemma equal to war. Let us spend until we win. The money spent now is to bring prosperity—not to destroy it. It is to build roads—not to destroy them. It is to build houses—not to dynamite them. It is to build ships—not to sink them. It is to take young manhood from the ranks of the unemployed, where their lives are being wrecked in idleness and, in their tender age, thrown open to vice and crime—and, like the old adage, "Idleness is the devil's workshop"—and placing them in C.C.C. camps, C.W.A., and making men of wrecks instead of making wrecks of men.

I am glad to support this measure. In my opinion, it should have called for a half billion dollars more for the President to have under his control in event it would be needed. I should like to see the Public Works, Civil Works, and the Federal building program broadened until every man in need of employment and who wanted to work could find employment. Our first real prosperity will not be had until then.

In every great crisis in our country a leader of outstanding proportions has risen. This country, running true to form, has today its greatest leader—a progressive, a humanitarian, and a man who sympthizes with his fellow men. There are two types of men in public life—a leader and a boss. President Roosevelt is a most outstanding leader. He has the pulse beat of the Nation at hand; the country is behind him. The Congress is glad to follow him.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, the people of my district, together with the great masses of the population of the country, are awaiting eagerly the enactment of this law. It will mean a great deal to them. It will continue the program of civil works which brought the first ray of sunshine to so many of our unemployed.

Not only that, it should be the means of restoring the 30-hour week at the original rate of wage on Civil Work projects. The employment which these projects have given to our people must be continued on that basis as long as is necessary. And the scope of the work ought to be broadened so as to benefit more the women and white collar workers of the country. The appropriation of $950,000,000, which this bill raises, will be sufficient to do all these things and provide more adequate relief well into the year. We can, if necessary, appropriate additional sums before this session of Congress is ended to carry on further.

Of course, the program, to be effective, must provide for a 30-hour week and give our people the wages originally established. Otherwise the Civil Works objective will fail of its purpose. The 30-hour week must be restored upon the passage of this bill. Only in this way shall all persons engaged in this work receive just and reasonable minimum wages. A shorter week will not suffice.

And there should be no discrimination in the future. A recent order of the Federal Relief Administrator reduced the hours of work. In so doing it discriminated against residents of the smaller communities. It cut the hours of those living in places of less than 2,500 population to 16 hours per week, while those residing in towns of over 2,500 population were reduced to only 24 hours per week. In other words, the former were cut down to a 2-day week; the latter were reduced to a 3-day week. After it was issued, the order was modified so as to give at least a 30-hour week to those in urban sections, but a 5-day week for all is essential if the purposes of the program are to be achieved. This bill is intended to bring back the 30-hour week and with it the continuance of the humane program.

The welfare of the unemployed should be our grave concern. We are dependent upon them for the future prosperity of the Nation. The old thought that prosperity trickles down from the top has been exploded. I have always maintained, and still believe, that the man and woman at the bottom are the props that sustain prosperity. Prosperity comes from them. They have built up the insurance companies, the building and loan associations, the banks, and our other institutions; they have made possible the growth and advancement of our industries and other enterprises. They have accomplished these things with their dimes, quarters, and dollars. Without them, all is at a standstill. We cannot prosper while they are distressed. According to the figures acquired by me, 75 percent of the people of working age are still employed in the usual occupations. And, yet, they must await, as is seen, the restoration of work to the remaining 25 percent before a proper balance is reached. Until such time as the latter are gainfully employed, we shall not have fully recovered from the catastrophe of the depression.

Heartily in accord with this program, which affords work not otherwise obtainable, I record myself in favor of the bill and advocate continuance of the Civil Works until such time as those engaged in it shall find other employment.

But, in the distribution of the work, political favoritism should play no part, and all work should be allotted on a fair and equitable basis, with a view to giving employment to those who need it, regardless of their political creed. The person in charge of each agency throughout the country should command the confidence and respect of his community and be above suspicion of favoritism or partisanship. And it is not enough for the Federal Relief Administrator to promulgate such a policy; he must enforce it.

Mr. IMHOFF. Mr. Speaker, our great country in its short life has passed through some great crises. Soon after the United States Government was established it passed through what Mr. Fiske has pleased to call "the critical period." At this time our Nation had no standing among the other nations of the world, either as to stability of government or financial credit; but through the influence and far-sightedness of Alexander Hamilton, the great Secretary of the Treasury, more than any other man, our Government was placed upon the high road to prosperity and to recognition, standing, and credit among the nations of the world.

In 1861 we reached another great crisis, the crisis of civil war—a struggle that had been coming on for years and in which brother was matched against brother, and father against son. It was a conflict testing whether this Nation could long endure. Up to this time it was the greatest test to which our country had been subjected, and the very Government was rocked to its foundation. However, every great cause produces its own leader, and up from the ranks of the sons of the soil came the Great Emancipator, Abraham Lincoln, who led this Nation through the darkness and turmoil of civil war to the sunshine of a new day, a united and a greater Nation.

On the 4th day of March 1933, a new administration came into being under the most distressing circumstances that ever faced a new President. During the preceding 3 years the whole financial and industrial fabric of the country had gone to wrack and ruin. Practically every bank in the United States was closed. There was no such thing as credit. Some 13,000,000 men were walking the streets in idleness, which meant that their families, representing from 30 to 40 millions of women and children, were suffering for the very necessities of life. Rumblings of revolution were heard, and people everywhere were beginning to doubt the very integrity of the Government of the United States. It was in such a setting that the executive department of this great Nation was taken over by Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. Speaker, what has been the result of his stewardship? Almost overnight there was a change in the outlook of the American people. From dismay and despair they began to have hope. Within a few short weeks smoke began to pour out from thousands of smokestacks and chimneys that had been only silent sentinels of the air for 3 long years.

In accordance with his campaign promises, and under his leadership, Congress has enacted into law the most momentous and far-reaching remedial legislation ever enacted by any Congress; and as a result Franklin D. Roosevelt, like a plumed knight, is leading us steadily and surely back to prosperity with the confidence and trust of the people of all classes and parties such as has been given to no President since the time of Washington.

In my opinion, one of the most humane and beneficial acts of this administration has been the formation of the Civil Works Administration. This work has reached into every nook and corner of the United States, and has driven the wolf from the door of over 4,000,000 homes. In my district in Ohio over 5,000 people have received employment through this agency. Most of these people had hardly had a day's work in 3 years up to the time they were given the C.W.A. work; and as they were for the most part heads of families, the work under the C.W.A. meant the very necessities of life to 20,000 women and children. Since the funds allotted to this work under the last appropriation will be exhausted early in February, the President has asked that another appropriation be made by Congress to carry on this work. I wish to state here and now that I am in hearty accord with the President's request. It is unthinkable that this work should stop at this time. I am in favor of such an allotment for this work as will carry it on until May 1, or such time as the wheels of industry will have absorbed those to whom this work has been extended.

CROP PRODUCTION AND HARVESTING LOANS

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1975) to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1934, and for other purposes, with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk, the effect of which is to strike out the Senate bill and insert the House bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, hereinafter in this act referred to as the "Governor", is hereby authorized to make loans to farmers during the year 1934 for crop production, planting, fallowing, and cultivation and, to the extent of not exceeding $1,000,000, for feed for livestock in drought- and storm-stricken areas.

SEC. 2 (a) A first lien on all crops growing or to be planted or grown or harvested during the year 1934, or on livestock, shall be required as security for any such loan: Provided, however, That in the case of a loan for the purpose of summer fallowing or the production of winter wheat, a first lien, or an agreement to give a first lien, on crops to be harvested in 1935 may, in the discretion of the Governor, be deemed sufficient security. Except as hereinafter provided, such loans shall be made through such agencies, upon such terms and conditions, and subject to such regulations as the Governor shall prescribe. Every borrower shall be required to pay all recording, notarization, and other legal fees (including the cost of lien certificates furnished by county recorders and similar public officials) incurred in connection with his loan; and to pay an inspection and field supervision fee of 50 cents which may be deducted from the proceeds of his loan. Loans made pursuant to the provisions of this act shall bear interest at the rate of not to exceed 6 percent per annum. For the purpose of collecting loans made under this act and under prior acts of the same general character, the Governor may use the facilities and services of production credit corporations, production credit associations, regional agricultural credit corporations, and other institutions operating under the jurisdiction and supervision of the Farm Credit Administration or of any officer or officers thereof and may pay for such services and the use of such facilities from the funds made available under section 5 hereof for the payment of necessary administrative expenses; and such institutions are hereby expressly empowered to enter into agreements with the Governor for such purposes.

(b) The aggregate amount of loans made under this act to any borrower shall not exceed $250: Provided, however, That in any area certified by the President of the United States to the Governor as a distressed emergency area, the Governor may make loans without regard to this limitation, under such regulations as he may prescribe therefor.

(c) No loan shall be made under this act to any applicant who shall not have first established to the satisfaction of the proper officer or employee of the Farm Credit Administration, under such regulations as the Governor may prescribe, (1) that such applicant is unable to procure from a production credit association or from a private lending institution, on a fair basis and at a reasonable rate of interest, a loan in an amount reasonably adequate to meet his needs for the purposes for which loans may be made under this act; and (2) that such applicant is cooperating directly in the crop production control program of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration or is not proposing to increase his 1934 production of basic agricultural commodities in a manner detrimental to the success of such program.

SEC. 3. (a) The moneys authorized to be loaned by the Governor under this act are declared to be impressed with a trust to accomplish the purposes provided for by this act, namely, the production, planting, fallowing, cultivation of crops, and feed for farm livestock, which trust shall continue until the moneys loaned pursuant to this act have been used for the purposes contemplated by this act, and it shall be unlawful for any person to make any material false representation for the purpose of obtaining any loan or to assist in obtaining such loan or to dispose of or assist in disposing of any crops given as security for any loan made under authority of this act, except for the account of the Governor and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to charge a fee for the purpose of preparing or assisting in the preparation of any papers of an applicant for a loan under the provisions of this act.

(c) Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

SEC. 4. The Governor is authorized to procure a fidelity bond covering all employees directly engaged in adminstering the provisions of this act, and to pay the premiums therefor from the funds made available under section 5 of this act for the payment of necessary administrative expenses. The Governor shall have power, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, to employ and fix the compensation and duties of such agents, officers, and employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; but the compensation of such officers and employees shall correspond, so far as may be practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $35,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act. Any moneys so appropriated, and all collections of both principal and interest on loans made under this act, may be used by the Governor for all necessary administrative expenses in carrying out the provisions of this act and in collecting outstanding balances on crop production, seed and feed loans made under the act entitled "An act to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1933, and for other purposes", approved February 4, 1933, or under prior legislation of the same general character.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman a member of the committee?

Mr. HOPE. I am.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HOPE. I am not opposed to the bill; no.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands a second.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY].

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Agriculture in conducting hearings on this bill to provide loans to farmers for crop production during the year 1934, and for other purposes, found there was substantial evidence justifying such legislation at this time. Therefore we have reported favorably the bill, H.R. 7521, which carries an authorization for an appropriation of $35,000,000 to be used for the purpose of crop production for the year 1934 and for the feeding of livestock up to $1,000,000.

There is a limitation in the bill whereby an individual loan is not to exceed $250.

There is a further limitation in the measure whereby when the applicant makes application for a loan, using the machinery that has already been set up by the Farm Credit Administration, he will have to show that he is unable to secure an adequate loan on reasonable terms from any of the production credit associations which are being set up throughout the country. We, as a committee, feel these associations will be permanent, serve a good purpose, and prove of lasting benefit while this, of course, is a temporary measure. The applicant must further show that he cannot secure an adequate loan from one of these institutions, and also that he cannot secure a loan from any private lending institution.

There is another limitation provided, that the applicant must also show that he is cooperating with the Government in the reduction program. The rate of interest carried in this bill is not to exceed 6 percent.

The need is a substantial one for the reason that the production association set up to be a permanent organization to loan money to the farmers has not reached the class of farmers that was not able to qualify and to receive the benefits from that organization that we hoped would be granted by the more permanent institution.

We know that this is going to supply a great and urgent need. We know that it will supply a purpose that the permanent organization has not been able to supply to date, and therefore I feel that there will be no opposition to it. Let us unite and pass this bill and perfect it in conference. It extends aid where aid is needed.

There was some discussion as to whether or not thirty-five million would be sufficient, and whether or not the amount should not be in excess of $250 loaned to an individual. The decision of the committee was that $35,000,000 would do the job; that was the information given us by the experts who made the calculation, and that $250 will be the maximum loaned to individuals. If the sum of $250 should be raised, the general appropriation should be more than $35,000,000. I believe in conference we will agree on $40,000,000.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield gladly to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. COX. If crop production associations are as liberal as hoped for, does not it occur to the gentleman that this bill is prescribing conditions that will make it practically impossible for farmers to borrow?

Mr. DOXEY. If they need it, it will be there. The farmer should be granted the loan if he cannot obtain it elsewhere. We here can only pass laws; they are administered by another department of the Government. Of course the success or failure of a law largely depends upon how it is administered.

Mr. COX. In the opinion of the gentleman and his committee, is the crop production association quite adjusted to the needs of the most needy borrowers?

Mr. DOXEY. The gentleman will have to take into consideration that these are in an embryo state. Most of the associations have just been set up, and naturally it will take quite some time for them to function properly. The average farmer now has to begin making his preparations for his farming activities this year. He needs help now. To my mind a great number of farmers who need help now will not likely be able to give the security required to obtain a loan from these newly organized production credit associations. I prepared, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture, the report on this bill which is before you, and I know my committee feels that these loans provided by this fund will reach worthy and deserving farmers whose urgent needs would not likely be met otherwise. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that this bill is brought up under suspension of the rules whereby we are not able to offer amendments. I want to call the attention of the Membership of the House to what I consider to be a very unfair way in which the livestock and dairy industry has been brought under feed and seed bills.

During 1933, $57,000,000 was loaned to the farmers of the country in the form of seed and feed loans. The bills that have been enacted in the past and this bill provide that in order to obtain a loan the farmer must give a first lien on his crop, if he is getting a seed loan and a first lien on his livestock if he is getting a feed loan.

During the last year, out of the $57,000,000 loaned to farmers of this country, only $250,000, only one quarter of a million dollars, was loaned for feed loans.

Now, in the dairy section of the country during the last 4 years, particularly in the State of Wisconsin, a great dairy State, the farmers suffered on account of the drought. The farmers were unable to raise enough feed for their livestock. They were in need of loans. But, because of the provisions of the bill, which provided that the farmer should give a first lien on his cattle, only a very few have been able to obtain a loan on their livestock, and those few either had no existing mortgage on their cattle or they were successful in obtaining waivers from the holders of the chattel mortgages.

Only one quarter of a million out of $57,000,000 was loaned during the last year for feed for livestock. When we consider that the livestock and dairy industry comprises more than half of all of the agricultural interests in the entire United States, it seems to me they are getting a shabby deal out of this entire situation.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman is pointing out that those who need this aid most sorely are ineligible to receive it?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is exactly correct. We find that in those sections that produce crops, such as cotton and wheat, the farmers have something in the spring of the year that is not encumbered. They never carry over a mortgage on a crop from one year to another. So that in the spring they can get help by mortgaging their crop, or they can sign an agreement that they will mortgage their crop, so that they are able to get help. But the dairy industry and the cattle and hog industry, the livestock industry generally, have already had their livestock mortgaged, which is a part of their capital investment, just as much as the land that is used in growing wheat is a part of the capital investment. Therefore they are ineligible for these loans. It is true in those sections they have been able to obtain some loans but not on their livestock. There are vast sections in the Middle West that have been hit by the drought—sections that are used for the purpose of raising livestock and in the dairy industry that are sorely in need of aid. I wish I had an opportunity to offer an amendment to this bill, because I believe the justice of the situation would appeal to the Membership of this House, and I believe this House would make provision so that it would not be necessary that a first lien be given to secure a feed loan, but rather a secondary lien should be given to the Government to secure the loans for feed purposes.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Is there not an additional reason why there should be such an amendment? Is it not a fact that the agricultural relief program, the A.A.A., have raised the feed bills for the dairymen in your State and in my State? Is it not a fact that it has also raised the feed bill for the poultry raisers?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is true. They have found it necessary to buy feed and give feed to the farmers in the various sections.

Mr. FISH. Is that not an additional reason why there should be an amendment to this bill either in the House or in the Senate?

Mr. BOILEAU. I believe the gentleman is absolutely correct. It shows the dire need for such relief among the livestock and dairy people of the country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOYLAN). The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, each year for the last 3 years, I have offered a measure to continue the crop-production loans. In my section of North Carolina it has proven most popular, and has been more appreciated than any other form of Government loans. The necessity for it this year is just as great as ever. Last year we would have been unable to have started a crop had not this splendid measure been enacted. The administration has set up these crop-production credit corporations, but they will not reach the man most in need, for a man is required to give them practically all the security he has. The bill as reported by the Committee on Agriculture has thrown around it all of the necessary safeguards, and before a man can obtain a loan he must be cooperating with the reduction campaign now going on.

The gentleman from New York, the distinguished minority leader, following his usual course on this particular measure, says he is against it. With all his splendid understanding of legislative problems, he has never known anything about this measure, does not know anything about it, and does not want to know anything about it.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. Perhaps the gentleman could give me some instruction I ought to have. I have understood the policy of the present administration to be to decrease production. We have plowed up a great many million acres of land. If the gentleman will tell me what is the philosophy and what is the reason for loaning money to plant more acres, and then later in the season spending more money to plow up those acres, I should like to have him tell me.

Mr. WARREN. I have just stated to the gentleman that before a farmer can obtain a loan under the proposed bill, he must have first exhausted all other means to get it.

Mr. SNELL. He must declare himself bankrupt before he can get it?

Mr. WARREN. Second, he must show he is cooperating with the crop production control program of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has not answered my question. I want to know what the policy of the administration is going to be this year. Is it going to be to decrease production or to increase it?

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman knows that it proposes to decrease it.

Mr. SNELL. No; I do not. I want to get the information.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman knows it is going to be decreased.

Mr. SNELL. I honestly cannot understand the reason why we should loan money to increase crop production and then later in the season spend more money to plow up that same crop production.

Mr. WARREN. I assure the gentleman that these loans are not for the purpose of increasing production. It is to help the man who cannot get funds anywhere else to plant his crop.

Mr. SNELL. Will that not increase production?

Mr. WARREN. No; it will not, because they cannot loan money to anybody who is going to increase production.

Mr. SNELL. But if none of those men put in crops, you would not have to pay for so many acres to plow in. Is that not a fact?

Mr. WARREN. I do not at all agree with the gentleman. This is for the farmer who is unable to get funds from any other source.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman and I cannot agree on that policy.

Mr. WARREN. Now, something has been said about the repayment of these loans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has expired.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD the distribution and repayment of the seed loan fund of 1933, as of January 1, 1934.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. WARREN. The foregoing statement is of December 31, 1933, and does not include collateralized loans. Since January 1, 1934, there has been a large repayment, but total figures are not yet available.

The following are the collateralized loans in the several regional seed loan districts as of December 31, 1933:

Salt Lake City	$201.00
Dallas	102,657.90
Memphis	(1)
Minneapolis	(1)
St. Louis	4,137.00

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

I am in favor of this measure. Personally, I have no objection to its coming up under suspension of the rules. However, I know there are a number of gentlemen on each side of the House who did desire to offer important amendments to the measure; and, of course, they have no opportunity to do it under this plan of procedure.

I know there is a great deal of criticism of this type of loan, yet I think it can be abundantly justified as an emergency measure, which it is.

It has been said that this measure is inconsistent with the policy of reducing crop production. There may be an apparent inconsistency, but it is more apparent than real, because under the provisions of this bill and of the bill which we passed last year any farmer who secures a loan must agree to reduce his production in line with the ordered program of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

What would really happen if it were not possible to make these loans is that a considerable number of men who have been engaged in the occupation of agriculture in this country would be precluded this year from putting out a crop. The question is what would they do; where would they go, with 10,000,000 unemployed in this country already? Where would these men whose only occupation is agriculture go if they are unable to finance the putting out of a crop?

The bill specifically provides that no one is eligible to secure a loan unless he has exhausted every other opportunity of financing his farming operations. He must show that he cannot get the money from private credit sources. He must show that he has applied for a loan to a local production credit corporation and that he has not been able to qualify. Having made this showing, having proven that he is unable to finance his farming operations in any other way, he is eligible for a loan of this kind.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOYLAN). Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. In the past we have had some trouble getting loans where crops have been planted in one calendar year and harvested in the next calendar year. Take, for instance, the strawberry crop. This crop is planted in the winter of one calendar year and harvested during the spring of the next calendar year. Are the provisions of this bill broad enough to take care of such a situation?

Mr. HOPE. There is a provision to the effect that in the case of winter wheat the crop to be harvested next year will be taken as security.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The language in the first part of section 2 reads in part:

> A first lien on all crops growing or to be planted or grown and/or harvested during the year 1934.

Mr. HOPE. I thank the gentleman for calling that language to my attention. It reads: "To be planted or grown." Undoubtedly that makes the act broad enough to apply to crops planted this year and harvested next year. I do not think there will be any question about that. In other words, a loan may be based upon the security of a crop which is planted this year, one which is grown this year, or one which is harvested this year.

[1] No collateral.

Mr. KLEBERG. I might be able to answer the question, as I brought the subject up in committee myself. Crops planted in the fall of 1934, to be harvested in the spring of 1935, would come under the provisions of this bill, falling within the language beginning in the last line of the first page. This language was inserted in the bill to take care of just such a situation.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Then the gentleman feels there would be no question about loans on crops of this character.

Mr. HOPE. I am sure there would not be.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. How many acres of cotton land have been withdrawn from cultivation at the present time?

Mr. HOPE. I do not happen to have that information.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Is it a fact that notwithstanding cotton land has been withdrawn from cultivation that the cotton crop this coming year will be normal?

Mr. HOPE. To answer the gentleman's question, I would have to possess the gift of prophecy, because that depends not only on the amount of cotton planted but also on the yield per acre.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I understand Mr. Hopkins has made such a statement.

Mr. HOPE. I certainly cannot answer the gentleman on the basis of any information that is available at this time.

May I conclude by simply saying that, despite objections heretofore made to this type of legislation, this bill will more nearly meet such objections than any heretofore considered in the House. It contains certain safeguards that have been absent from other bills.

So far as there being an emergency, it certainly exists at the present time to just as great an extent as it has ever existed; however, due to other sources of Government credit which have been made available and to the fact that large cash benefit payments have been made in sections where loans have been heavy in the past, the amount which is authorized to be loaned is less than heretofore, both as to individuals and as to the total amount which may be made available.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. How much less?

Mr. HOPE. The amount which was loaned in 1933 was $57,457,558.

Mr. SNELL. How much was paid back?

Mr. HOPE. Of this amount $38,166,399 has been repaid.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER].

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, my only objection to this bill is that it does not carry as much money as it ought to for the purpose for which it is to be used.

I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY] that this has been the best character of loan the United States Government has ever made for the purpose of aiding agriculture.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] raised the question of overproduction. The gentleman certainly does not know the purposes of this bill. This bill is designed to reach the little fellow out on a farm with one horse or one mule trying to make a living for his family. He cannot get credit from any other source. He can give a first lien on his crop and with that money get enough supplies that he and his family may enter onto a little farm and make a living. If he could not do so, where would he go? There would be no place left to him but the bread line or some of the work the Government is providing as a measure of relief.

This will relieve that situation. Another question that has been raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] is with reference to loans to the dairying interests. The gentleman wants a second mortgage on cattle used for dairy purposes. This is not the way to take care of that industry. I am ready to join the gentleman in taking care of that industry or any other agricultural industry in distress. They all need it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. In just a moment. The agency set-up as now being organized is for the loaning of money to persons who come into the organization and they subscribe for 5 percent of the stock. The purpose of this is to enable 5 percent of his money to make good any losses that might occur. This keeps the little fellow out. Say, 20 of you go into an organization of that kind. You are going to pick the people of the community who are to get into the organization where 5 percent of your capital is held up to make good someone else's losses. You are going to be careful who you take into that organization. If a certain individual is unable to pay, you are not going to vote him into your organization. The reason it becomes necessary to have this organization is to take care of the man that is in the greatest need, the man who cannot get into your organization. This man must have some relief, and this bill will give it to him.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is the very reason why I believe this bill should be liberal enough to take care of the livestock and dairy farmers who are in such bad condition. This bill is supposed to be liberal. That is the reason we are passing the bill.

Mr. GLOVER. With a limited sum of $35,000,000 spread out over that industry, it would do very little good and would thwart the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. Last year we got one half of 1 percent. We hope this bill will pass without a dissenting vote.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 7521, providing for crop-production loans, again brings to our attention the financing of those engaged in producing the food and clothing for our people. It is generally admitted that private lending agencies are no longer able or willing to supply the farmers with necessary funds. It may be accepted as a fact that these private lending agencies will not return to the field and again supply the necessary cash to allow the farmer to carry on soon enough to save the situation. The fruit producer, the wheat, corn, cattle, and dairy man, if he must have cash, must depend upon some of the Government lending agencies. The holders of private money are too timid to finance farmers. They have been too seriously hurt again to return to this lending field. It is assumed by some that the Government is accepting this function temporarily, that the producer will soon have accumulated sufficient surplus so he will not be obliged to borrow. This is a vain hope, for there is no profit for most of the producers today, and if one does, by any peculiar chance, accumulate a profit, he will abandon the struggle on the farm, move to some city or village, and often run for office. He may even aspire to a seat in Congress. We may far better face the facts and admit that the present rural economic conditions are here to stay for sometime.

We must have, for our own consumption, those basic foods that can be produced only by the farmers, from the soil, and those same producers must have some place where they can go to secure the necessary financial credit to make production possible. The only place now is some one of the governmental lending agencies. Legislation, already passed, has moved the Government into this field of activity.

AMOUNT INADEQUATE

H.R. 7521 provides for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting for the year 1934 only. It is a mere makeshift. The loan to a producer is limited to $250, totally insufficient as working capital to be of much value to any real producer. Two years ago the limit was $400, last year $300, now $250, and still the cost of production has increased each year. I submit that this is most unfair treatment, increasing expenses largely through legislation, and at the same time arbitrarily decreasing available cash.

Last year the Government made available for this same purpose $57,000,000, this year $35,000,000. Pretty shabby treatment for those who often work 12 to 14 hours, that the rest can eat.

PRODUCTION CREDIT ASSOCIATIONS

I am full well aware of the effort to create production-credit associations in various localities all over the United States to take over the lending activities. There are now over 500 of these organized and 700 more contemplated. The theory behind these production-credit associations is that the producer must cooperate whether he wishes to do so or not; and he is compelled by law to guarantee his neighbor's note for at least 5 percent of his own loan.

PRESENT RATE EXTORTIONATE

There is no word more overworked today than cooperation, and many wrongs and injustices are being perpetrated under the mantle of cooperation. The farmer is, necessarily, an individualist. He should be allowed to borrow the funds necessary to enable him to produce without first taking 5 percent out of his often inadequate loan and being compelled to pay interest at 6 percent upon the whole, including the 5 percent exacted to help his neighbors.

No one familiar with the facts can for a moment contend that the borrowers will ever see all of the 5 percent exacted by a Shylock government. The borrower of $100 through any of the production-credit associations will receive only $95 and will pay interest on $100 and expenses. Should the producer be fortunate and be able to pay off the loan at the end of 1 year, he will often find that this extension of necessary credit by the Government has cost him as much as 10-percent interest. No farmer can pay such a rate of interest and no other beneficiary of governmental lending agencies is expected to do so. As I have often stated in this Well, interest, high interest, far beyond the earning power of money, is one of the major rocks upon which this Government is foundering. Interest can be regulated by law, and it should be fixed at an amount not exceeding 2 percent.

PRESENT SYSTEM EXPENSIVE AND WASTEFUL

The production-credit lending organizations are sure to result in very heavy losses to the Government and at the same time prove to be very oppressive to the producer. Consider the local unit composed of 10 borrowers in which one really conscientious borrower objects to his neighbor's application as too large or inadequately secured. What will then happen to the application of the conscientious borrower? Will he get his property fairly appraised by his neighbor whose loan he questioned? Farmers are human beings, with all the human frailties. The local group will be compelled to stand together, scratching each others' backs; applications all approved, security often not sufficient. Each knowing that the 5 percent exacted by the Government is lost, they will naturally all proceed to help each other to secure from the Government the largest amount possible.

This will demand the closest possible supervision and examination upon the part of the intermediate credit bank, the institution which will be called upon to rediscount the notes given by the borrowers. A foolish, cumbersome, expensive system. The men and women of America who are making the earth yield food are entitled to far more liberal treatment at the hands of this Government. The hard-working producers are deserving of a system which offers some hope and some chance of success.

Farm loans should be made individually and upon individual responsibility, and these men who really govern America should be ashamed to take 5 percent of the worker's total capital beyond interest and expenses. It can be truly said that under the present set-up the Government is as cold-blooded and heartless as any shylock of old.

LOCAL LENDING AGENCIES NEEDED

There should be established in every large county, or in at least every group of two or three smaller counties, an agency of the intermediate-credit bank. That agency should be supplied with equipment, appraisers, and inspectors locally available for quick action. When an application is made for a loan to summer-fallow land for grain, or to provide money to carry a dairy, sheep, fruit, or other property, the examination should be made at once, the application approved, modified, or disapproved all within a week, then forwarded to the intermediate-credit bank. If that institution was properly organized and operating, it could have a further confirming inspection made and the applicant could know within 10 days whether he could have the loan or not. At least, there should never be the delay we complain of at present. No more than 30 days should elapse from the date of the application to its final approval or disapproval. Numerous cases are reported in which applications were made for money to summer-fallow land in March and granted in July, when it was too late to do the work. Many applications for loans for spraying fruit trees have been approved long after the damage has been done by the insects, and the trees ruined. During the last year those desiring seed loans in Oregon and Washington were obliged to apply at an office at Minneapolis, nearly 2,000 miles away. The long-suffering farmers after suffering all sorts of inexcusable delays and inspections by unsympathetic and uninformed appraisers are certainly losing their morale. Their feeling of respect and love for government is being changed to a state of mind which will furnish fertile soil for bolshevic thoughts and ideas.

These local lending agencies which I propose to establish should be compelled to keep close watch over every loan in their territories. When the fruit or grain is harvested the local agent should be on hand to see that the Government loan is protected by surrender of the proceeds of sales or warehouse receipts for the property mortgaged. Should the loan be on livestock, then even greater care should be exercised, animals should be frequently seen and counted by the agent or hired inspectors, feed conditions should be watched with scrupulous care, and provisions made for winter.

Upon final clean up it will be found that millions have been lost by the intermediate-credit banks as well as by the rediscount companies in careless, worthless, sometimes dishonest inspection and supervision. Too many miles have often intervened between the intermediate-credit bank and the scene of the operation for which the loan was made. This has made possible all sorts of mistakes and sometimes most devious practices.

INSPECTORS AND APPRAISERS IMPORTANT

The regional agent should be appointed and paid by the intermediate-credit bank. Inspectors and appraisers should be appointed and paid the same way. They should be thoroughly acquainted with the territory they serve and should be men who are trusted and respected by the farmers with whom they deal. What a wrong to appoint appraisers from Washington where the appointing power cannot even know a fraction of those employed. Some appraisers are competent and trustworthy, but some of those now employed do not know the difference between a Jersey cow and a Holstein, and, as far as values are concerned, are as ignorant as a South Sea Islander would be.

FARMER-CONTROL NEEDED

It is preposterous and impossible for Washington officials to contend, as some do, that they are better fitted to select officials than are those on the ground. I have been told by those having appointing power here in Washington, that although they have never been in Oregon, they were more competent to select government officials than any resident of Oregon. Long official life in a bureau often creates contempt for the less fortunate workers. The Federal land banks should be controlled by the borrowers, the farmers, because no other group is so interested in their successful operation. They do all the work, they make the money and pay the dividends. They should be the managers of their own institutions. They are now treated as an inferior class, subject to regulation by bankers and mortgage companies, who have certainly not earned their superior rating by the Government.

LOWER INTEREST RATES NEEDED

The lowest possible interest rates should be charged on all loans made through this county Government agent, who should handle the loans made on land, stock, fruit, and loans to cooperatives. The loans on land should be on an honest 50-percent valuation, interest at 2 percent annually, with 1 percent for amortization. As loans are made, currency should be issued and that currency called in and canceled as interest and amortization are paid. Loans on personal property should be at a rate not to exceed 4 percent. The intermediate credit banks can now obtain that money at 1½ percent. Give them a profit of 1½ percent to take up all possible losses, and then charge the borrower 4 percent, allowing 1 percent for expenses.

I know full well that the producer cannot, at present prices, pay even this 4 percent, for much that he is producing is at a loss. However, we must build our system on the belief and hope that a higher price level will soon prevail. If that happy day should not come, then the proud American farmer is surely moving into peasantry. I cannot believe that this will be our fate. There must be a solution, and that solution lies in decentralization of administration, keeping governmental agencies close to the people, in unification of agencies operating in a territory, and, above all, in lending money to farmers at a rate of interest consistent with ability to pay and recognition of the fact that farmers are entitled to be numbered among the most-favored class of the Government's borrowers.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. GLOVER. There is one of these agencies in my district, at Pine Bluff, Ark., that loaned over $2,000,000 for this purpose, and they have collected back 98 percent and will collect the other 2 percent.

Mr. PIERCE. It is one of the very few in the United States.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman know what percent of loans the Government has collected all over the United States?

Mr. PIERCE. The loss has been in the millions. I cannot give the exact figures.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman know what it is?

Mr. PIERCE. It has been in the millions.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. Does not the percentage of these loans repaid compare favorably with the percentage of repayment of other loans the Government has made?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to publish therein an article I wrote about 3 weeks ago for the Oregon Journal discussing Federal land banks. The gentleman will then see what I think of the situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The article referred to follows:

[From the Oregon Daily Journal, Portland, Oreg., Saturday, Jan. 20, 1934]

WHY FARM-MORTGAGE RELIEF SO LITTLE?

(Unfair appraisals and uninformed and autocratic appraisers, is one answer given here by Congressman WALTER PIERCE; also a plan devised under Wilson has been so revamped under his successors as to put all functioning into control of eastern high finance, with appraisers of reactionary leanings; and, besides, private lending concerns being dormant, the entire load has been thrown suddenly upon governmental instrumentalities unfitted as yet to do what should be done. But Mr. PIERCE looks forward to their reorganization, to the recovery of the agricultural and horticultural interests of the country. Meanwhile, the East's enormously larger vote in Congress is a lamentable obstruction.)

(By WALTER M. PIERCE, Representative in Congress from the Second District of Oregon)

Journal editorials entitled "Tell the President" have borne fruit, and I have received many letters from Oregon calling my attention to the methods and delays of the Federal land bank at Spokane.

A number of times I have read those words in letters: "Tell Roosevelt." Since coming to Washington and talking with Representatives from other States, I find that every Congressman from the West has received many communications from constituents in regard to the operation of the Federal land banks in their districts. All of these letters and telegrams have been of the same import, indicating almost a complete failure of the Federal land banks to meet the various demands for credit requested by the horticultural and agricultural producers of the West.

For months I have done everything in my power to point out to the administration and its agents what I consider the errors in management in the Federal land bank at Spokane, and I appeared before its board of directors recently, stating the case of the farmers.

In studying the situation it must be remembered that the Federal land-bank system is a product of the Wilson administration, which was completely reorganized under the Harding-Coolidge reign, the eastern bankers then assuming full and complete control. In a way the management of these banks is today almost a self-perpetuating body. These banks are not wholly and directly Federal institutions, though they are lending agencies for the Federal Government. They are financed by the sale of bonds to private investors, and interest on these bonds must be paid by earnings. They are governmental agencies in a restricted sense. It will take sweeping Federal legislation materially to affect the situation.

One of the most frequent complaints is about the unfair appraisals and the ignorant appraisers. These land appraisers for the banks are appointed by the appraisal board in Washington. These appraisers report to the land banks in their local districts. The local land bank cannot discharge them or in any manner or form affect their reports or their appraisals of the property, and their appraisements are final except that reappraisements may be asked for. I was told of one instance where an appraiser clearly made an error, showing on the face of the appraisement. The secretary of the land bank that received the appraisement pointed out the error to the appraiser and asked him to correct it. The appraiser refused to do so, calling the secretary's attention to the fact that he, the secretary, could not in any way influence or change his report.

Soon after coming to Washington this winter I asked a high official, who is supposed to have much to do with the appointment of appraisers, how they were selected. His reply was, "The national banks and the mortgage and insurance companies are asked to submit a list of names, and from that list the appraisers are selected." No Senator or Congressman, and no political, commercial, or farm organization was in any way consulted. The banks being about 95 percent reactionary Republican naturally appoint men of their own kind, and the 5,000 appraisers who are now valuing property throughout the country are almost universally of that character.

The Federal land banks claim to be nonpartisan politically. The fact of the case is that they are the most conservative, hidebound Republicans I have ever known.

I am particularly acquainted with the land values in Oregon. The ridiculously low values made by the appraisers are a disgrace and mean bankruptcy to thousands. I know one farm in Oregon—one of the most modern and up-to-date in the State, highly improved, 360 acres—upon which the appraisement gave a loan value of $12,000. The buildings, all modern, could not be erected for that sum. This property at one time could have been sold for $80,000. This one instance could be multiplied hundreds of times in my district.

Then, too, delays of the Federal land bank and of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation have simply been criminal. A man applying for money to summer fallow, in March, has received it probably in July. A man desiring an advance to spray his fruit has his loan approved after the damage has been done and spraying will not save his crop.

Those who read this letter thus far will say, "Why don't you change it? What are you in Congress for?" That is easier said than done. Remember, first, that the present set-up and management are satisfactory to the banking group on the Atlantic border. And, second, remember that Oregon has 3 votes in the House of Representatives; New York, 45; Washington has 6 votes; Pennsylvania, 34; and other States in like proportion. Remember, further, that these eastern Congressmen have no politics when it comes to matters of finance. They come together like blackbirds in a storm.

I saw the Atlantic border group in Congress take almost half a million dollars from the road fund of the State of Oregon last spring, when they changed the method of allocating public money for road purposes. Every Congressman from the Western States worked hard to prevent the loss. It was the thinly populated States of the West versus the thickly populated States of the East, and we were simply outvoted.

In excuse for delays it should be said that those in control fail to realize the tremendous task that has fallen upon the Federal land banks in the matter of extending credit, and the changes in the money-lending situation, and the fact that the land banks have taken over practically all the agricultural credit business handled until recently by other agencies. Think of the thousands of banks in our own part of the country, in Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon; and the scores of mortgage companies with headquarters in Seattle, Portland, Boise, Helena; and then the large companies, like the Pacific Fruit & Produce Co. and the American Fruit Growers, Inc., borrowing millions in the East for lending to fruit men at Hood River, Yakima, and other places. Conceive, if you can, the immense amount of business that was done by them every day, the millions lent to stockmen for sheep and cattle, also to wheat farmers. Now these lending activities that were so active 5 years ago have all ceased. Mortgage companies are no longer in business. The entire credit structure of horticulture and agriculture has been suddenly thrust upon governmental agencies. Producers have no other credit source.

There came to my desk a few days ago a statement from the Farm Credit Administration showing the large sums of money lent each day. The amount in the aggregate is large, but it must be small indeed when compared with the amount that was lent each day by the private lending agencies 5 years ago. In other words, the Federal land banks are not organized to carry the immense load thrust upon them. It may be possible to change the law and the personnel.

I very much doubt the final success of the production credit corporations and their local credit associations that are now being organized so extensively under the Federal law throughout the West. The object is to compel the borrowers to form cooperative organizations and force them to be responsible for one another's loans, at least to the amount of 5 percent, taken from each loan to go into a capital stock for the cooperative. The local organizations for the Federal land banks have never really functioned. In the production credit associations it will be the natural and human thing for each to approve the others' loans. They may kiss good-bye the 5 percent that they have to put into capital stock. This will compel that division in the Federal land banks called the intermediate credit bank to inspect most thoroughly the property mortgaged and to supervise most carefully the loans after they are made.

I think it would be far better if all the loans could be made directly through an agent of the intermediate credit bank located in each county. This would save the borrower the 5 percent and his share of the cost of the local organization. I see no immediate prospect of private lending agencies again assuming the very useful function that they performed a few years ago. We must look forward to the organization of these Federal agencies so that proper financial credit may be given to the great horticultural and agricultural industries of our country. It is some task to work out the proper system and convince the eastern Member of the justice of our cause.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that we are taking up this bill under suspension of rules, so that amendments cannot be allowed nor adequate debate made. I find that in Iowa there remains unpaid of the feed and seed loans made in 1933 only the sum of $37,000, which is a very small sum indeed when compared with other States, some of which have millions of dollars still unpaid. I am not criticizing because some of these loans are unpaid, but I am complaining because only $1,000,000 of the money allocated in the bill will be allowed to go to feed for livestock, while $34,000,000 will go to seed loans, a comparatively high percentage of which are never paid. These cattlemen are in great distress. They need assistance.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER] said that the feed loans would not be good if they were secured by second mortgages. Our experience is to the contrary. These loans could be made to livestock people for feed purposes in the communities where droughts have taken away their feed, and I guarantee that there would be a very much higher percentage of them repaid than those made for seed, for instance, in the gentleman's State.

The experience with reference to this thing would justify the statement that we ought to have more of this money for feed loans to help those in the dairy and beef industry who need it. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entirely right in calling the attention of this Congress to that point. The amounts unpaid are chiefly crop loans and must be crop loans under the very essence of the bill of last year.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GILCHRIST. For example, the State of Arkansas got 47 times as much as we got in these loans. I refer to that because the gentleman who is opposing feed loans is from Arkansas, and it seems to me a little selfish for Members from that State to act that way. I want their farmers to be prosperous, but I would like these gentlemen to join hands with us across the aisle and let our farmers also get some of this money by way of loans on their cattle, even though it is a second lien, provided it is a safe lien. The bill provides that the loan shall be made under such regulations as the Governor shall prescribe. It is not to be supposed that one sort of loan will be unsafe and the other safe. Those in charge of it can see that only safe loans are made. Experience bears me out in the statement that the seed loans, as administered under previous enactments, are not nearly as safe and do not return nearly as high a percentage of payment as the loans upon cattle, and would not be even though the cattle loans might be secured by secondary liens.

These cattle men always have mortgages upon their cattle up to a certain percentage, 30 or 40 or 50 percent, and they ought to be given leave to place a second mortgage upon such cattle if they are in distress. The bill cuts them off entirely, because it requires all such loans to be secured by first liens upon cattle. It cannot so be used to any appreciable extent. In this respect it is unjust and unfair to the cattlemen of Iowa and of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, representing as I do the greatest agricultural district in this Nation, I arise to support this measure.

The farmers of this country, in my opinion, wish a direct loan from the Government to enable them to grow the crop of 1934. This is so in my section, and this loan will minimize the cost of production, not only benefiting the small tenant farmer but also greatly relieving the landowner, many of whom are still bearing the burden of great indebtedness. No legislation in recent years, or at any time, has so directly benefited the agricultural interests as this. It gives me great pride to say that my constituents have paid back their loans to the Government; the American farmer is inherently honest—they would all pay back their loans if they could. We are getting good results from this legislation, and this Congress would make a profound mistake if it failed to continue these direct loans to the farmer.

I introduced a bill to provide for this manner of loans to the farmers on January 13, 1932, House Joint Resolution 204. It was to reloan to the farmers of the drought area the money which they had returned to the Government. The idea in this bill was extended to a general loan; and, I repeat, no measure that we have ever passed here has ever been more satisfactory and more directly beneficial to the American farmer.

There are several features in this bill I would endeavor to correct if it could be amended, but it cannot be amended under the rules here now.

First. I am apposed to the authorization of just $35,000,000 to cover these loans. I think the Senate bill provides that this loan shall not exceed $45,000,000, and that amount should be authorized in this bill.

Second. I am opposed to that feature of this bill which compels the borrower to pay the cost of registration and the expense incident to a loan; this cost the Government should carry. Some of these loans applied for will be very small and it is not right that the borrower should be compelled to pay the cost of this loan, which in some States is very, very high.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question at that point?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. Is it not true that the Senate bill on this subject contains provision for payment by the Government of a large part of the recording and other fees?

Mr. KERR. Not only that, but I think it is true that they limit the amount that shall be charged.

Let it be remembered that the Government is not seeking to make an investment; this is simply an endeavor to finance the farmers of this country who are utterly unable to finance themselves. We could afford at this time of our national life to make this loan if never a cent of it was repaid.

I sincerely hope that the objectionable features of this bill—and there are several besides those I have mentioned—will be ironed out when it is considered jointly with the Senate bill, and that we will get the relief that we should get through this measure and justify the sincere hope of a large majority of the Membership of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. UTTERBACK] such time as he may desire.

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I have been serving on the House Committee on Agriculture during my term here, and this is the first bill that has been presented that offers any relief to the Maine or the New England farmers. All other measures that have been considered in committee have pertained to benefit farmers particularly in the South and West.

In committee I opposed the $200 limitation on the amount that was proposed to be loaned. A vote was taken and it was decided in committee make the limit $250. It is my contention that this amount should be at least $300 in order to be beneficial, particularly to the Maine farmer who grows potatoes.

When I gained the information that the seed crop loans would be limited to about $200, or not to exceed $200, I immediately communicated with leading potato men and other citizens of Aroostook County, Maine, who are particularly interested in the welfare of the average farmer, to ascertain their opinion on this subject, and I have some 20 replies, all of which state emphatically that a loan of $200 would be inadequate. These replies are very interesting, and I wish to read to the House a letter I have received from Mr. George P. Findlen, secretary of the Aroostook Production Credit Association, which is an organization that has been set up in Aroostook County under the Federal Land Bank of Springfield:

PRESQUE ISLE, MAINE, January 30, 1934.

Hon. JOHN G. UTTERBACK,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your letter of January 26, we beg to give you the following suggestion:

We feel that the production-seed loan as handled in Aroostook County in the past 3 years of $300 should be kept going to take care of the small farmer who has little or no basis for commercial credit.

We also feel that the Aroostook Production Credit Association, as set up here in Presque Isle, and which will be ready to operate within a few days, will be able to take care of all other farmers who are a proper credit risk.

This is the unanimous opinion of the board of directors of this association.

Yours truly,

THE AROOSTOOK PRODUCTION CREDIT ASSOCIATION.
GEO. P. FINDLEN, Secretary pro tem.

Now, in 1932, $400 was the amount available, and in 1933 it was reduced from $400 to $300.

It is practically impossible for the farmer to operate on a $200 loan, and he will just be out of the picture entirely if it is limited to that amount, because, with the cost of fertilizer and other heavy expenses, that would only allow him an acreage of about 5 acres. Now, in the operation, if he operates at all, he has to have the necessary equipment consisting of at least a pair of horses, and the cost of operating 15 or 20 acres is practically the same so far as his overhead is concerned as if he operates only on 5 acres, and yet he cannot operate 5 acres and come out even; and my interest is in getting an extended amount for the farmers in that particular section.

There were about 2,000 loans made last year in the State of Maine, and I am reliably informed that over 90 percent of those loans as of January 15 had been collected, aside from any collection made in the year 1933 on crop loans for 1932.

I do feel, and I hope, that the extension to $300 can be granted, because the Maine farmers and other New England farmers have not received benefits under the system of agricultural benefits paid to the farmers in other sections.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] such time as he may desire.

DIRECT CREDITS TO THE FARMERS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the passage of this bill and hope it is enacted into law real soon. It is another step in the direction of helping the farmers. It will probably afford more direct relief to the small farmers than any other bill that Congress will pass this session and at the same time will cost the Government very little, if anything.

Under present circumstances the farmer has three places where it is possible for him to obtain credit, as follows:

First. The merchant who is not financially able to extend them aid on account of being unable to obtain credit himself. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has extended plenty of credit to banks, railroads, insurance companies, and many others but no direct loans to industry. The Federal Reserve banks have fallen down completely on their duty to extend credit. The merchants cannot furnish the farmers this year.

Second. The small banks that are handicapped in their efforts to assist the farmers, and, too, many of the farmers do not have adequate security. Very few of the large banks are making farm loans.

Third. The production credit associations that can only extend credit upon proper security, and a large percentage of the farmers cannot qualify.

Immediately after the establishment of the Production Credit Corporation at Houston, Tex., which authorized the establishment of production credit associations, I made a trip over the congressional district that I have the honor to represent for the purpose of determining whether the production credit associations would meet the demands of the farmers for credit to make the 1934 crop. I was convinced that they would not, that only about 50 percent of the farmers that borrowed money from the crop-production loan last year would be able to obtain credit from these new institutions. Therefore I have been endeavoring to convince the administration that the crop-production loans should continue this year, and I am glad that this bill has been reported.

SENATE BILL ON SAME SUBJECT

On last Friday, as disclosed in the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 1824–1826, the Senate passed a bill for crop production and harvesting. I will point out a few of the principal differences between the two bills.

TEN MILLION DOLLARS DIFFERENCE IN AMOUNT ALLOWED

The Senate bill provides for an appropriation of $45,000,000, to be used for the same purposes as the 1933 loans. The House bill authorizes an appropriation of $35,000,000 which may be used for the same purposes as last year and in addition for planting a crop that is not harvested until 1935.

There was loaned to the farmers during the year 1933 the sum of $57,000,000, and it is doubtful that $35,000,000 will be a sufficient amount for 1934.

RATE OF INTEREST AND OTHER CHARGES

In the 1933 act the farmer paid 5½-percent interest for the time he used the borrowed money and nothing more. Under this House bill the farmer will have to pay 6-percent interest, and the bill further provides:

> Every borrower shall be required to pay all recording, notarization, and other legal fees (including the cost of lien certificates furnished by county recorders and similar public officials) incurred in connection with his loan; and to pay an inspection and field-supervision fee of 50 cents which may be deducted from the proceeds of his loan.

The Senate bill, in regard to interest and other charges, provides:

> The interest on loans made by the Governor pursuant to this act shall be at a rate not to exceed 5½ percent per annum and the amount charged to any borrower as a recording fee in connection with any such loan shall not exceed 50 cents, and the remainder, if any, of any legal fees incurred in making said loan shall be paid by the Farm Credit Administration.

MAXIMUM LOANS

The House bill provides that the aggregate amount of loans made under this act to any borrower shall not exceed $250; the Senate bill also has a maximum of $250 except in cases specifically authorized by the Governor where the amount may be $400.

BORROWERS MUST COOPERATE

The House bill provides that no farmer shall be extended a loan who does not cooperate in the crop-production-control program.

WHO WILL ADMINISTER

Under the Senate bill the law will be administered as it was last year. Under this House bill it may be administered the same way or the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration may use the facilities and services of production credit corporations, production credit associations, regional agricultural credit corporations, and other institutions under his jurisdiction.

CONCLUSION

In the free conference committee of the two Houses I hope the Senate provision on fees that may be charged the borrower is adopted instead of the House provision and the amount $45,000,000 is agreed upon instead of $35,000,000. Even then it will probably be necessary to raise the amount when the demand for this form of credit is ascertained.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. GREEN. The need for passage of this legislation is very acute. Many of the growers in the country, particularly all Florida growers, have been unable during the past few months to obtain loans from the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation or from the recently organized crop production loan corporations. These agencies have required adequate security other than that of the crop itself and have also entailed considerable red tape which has necessitated delay and expense to the grower; in fact, very few of the growers in my section of the State have been able to obtain loans at all. With the passage of the bill before us the Department of Agriculture will be authorized and directed to make loans to our farmers and truck growers upon the crop mortgage alone. Many of our growers who most need these loans have no security to offer except the crop to be produced by the loan itself, and such growers can receive loans under the provisions of this bill. It is far better to permit these loans and thus enable our growers to make their crops and become self-sustaining than to compel them, in many instances, to seek charity. The bill provides for a maximum loan of $250 to an individual. Of course, this will not be adequate for vegetable planting on a large scale, but will take care of the small grower at least. Under the provisions of the bill the Department of Agriculture can loan for crop planting any time during the year 1934, regardless of whether the crop is harvested prior to January 1, 1935, or thereafter. I believe this provision was not carried in the Senate bill, but it is to be hoped that the legislation as finally agreed to by the conferees will provide for loans for summer and fall planting. Thousands of vegetable and strawberry growers in Florida plant in the fall and harvest in the spring; therefore, this provision is all necessary for our fall crop.

The records of the Department of Agriculture show that, in the main, a high percentage of such loans previously made have been repaid. In fact, in some communities as high as 98 percent of the amount borrowed have been repaid to the Government, and I am proud that my own district shows a high percentage repaid to the Government. You now have a chance to help the small grower who, in most instances, is absolutely unable to obtain loans from local sources.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation is to make funds available for continuing the crop-production loans in 1934, and its enactment into law is of vital importance to the patriotic but distressed farmers of New Hampshire, New England, and the Nation. It is suggested in opposition to the bill that it will increase rather than decrease production. This is not the fact because it reduces loans from $430 to a limit of $250 in each individual case. The farmers of New England are not suffering from overproduction. They have not the money in a great many cases to maintain their homes and farms, and the enactment of this bill will enable a large number of them to survive and carry on.

I am advised that farm leaders from all over the State of New Hampshire are devoting their time and energy to the organization of a local production credit association which will make short-time farm loans to assist in the present emergency. Such associations will doubtless be permanent and of great benefit to agriculture. It is, of course, not intended that crop-production loans made by the Federal Government shall be permanent, but the passage of this bill will undoubtedly place the farmers in a position where they may avail themselves of the benefits to be provided in the near future by these various credit associations. As well stated in the report of the Committee on Agriculture, it is deemed advisable, because of the existing need, to establish this fund of $35,000,000 so that these loans may be made in the agricultural sections for the year 1934. As an additional safeguard the committee points out that, in order to avoid any tendency to increase agricultural production or to interfere with the extension of credit to farmers through the production credit associations or private sources of credit, the bill provides that any applicant for a loan must establish to the satisfaction of the Governor of the Farm Credit Association that, first, such applicant is unable to secure from a production credit association or from a private lending institution, on a fair basis and at a reasonable rate of interest, a loan in an amount reasonably adequate to meet his needs, and, second, that such applicant is cooperating directly in the crop-production-control program of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, or is not proposing to increase his 1934 production of basic agricultural commodities in a manner detrimental to the success of such program.

It is certainly of the utmost importance that we should realize that the average farmer must now begin to make his preparations for the crops he intends to reap this year. He must have help without delay and without hesitation. I ask you to vote for this bill for the relief of the worthy and deserving farmers of the Nation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. This bill authorizing loans to farmers for crop production in the year 1934 means much to the small farmers in the United States.

It authorizes an appropriation of $35,000,000 to make loans to farmers with which to make a crop, such loans being made in amounts not to exceed $250 to any one farmer. They are available only to those applicants who are unable to procure credit from a production credit association or from a private lending institution on a fair basis and at a reasonable rate of interest, and the applicants are also required to cooperate in the crop-production-control program of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and the applicants must show that they do not propose to increase the 1934 production of basic agricultural commodities in a manner detrimental to the Administration's reduction program.

The loans made under a similar act in 1933 were most effective, and it was one character of relief of which no criticism has been heard.

The relief granted to the small farmers in my district by such loans in 1933 was a lifesaver to the small farmer, and without these loans many of the small farmers would have been unable to make a crop and would have had to go into the bread lines.

The appreciation of the farmers in securing these loans in 1933 is demonstrated by the prompt repayment of same to the Government. In my district in several of the counties there was a repayment of 100 percent of all loans made, and in others 90 and 95 percent, and I should say that the average throughout my entire district of repayment would be above 95 percent.

I venture the assertion that no other loans made by the Government have been repaid so quickly in such a large proportion as these.

As in 1933 these loans will be made with no other security except a first lien on the crops to be produced and the rate of interest shall not exceed 6 percent per annum. The loans are to be made through such agencies as the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration may designate.

Aside from the interest the bill provides:

> Every borrower shall be required to pay all recording, notarization, and other legal fees (including the cost of lien certificates furnished by county recorders and similar public officials) incurred in connection with his loan, and to pay an inspection and field supervision fee of 50 cents, which may be deducted from the proceeds of his loan.

This bill is not a permanent law but is merely an extension of the act authorizing such loans in 1933 and making same applicable to the year 1934.

It is hoped that after 1934 conditions will have improved and credit to farmers will be available, either from private sources or from production-credit associations, so that these crop loans will not be necessary. They are extremely necessary at this time, especially to the small farmers who have no security to offer, except the crops that are to be grown, and are therefore unable to obtain credit from private sources. The production-credit associations will doubtless furnish credit for many farmers this year, but the organization of these is necessarily slow, and, even if they were functioning, there are many small farmers who would be unable at this time to qualify for loans.

From an investigation made in my district last year, I was convinced of the great amount of good that had been done by these loans, and the investigation also disclosed the necessity for their continuance in 1934. Upon my return to Washington, just before the convening of the present session of Congress, I had a personal interview with Dr. W. I. Myers, Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, and explained to him the necessity for the continuance of these loans during the present year, and I am glad that the administration is convinced of the necessity of making an appropriation this year, and is in sympathy therewith.

No administration has ever done more for the American farmers than that of President Roosevelt, and this is a matter of no surprise, for President Roosevelt has demonstrated that he is not only a great executive, but a humanitarian, who is anxious to extend aid to every class of American people who are in distress, and no class is he more anxious to help than that of the American farmer. He realizes, and has on numerous occasions expressed himself as believing, that the recovery of the American farmer from the depression is one of the fundamental ways to cure our present economic ills.

We are fortunate in having as the President of our Nation, at such a time as this, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who has the confidence of the American people, who has the courage, the wisdom, and the determination to bring us out of the depression, and already the evidences of the success of the efforts of his administration in behalf of agriculture are everywhere to be seen. The prices of agricultural products at this time are nearly double such prices at the time of his inauguration last March, and this is especially true as to cotton and wheat.

The Senate passed several days ago S. 1975, which is a very similar measure to the bill which we are now considering. There are only a few slight differences in the terms of the bill which I am sure can be adjusted in conference, and I sincerely hope that within a few days these two bills may be ironed out in conference, so that this legislation may be finally passed and approved by the President, for if relief is to be had for the farmers of the South, the legislation must be passed within the very near future, as the farmers in Texas are already beginning to make preparations for the crop in 1934, and the question of credit is now confronting them, and must be met without further delay.

I sincerely hope that this bill will pass by a unanimous vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and two thirds having voted in favor thereof, the bill was passed.

CATTLE AS A BASIC AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 7478) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle as a basic agricultural commodity, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding after the word "hogs" a comma and the word "cattle."

SEC. 2. Subsection (a) of section 12 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to finance, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, surplus reductions and production adjustments with respect to the dairy- and beef-cattle industries, and to make advance rental and/or benefit payments with respect thereto, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000,000: Provided, That not more than 60 percent of such amount shall be used for either of such industries."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HOPE. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HOPE. I am not opposed to the bill but I am opposed to taking it up at the present time.

The SPEAKER. Is any other Member opposed to the bill who demands a second?

There was no other demand for a second.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration, H.R. 7478, is a bill which has for its purpose the relief of the cattle industry.

In explaining this measure to the Membership of the House, it should be borne in mind that the cattle industry referred to in this bill is considered from the standpoint of the indivisibility of the interests between the beef-cattle industry and the dairy-cattle industry, insofar as the cattle industry is concerned as such, and insofar as cattle being included as a basic commodity under the act.

The problem of the beef-cattle industry and the dairy industry happens to be that there are too many cattle for the present consumption demand. For the benefit of my friend, the minority leader on the other side of the House, I want to say that we have made an effort in conducting hearings before the Committee on Agriculture to bring a full and complete understanding of the possibilities contained in the bill to organizations and individuals of both the dairy- and beef-cattle industry.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. If you have got full information, the gentleman ought to take time enough to give it to the House. I come from a dairy-industry district, and I hope the gentleman will take time now to explain the whole proposition.

Mr. KLEBERG. I shall be delighted to do so to the extent of my time. As a matter of fact, boiling the proposition down, after long and extended hearings, it was agreed to reduce the cattle population by approximately 3,000,000 females; that would go a long way toward solving the problem in the cattle industry, both as to beef and dairy cattle.

It is proposed under the amendment now being considered to go into a program which is to be presented and agreed upon, to hold meetings between the Department of Agriculture and representative beef- and dairy-cattle men at various places over the country, at which hearings a full understanding will be had of the actual program to be instituted for the reduction of production by reducing the number of cattle in this country as well as other phases of such program.

In addition to that, it is proposed in the program which is to follow the passage of this bill, and which program, of necessity, will take time and which is the real reason we are anxious to get this bill out today as rapidly as possible so that we can go to work, that a series of marketing agreements be entered into between the processors and producers of both beef cattle and dairy cattle; and, in addition to that, it is proposed to institute a program which will flexibly keep the production under control. We cannot do anything, my friends, unless we agree first of all that cattle should be made a basic commodity under the bill; nor can we by recognizing cattle alone, accomplish immediate benefit to an industry which converts into wealth, the surface production of 67 percent of the acreage of this country in range land and which converts 70 percent of all agricultural production into wealth. Now, if you take the figures I have briefly given, you will understand the importance of immediately getting to work under this program, to enable a frank and free discussion and adoption of the program to be considered.

For purposes of generally showing the attitude of the beef-cattle interests that appeared at hearings before the Committee on Agriculture, I refer you to the program drawn up by certain representative organizations of beef-cattle men.

Briefly recapitulating and calling attention to the cattle industry, including both beef and dairy cattle, we find in examining into its extensiveness that of the 1,903,216,640 acres representing the total acreage of the United States corn, cotton, wheat, and tobacco, the four basic crops, exclusive of dairy products included under the Agricultural Adjustment Act as basic crops, use, respectively and approximately, as follows: Cotton, 41,921,000 acres; corn, 100,000,000 acres; wheat, 47,493,000 acres; tobacco, 1,753,700 acres. The total acreage of these four crops is approximately 191,175,700 acres. The total tilled crop acreage in the United States is given as 359,242,091 acres.

It should be apparent from the above figures that the four basic crops referred to utilize a fraction more than 10 percent of the total acreage in this country and a little over one half of the tilled-crop acreage.

Now, we have in this country of ours approximately 65,000,000 head of cattle. Cattle and sheep together utilize about 1,479,351,640 acres. Roughly, of this, cattle graze about 1,300,000,000 acres, and sheep a little in excess of 130,000,000. Cattle, therefore, graze or utilize approximately 67 percent of the acreage of the United States. I might add that in southern sections of the United States, as well as in the corn and wheat sections, and in practically all farming sections, cattle graze in fields after regular crops have been removed, as well as in those which have crops planted expressly for grazing purposes. Tilled agriculture, including the producers of at least three of the basic tilled crops referred to, will profit, because, in the last and final analysis, through cattle, about 70 percent of all tilled crops are converted into wealth.

The authorization of $200,000,000 for the rehabilitation of an industry which touches directly and indirectly nearly every field of human endeavor in the United States should not be extravagant; and when one considers that real property, which supports this industry in its entirety, and which depends upon it for the conversion into revenue of its surface production to a large extent, is, in reality, an important part of the foundation of our credit structure, the size of the appropriation really appears insignificant.

The program, which I personally hope will be adopted, will include a substantial and immediate reduction to the extent of not less than 3,000,000 cows. In addition to this reduction marketing agreements will be set up which will insure an orderly flow of cattle to the markets, as well as the beef and dairying byproducts, thus preventing gluts and consequent sudden declines in the market price of these commodities.

It has been strongly urged by representative cattlemen, both dairy and beef, that a spaying program of a flexible character be instituted, by which means the weekly production may be held to a proper parity between available supply and consumptive demand. We are all, I am sure, agreed that the purchasing power of our people has been decreased; and because of this, to a large extent, we are more poignantly conscious of the disparity between our present supply and consumptive demand.

In the various phases of the administration's program for rehabilitation it should be pointed out that there is much hope for a reasonably prompt relief in which the amendment now under consideration will bear an important part.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] 2 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. The people in the dairy industry are very much interested in what your program is going to be relative to the processing tax. That will be vitally important to the people in our country especially, because we produce fluid milk for the New York or city market. People in rural districts who have placed themselves in position to produce this kind of milk have spent thousands and thousands of dollars that the average dairyman in other parts of the country, who has not had to come under the health-inspection authorities of various cities, have not had to spend. I am especially interested in having the gentleman from Texas tell the House what it is intended to do in regard to the processing tax as affecting the dairy industry.

Mr. KLEBERG. May I suggest to the gentleman that the taxes that might affect either of the two industries would affect them only as they both belong to the cattle industry. It has been tentatively and, I might say, tacitly agreed—and with permission I will include a statement of the Secretary of Agriculture in my remarks—that for the immediate future no processing tax would be adopted in connection with this program.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY WALLACE AT CONFERENCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF BEEF CATTLE AND DAIRY INDUSTRIES, JANUARY 29, 1934

I want to express to you my appreciation for this opportunity to appear before representatives of the dairying and beef cattle industries. These two industries are economic sore spots in American agriculture. Their predicament is a challenge not only to the best thought of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration but also to the leadership of the industries.

On January 18, appearing before the Senate Agricultural Committee, I devoted some time to description of economic conditions in both the beef and dairy industries. Most of you are no doubt familiar with these conditions, and, therefore, a brief review will suffice at the present time.

The problems of both industries differ fundamentally from those of the great export agricultural industries such as wheat and cotton. The exports in neither dairying nor beef cattle are an appreciable factor. Producers of dairy and beef cattle rely principally upon the domestic market. Their income bears the closest relationship to consumer purchasing power.

For years dairy- and beef-cattle producers profited from effective tariff protection. The higher prices that they were able to obtain behind the tariff walls, however, encouraged the entrance into dairying and beef-cattle fields of more and more farmers who were unable to make a profit producing at low prices such export crops as wheat and hogs. Under this stimulus, dairy production has gone on increasing year after year. This is shown in the following table of the milk produced in the United States:

Year:	Million pounds
1924	87,069
1925	88,375
1926	91,135
1927	93,047
1928	93,951
1929	99,736
1930	99,705
1931	101,970
1932	101,663

Nevertheless, it would be a grave mistake to regard the dairy industry's problem solely as one of overproduction. There is a great potential consuming power among the American people for dairy products. There are large sections of the country not now receiving enough dairy products to constitute a reasonably balanced diet.

When we speak of overproduction in the dairy industry we mean production of quantities of dairy products beyond the ability of consumer purchasing power to absorb at anything above distress prices to farmers. Therefore we do not think of curtailment of milk production in any absolute or permanent sense as we do in the case of wheat.

There exists in the dairy industry a temporary emergency overproduction. This storage excess is a contributing factor in holding down the prices of the products of milk.

Experience with stabilization operations indicates that attempts to raise prices in advance of improvement in consumer purchasing power and without any check rein on production are followed by such quick upturns in production as to cause a fresh and disastrous collapse in prices.

Therefore, we believe it essential that the dairy program should contain as one of its basic features such a method of production control that will restrain production to keep it in step with increases in consumer purchasing power and prevent supply from outrunning demand to the degree that causes disaster.

The beef industry has not thus far received assistance from the administration, because at the request of representatives of the industry beef cattle were excluded from the list of basic commodities. The dairy industry has not received adequate benefits under the act because its representatives were reluctant to face the facts, and to consider any effective production control program.

Aside from the butter stabilization operations, milk marketing agreements have engaged the chief attention of dairy interests under the act thus far. We have experimented extensively with these marketing agreements and have learned by experience not to expect too much help for dairymen from them. At best they can aid only a fraction of the industry. Moreover, lifting fluid-milk prices out of line with butter-fat prices and trying to help fluid-milk producers while leaving butter farmers out in the cold, does not permanently aid either group but tends to harm both. We have found, too, that we could not fix retail prices without indirectly being placed in the position of protecting profits of distributing companies which already, in some cases, were more than ample, to say the least. As a matter of fact, fixing retail prices infers use of the public-utility method for fluid-milk distribution, because use of governmental powers to guarantee prices invariably carries with it regulation of capitalization, service, and profits.

We do not now have the machinery to undertake the public-utility method of regulating fluid-milk distribution in cities, although ultimately we may be forced to undertake it.

So in our revised milk policy we are confining ourselves in the marketing agreements to the establishment of prices to producers which bear their proper relationship with current prices of butter fat. Before this policy was adopted it was found that the milk marketing agreements resulted in some instances in exploitation of both producers and consumers by milk dealers. These evils we are trying to correct.

It is necessary to have a dairy program which offers help to the entire industry, and by that I mean farmers producing milk for butter, cheese, and other manufactured products, as well as farmers engaged in producing fluid milk for city consumption. We must recognize the interrelation of various dairy commodities to each other and continually keep the principle in mind that reasonable restraint of production should govern the industry during the period of recovery in consumer buying power. Milk-producing sections of the country demand broader and more fundamental adjustments than those thus far undertaken, and I believe they are ready to consider and accept a workable plan.

In proposing a plan for consideration by dairymen I should like to point out that benefit payments made under the funds available should set in motion forces having favorable effect upon the purchasing power of consumers. Our experience with payment of benefits in the cotton and wheat regions indicates that increasing the income of farmers is quickly and strongly reflected in business and industrial recovery in the areas. Thus payments to dairy farmers like those made to the cotton and wheat producers should to some extent at least result in a recovery in consuming purchasing power which would start a cycle of increasing demand for dairy products.

I wish to endorse an emergency plan for $200,000,000 over and above this year's receipts from processing taxes, to be used for the beef- and dairy-cattle industries as a supplement to receipts from processing taxes in financing the program this year, and to advocate inclusion of beef cattle within the terms of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Of course, money taken from the Treasury must be replaced out of either processing taxes or other tax receipts. The Adjustment Act's intent is to provide a continuous source of revenue, and the thought is that ultimately when consumer purchasing power is on the upgrade the industry will not feel the tax as much as in the present emergency, so that then it will be easier to replace out of processing taxes the special fund made available now.

The proposed special fund is desirable because both dairy and beef producers, pending recovery in consumer buying power, would feel the processing tax more than export agriculture, whose prices are fixed in the world markets. The appropriation will enable advance payments to reach the farmers by the time a substantial tax is felt. We believe that as the market is freed from the pressure of oversupply, the tendency for the tax to be reflected in producer price will disappear. Further aid could be obtained through additional surplus relief purchases, affording dairy products to the needy unemployed who otherwise would be unable to obtain them, with the purchases timed to coincide with dairy price advances.

The tentative plan which the administration is offering to the dairy industry is an individual voluntary farm allotment proposal, financed by a processing tax on all butter fat in milk and its products and a compensatory tax on oleomargarine. The rate of the processing tax would eventually reach 5 cents or more per pound of butter fat in all milk and its products, with a compensatory tax on oleomargarine equivalent to the tax rate on butter.

A 3-year base period, with individual production of butter fat for 1931, 1932, and 1933 established for each farmer is contemplated. The goal to be sought is an individual reduction of 15 percent in milk and butter fat produced for market in the year ahead below the quantities sold in the past year, with the prospect that this would assure a 10-percent net reduction, or whatever fraction of this percent may appear necessary.

The method of securing reduction on the farm is to be left to the judgment of cooperating producers. Compensation to cooperating producers is to be secured through benefit payments or premiums on sales on an agreed reduction basis under contract.

The quantities would apply to individual dairymen on a voluntary system. Each producer would have his quota of total sales for the year divided into four parts, but such quarterly division of each individual's total allotment would be left largely to each individual's choice. As substantial an advance payment as possible would be made to each cooperating producer soon after his contract is accepted. Additional payments might be made quarterly.

The plan is intended to be operated in a flexible manner so as to permit expansion of the industry as rapidly as consumer buying power expands. After the emergency oversupply is reduced, the industry should be guided toward a controlled expansion up to the limit of consumer purchasing power.

In addition to the use of funds for direct individual adjustments to secure the proper balance between supply and demand, we propose to inaugurate an intensive educational campaign among cooperating producers to assist them in determining and applying the most economical and effective methods of complying with the reduction specified in their contracts. The Bureau of Dairy Industry and the Agricultural Extension Service already have mapped out tentative plans to fit such a campaign. The object is assistance of farmers in economical production and aid for them in selection of profitable and practical means of production adjustment. It is further proposed to allocate such sums as Congress may determine for two other purposes.

One of the plans is to engage in an intensive campaign to eradicate tuberculosis in dairy cattle. For a 2-year campaign on a joint basis as at present, sharing costs between the States and Federal Government, the Federal share of the expense is estimated at about $5,000,000. The various States requiring further eradication of tuberculosis in cattle would appropriate sums to assist in the work. It is estimated that there are about 5,000,000 head of dairy cattle yet to be tested for tuberculosis, with about 600,000 head as the number normally expected to be subject to removal.

Speeding up this campaign so as to complete the testing in one year would require about $40,000,000 which would be expended mostly in four or five States. The tuberculin-testing campaign is recognized primarily as a health and public-welfare measure rather than a direct means of production control. Hence it does not appear equitable to ask the dairy industry as a whole to accept a reduction in benefit payment funds sufficient to finance so large a program.

The other plan, involving use of part of the emergency fund, relates to possibility of removing normal dairy cows of good production from intensive dairy areas in the leading dairy States to regions in the South where thousands of families have existed for years without a proper proportion of dairy products in the diet. Such cows will be selected with care in areas where animals of required standards are plentiful, particularly in regions where herds are being maintained relatively free from tuberculosis. Similarly, their distribution would be handled so as to assure producers that such cows would not be used for commercial purposes, but would stimulate the greatly subnormal demand for dairy products in those regions. This plan is advanced contingent upon its acceptance by the dairy industry, although it already has been urged, not only by spokesmen of the industry but also by persons who are well informed concerning the dietary deficiencies of some southern regions. The definite sum to be allocated for such purposes has not been stated. It would probably not be large at first, so that the plan might be given a fair trial in a limited way.

This dairy program is not submitted as anything that is hard and fast or that is to be imposed on the dairy farmers of this country. We simply submit it, as it is our duty to do, as the best plan that we have been able to devise after months of discussion and study of the many proposals which have been made to us. We know that we cannot make it succeed unless the dairy farmers of this country want it and support it, and unless they cooperate whole-heartedly in its operation.

We are willing to accept any modifications which, after full discussion by farmers and their representatives, appear sound and desirable. If the dairy farmers or any substantial groups in industry do not want this program, we are willing to abandon it, because we doubt whether it can succeed without strong support from the dairymen. But we are frank to say that if some sound and comprehensive program is not adopted soon the path of the dairy industry is likely to be rough. Our course will be determined by the response of the dairy farmers and their representatives to this program.

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration has been under pressure to devote its energy to plans of various descriptions designed to aid certain localities and certain segments of the dairy and beef cattle industries.

These plans, mostly in the nature of marketing agreements, afford help only within very definite limitations and to comparatively small numbers of producers. After all, the Agricultural Adjustment Act did not repeal the law of supply and demand.

Our responsibility is to all producers of these industries. The fact that representatives of both the dairy and beef cattle producers are meeting here today is important, partly because it shows how closely the problems of these two producer groups are interrelated and how assistance to one group will affect the other.

It is necessary that any program to benefit one of these groups shall be dovetailed with a program for the other, and also shall be consistent with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration's plans for agriculture as a whole.

Mr. SNELL. Now, what does the gentleman mean by "in the immediate future"? That is very important. I think the question of reducing the number of cattle is absolutely all right, and probably must be done, but if it is intended to put a processing tax on the dairy industry, it will destroy it as far as my section is concerned.

Mr. KLEBERG. Insofar as the beef-cattle industry is concerned, the same thing is true, and for that reason, taking the prices for both dairy commodities and beef commodities, and the low level at which they are quoted today, it is practically impossible to levy a processing tax on those two industries while in their present condition. It is hoped to raise immediately the price level to such a point that they could afford to stand a processing tax, if that were the only way to recapture the money involved.

Mr. SNELL. But until such time as they can raise prices, there will be no processing tax?

Mr. KLEBERG. That is my understanding.

Mr. SNELL. There is another question that has disturbed me somewhat. I read somewhere that the Secretary of Agriculture made a speech some month or 6 weeks ago, in which he stated that he expected to use a large part of this money in connection with the beef-cattle industry, and that is one reason why I suggested to the chairman of your committee today that there must be some provision in this bill relating to the fact that not all of it should be used in the beef-cattle industry. If results are to be obtained, the dairy industry needs it just as much as the beef-cattle industry. Does the gentleman know anything about that speech of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. KLEBERG. I have never heard the Secretary make any such speech as that, but I will say that so far as I am concerned, and I feel that I voice the opinion of a majority of those engaged in the production of beef cattle, it would delight me to see at least two and one half million dairy cows, now in competition with beef on the market, taken out of both the field of being in competition against beef and being on the expense account of the farmer who has been forced to keep them alive at the present time, and unable to sell them for anything other than canned beef. They are a menace to the general business, as they lower the quality of beef and thus consumers turn to other foods.

Mr. SNELL. My interest in this has been largely from the standpoint of the dairy people. I was disappointed that this bill came up at this time; that I and a large number of Members did not have an opportunity to go into it a little more thoroughly and have a more comprehensive understanding of what we were trying to do. If we could have done that, I think we would all have gotten together in support of this measure. My only criticism at this time is in taking it up now without ample time to consider it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has expired.

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] 1 minute.

Mr. BRITTEN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] if they have also considered the consumers' side of this question? All the conversation on the floor has been in the interest of the farmer. My impression is that the consumer is going to pay this tax. My impression is that you are going to tax milk as a basic product. Surely the farmer is not going to stand that tax. The processing tax will be pushed on to the consumer. I am interested in the big-city fellow? What are you doing for him in this?

Mr. KLEBERG. My friend has possibly not kept close track of the operation of processing taxes, nor does he know the cattle industry. I may say to the gentleman that should we bring up the price, as it is hoped with this program, the beef- and dairy-cattle industry will gladly shoulder the burden and continue as they have in the past.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is not a fact that the tax will have to be assessed under the existing law?

Mr. KLEBERG. Not of necessity. That may occur some time in the future. I might suggest to the gentleman that the enhanced earning capacity of the enormous production represented in this bill through cattle alone will more than pay the consumers' part of this program.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this measure interests the beef-cattle producers of West Virginia to a marked extent. We are not thought of as a State that produces beef cattle, but in seven of the counties in my district the raising of beef cattle represents a real industry. Beef-cattle producers have on more than one occasion come to Washington seeking relief because of the condition that exists in their distressed region of the South Branch Valley in West Virginia. I appeared with a group of these men some weeks ago before the Secretary of Agriculture in behalf of including cattle within the basic commodities.

I believe these cattle producers in the South Branch Valley and other sections of West Virginia want to see this measure passed today. I believe I speak for them when I say that I trust it will have the united support not only of the Democratic side but also of the Republican side. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. It was my observation, representing an agricultural State in which a great many cattle are raised—Oklahoma—that the cattle industry is in worse shape than any other industry in the entire country.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Replying to the observation, let me say I believe that in West Virginia the beef-cattle producers have been harder hit than any other group in the Nation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. UTTERBACK].

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is of interest to me because it means another added burden to the people of New England. I find that already Maine has paid well over a million dollars in processing taxes, some $900,000 of it going to cotton.

In the meantime what has happened to our paper mills which manufacture paper bags and paper towels? A compensatory tax was placed on their products, so much so that one of our paper-bag mills was forced to close. This came about by reason of the extreme cost to this mill of doing business since the processing tax has been in effect.

What happened in the case of jute, the fiber used to make the burlap sacks in which potatoes are shipped? The cotton people have placed a compensatory tax on jute with the result that it costs about $20 more for each carload of potatoes shipped.

Now, all these bills are very fine for certain sections of the country, but they simply mean added expense to the people of New England and the northern section of the country generally.

I did not find unanimous support of this bill among all the witnesses who appeared before the committee. There seemed to be a divided opinion as to the benefits to be derived.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

I have no objection to this bill; that is, I am in favor of its general purpose, but I do object to a bill as important as this being brought up under suspension of the rules with no opportunity for full discussion or for amendment. There are a number of Members of the House who desired to offer important amendments to this bill who are now denied the opportunity. Furthermore, the bill, in my opinion, is quite ambiguous in its language as to whether or not this fund is to be reimbursed through a processing tax or is to come out of the Treasury directly.

The bill already has a privileged status in the House. Therefore it can be called up at any time. It is my understanding that there are no important measures pending at this time, and as far as I know there is no reason why the bill could not have been brought up later this week when full time could be had for discussion. It is a bill of some considerable importance. Extensive hearings were held on it before the Committee on Agriculture, and it is worthy of more consideration than can possibly be given it during this brief 40-minute period.

I think there is some justification for taking cattle and dairy products from the general provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act as far as financing a reduction program is concerned. This is true because it is extremely doubtful whether any program by which processing taxes would be levied at this time would result in those taxes being passed on to the consumer. There is grave danger that in a large part they would be reflected back on the producer at least until such time as the reduction program would result in a shortage.

A reduction program in beef cattle or dairy products would, in my opinion, be very effective; that is, it can be made more permanent, perhaps, than a reduction program on any other agricultural commodity; but it would take some time to do so. If today you were to kill 3,000,000 head of beef and dairy cattle, as has been proposed, it probably would not result in any material decrease in the production of milk or beef which might go to market within the next year. It takes 3 years for a cow to reach maturity and reproduce. So we might run along for 2 or 3 years without any material reduction in the amount of beef which would go on the market; and by simply feeding a little more heavily it would be possible to keep up the same volume of dairy production, even if we disposed of many of the tubercular and other diseased and inferior cows. Therefore, it might be a year or two before the effects of taking 3,000,000 cows out of production would be felt. In the end, however, disposing of that many cows would result in cutting down the possibility of a surplus for several years. For that reason such a program would be permanently more effective than that for the reduction of hogs which multiply very rapidly or of annual crops like wheat and cotton, the acreage of which can be expanded very quickly if there is sufficient incentive to do so.

Therefore it would, no doubt, be wise to defer the levying of a processing tax on cattle until the effects of the reduction campaign had become so apparent that the tax would not have to be absorbed by the producer. For these reasons I think the program as a whole is sound and that it probably can be handled best by a processing tax, if the levying of that tax is delayed until the effects of the reduction program can be realized.

Now, getting back to the bill itself, the language of section 2 is quite ambiguous. It is hard to tell whether the fund of $200,000,000 will finally be raised by general taxation or by the levying of a processing tax. This is one thing that I think should be cleared up and one reason why the bill should be opened for amendment and debate instead of being rushed through in this precipitate fashion.

Now, in discussing the question as to whether this is to be an outright appropriation from the Treasury, or a fund which is later to be replaced by the proceeds of processing taxes, permit me to call attention to the fact that this is an amendment to section 12 (a) of the original Agricultural Adjustment Act and that the original section is one which provides for an outright appropriation which does not necessarily have to be replaced by the proceeds of processing taxes.

Apparently one purpose in putting the amendment in this particular place was to tie it up with the $100,000,000 appropriation in section 12 (a). It is true that section 9 of the Adjustment Act provides that when the Secretary determines that benefit payments are to be made, a processing tax shall go into effect at the beginning of the next marketing year. This, however, is subject to certain exceptions and qualifications. The point, however, to which I call particular attention at this time is the language beginning in line 9 of this bill, reading as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to finance under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe surplus reductions and production adjustments.

And so forth. I call attention in particular to the language "under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe." In my opinion this would give the Secretary authority to make benefit payments without any necessity of following the provisions of section 9, which require the levying of a processing tax. Certainly, at the best, it leaves the question as to whether a processing tax must be levied very much in doubt.

Now, it may be that taking the money directly from the Treasury is a preferable method of financing this reduction campaign; but if it is, Congress ought to pass upon the question directly, since it is a radical change from the policy outlined in the original act. In any event, it is a matter which should have more discussion than we can give it in these few minutes today. Had the bill been brought up under the general rules of the House so that amendments would have been in order, it was my intention to have offered an amendment to enable the House to decide definitely this matter of policy. Under the circumstances, however, that cannot be done.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Being in the cattle business and representing a cattle district, I am a strong advocate for the passage of this bill which declares cattle a basic agricultural commodity and which also provides for cattle reduction. The cattle industry is in worse condition than any industry in this country. The industry is prostrate, and unless some relief is granted to the farmers west of the Mississippi River to take care of their cattle, there can be no real restoration of good times. Cattle are selling today cheaper than they have sold in the last 50 years; they are selling for one third less than they did last year. Unless they are grown on grass entirely, they are not worth the feed that they consume. Fifty years ago, when there was not such good breeds of cattle, cows were selling in the Western States for $10 per head. Today high-class, well-bred, and in many instances registered purebred cows are selling for $10 per head. Steers that 3 years ago were selling for $75 and $80 per head are today a drag on the market at $20 per head. When we talk of substantial relief for the farmer, outside of the basic products of wheat and cotton, cattle comes next in that when they are sold the farmer gets a substantial sum of money that he can use to liquidate his obligations.

There is today a surplus over ordinary times of 10,000,000 cattle. Farmers have been refusing to sell in the last few years because of the unreasonable low prices. The first thing contemplated by this bill is to reduce the number of cattle, which will automatically have a tendency to increase the price of those remaining.

In my opinion, no better procedure could be followed than that which I advocated before the Committee on Agriculture, which is covered in this bill. Canner and cutter cows, which will at this time of the year average from 700 to 800 pounds apiece, can readily be purchased at 2½ cents per pound delivered at the packing houses in such centers as St. Louis, Kansas City, and Chicago. This would yield a good price to the farmer. By the purchase of 3,000,000 of these cows at an expense of possibly $60,000,000 it would not only mean the reduction of that many cows but approximately the equivalent of that many calves which these cows would produce this coming spring. It is, therefore, imperative that this measure be expedited.

There would be no great loss in the expenditure of this money for the purchase of these cattle for the reason they could be butchered and used in the relief program for the unemployed. The hide and other parts of the carcass would take care of a substantial portion of the cost of processing and delivering to the needy. It may be possible that this procedure would necessarily need to be duplicated in the future, but there is a sufficient amount available, under the terms of this bill, to take off the market a substantial portion of the surplus, especially if it is applied as it should be, for the purchase of the stock.

It is an overproduction, as well as a poor market, that depreciates the price of cattle. With a knowledge of the surplus on every farm in the country, the packers, who dominate the price of cattle and hogs, naturally beat down month by month the price of beef cattle. With the elimination of much of the surplus, and fairer times, cattle cannot help but rise in value.

It appears to be the opinion of the committee and the cattlemen's association that, after the reduction of cattle, the processing tax should apply. Under the terms and provisions of this bill, the agricultural agencies of the Government not only have the right to reduce the number of cattle, for which $200,000,000 is made available, but to apply the processing tax.

It is absolutely imperative that this Congress bring some relief to the prostrate cattle industry. This bill is a step in the right direction, and I feel sure, with the active, thoughtful, and promised cooperation of the cattlemen of the country, acting in conjunction with the Secretary of Agriculture, that this bill will mark the turning point for the increase of cattle prices.

Should it fail, this problem must be dealt with later. The cattlemen are not only facing a crisis; they are facing bankruptcy, and we must actively cooperate and bring relief. It may take 2 or 3 years to get back to a normal cattle market. This Congress should and will meet the emergency.

Mr. HOPE. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I certainly have no objection to the part of the bill that includes beef cattle as a basic agricultural commodity. It seems to me that all the witnesses that came before the Committee on Agriculture were unanimous in their wishes that beef cattle be included as a basic agricultural commodity. I feel that the need for a beef-cattle program is such that they should be included. I have no objection to the bill from that angle.

There is one objection, however, that I should like to mention at this time: I believe the amounts appropriated will not be adequate to give relief to both the beef and dairy industries. I do not believe it is a large enough appropriation. I realize, however, that it would be impossible to have a larger appropriation accepted by the House at this time.

May I call attention to the fact that recently at a meeting held at Wausau, Wis., the Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce and the Wisconsin Council of Agriculture on January 20, 1930, adopted a joint resolution in which they outlined a program which they felt was essential in order to give relief to the dairy industry. This program is quite lengthy and detailed. I call attention to the fact that their recommendation in connection with that dairy program was that $250,000,000 be appropriated for the dairy industry alone.

This bill provides for only $200,000,000, to be divided between the dairy industry and the beef-cattle industry. If a program is to be launched, which, in the opinion of the dairy people of my section, is to be helpful to the dairy industry, it will require a much larger appropriation than the amount authorized in this bill for the dairy industry.

I call attention to the fact that this group, representing the chambers of commerce and the farm interests of my section, was able to agree upon such a program, and they say that this program for dairying alone would require $250,000,000. They are explicit in their resolution that this amount of money be raised in some way other than by the issuance of a processing tax. I am glad the bill which is before you today is such that, in my opinion, it will not be necessary to invoke a processing tax in order to grant relief to the dairy industry or to the beef industry. Those two industries are in great need of this amount of money. They need it now. Although we are unable to get a larger amount, I believe this amount will be a tremendous benefit to the dairy and beef industry, and I ask for your favorable consideration.

In conclusion, I ask unanimous consent to include as a part of my remarks the dairy program agreed upon by the joint meeting of the Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce and the Wisconsin Council on Agriculture, at Wausau, Wis., on January 20, of this year. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

(Adopted and approved by the Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce and the Wisconsin Council of Agriculture at a joint meeting held at Wausau, Wis., on Jan. 20, 1934)

(A) A VOLUNTARY CONTROL PLAN FOR DAIRY PRODUCTS ON A BUTTER-FAT BASIS

I. Features of a central plan that are essential to meet present situation.

(a) Program must make dairying relatively more profitable to established dairymen who cooperate in the program.

(b) Must bring about a positive check, if not an actual decrease, in the sales from farms.

(c) Must discourage, rather than encourage, farmers engaged in other types of farming from becoming dairymen.

(d) Must be voluntary on the part of participating farmers, and, if possible, permit farmer to use his discretion as to methods of accomplishing the required reduction.

II. Taxes to provide money for benefit payments.

(a) Levy a processing tax collected on a butter-fat basis on all milk and milk products sold from the farm.

(b) Levy a compensating tax on dairy substitutes.

(c) The above processing and compensating taxes to be sufficient to finance adequate benefit payments.

III. Benefit payments to be paid to cooperating farmers.

(a) Benefit payments must be limited to contracting producers who actually effect reduction in sales.

(b) The method shall be by placing limitations on sales rather than on production, number of cows, or number of acres, because it permits dairymen to curb sales by culling low producers, disposing of diseased cows, less intensive feeding, or any other method that they may choose peculiar to their own individual farming business.

IV. Allocation and control of sales.

(a) A base allotment would be established from marketing records of creameries, cheese factories, condensaries, and milk plants covering a period of 5 years. Adjustments of base allotments to compensate for abnormal production conditions.

(b) Producer-distributors must furnish satisfactory evidence of past production to obtain base allotment.

(c) All sales of milk or milk products will be measured in terms of pounds of butter fat.

(d) Control agencies would concern themselves with only those who applied for benefits and submit evidence of proper adjustment of sales.

(B) SUPPLEMENTARY MEASURES FOR BENEFIT OF DAIRY INDUSTRY

I. American dairy farmers must be given preference in the domestic market if they are to reduce sales.

(a) Prevent importations of dairy products, fats and oils.

(b) Provide adequate internal taxes on dairy substitutes.

II. Emphasize bovine disease eradication.

(a) Offer an incentive to farmers to eradicate bovine tuberculosis and Bang's disease through sufficient indemnity to be paid upon proof of slaughter.

(b) Sufficient funds for carrying out such eradication programs should be drawn from appropriation to Department of Agriculture, similar to procedure now followed in paying indemnities for tuberculosis eradication.

III. Special emergency relief.

(a) It is desirable that Congress appropriate a special fund of at least $250,000,000 for an emergency relief program that will fit into the general plan of production control so as to permit the dairy farmer to dispose of dairy animals as a means of reducing sales, such fund to be raised from other sources than a processing tax.

IV. Purchase and distribution of dairy products for relief.

(a) Purchase of dairy products to be distributed to persons on relief should be continued and, if possible, used as a market stabilization feature through the making of purchases on the open market rather than on bids.

(b) All dairy products should be included in the purchasing program whenever advisable.

V. Develop a merchandising plan for dairy products.

(a) Give consideration to a program of increasing consumption of dairy products through an educational advertising program designed to create a lasting health and appetite appeal with the consuming public for dairy products.

(b) Develop uniform and adequate Federal standards of butter-fat content of dairy products with a view to improving quality and increasing consumption.

(c) Conduct research for finding new and more extensive uses of dairy products.

(The Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce has affiliated with it about 60 of the largest and most influential chambers of commerce and trade associations. The Wisconsin council of agriculture is composed of the oldest, broadly recognized and most experienced of the important farm organizations of Wisconsin. Other important farm organizations were independently represented. By agreement, the Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. K. S. Reynolds, H. S. Wells, and W. H. Gharrity. The Wisconsin council of agriculture appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. Herman Ihde, Charles Dineen, and C. G. Huppert. These two committees met jointly as a committee on planning in connection with the fifth annual meeting of the Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce, held at Wausau, on January 24, 1934. After hearing a great number of representatives of both business and agriculture and perusing a great many written plans for the relief of the dairy industry, the committee made the above report, which was unanimously adopted by the joint gathering of business men and farmers.)

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] such time as he may desire.

INCLUDE CATTLE AS A BASIC AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of this bill. I think it a most important measure, particularly for the industry affected. It was before Congress at the last session.

Cattle was made a basic commodity in the Agricultural Adjustment Act and was passed by the House as such and was stricken out by the Senate. Cattlemen at that time did not believe that cattle should be included in that bill. The cattlemen of the Nation now realize their mistake, and there is no doubt in my mind but what a large percent of the cattle raisers favor this measure. At the last meeting of the American National Livestock Association, held at Albuquerque, N.Mex., it was decided to leave this matter to the respective States, and out of 45 representing Texas in this matter, 40 voted to have cattle included as a basic commodity. I have received wires and letters from the cattlemen in my district, asking the approval of this measure. Cattle are selling lower today than a year ago and the industry is suffering more than it ever has in its history.

THE PROCESSING TAX

The argument is made that the processing tax will be passed back to the producer. That may or may not be true. It is argued by some that the processing tax has not helped the hog industry. Hogs are higher today than they were a year ago, and other economic factors bear heavy on this program.

Section 2 of this bill carries the following provision:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to finance, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, surplus reductions and production adjustments with respect to the dairy- and beef-cattle industries, and to make advance rental and/or benefit payments with respect thereto, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000,000.

This provision places the cattle industry on the same basis as other commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

THE CATTLEMAN—THE FORGOTTEN MAN

So far in the program the cattleman has been the forgotten man. The cattlemen are bankrupt. They need relief. They are not in a position to stand additional taxes. The appropriation provided for in this bill should be of material assistance in giving the industry a chance to get started should it be decided to invoke the processing tax as for other commodities. In any event, this measure should be speedily enacted so that this great industry can cooperate with the Department of Agriculture in working out not only their own salvation but render assistance in the whole recovery program. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] 2 minutes.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is very much question in regard to the status of the cattle business in America today. It is in a desperate condition. The producer and the man who is fattening beef are both vitally interested. It is only fitting and proper that we should consider the subject at this time.

I call attention to this very important fact: There is not only the angle of the dairy-cattle problem but also that of the beef-cattle situation. I view the latter as having two different phases composed of the man who is producing beef in the West and the man who is fattening beef in many parts of the country. I come from Iowa where the latter practice prevails. It is of the utmost importance that after the passage of this bill, and it will be passed I am sure, the Department of Agriculture give ample consideration to the men who are fattening beef cattle.

I have feeders in my district who have brought cattle into their yards within the last few months at a cost of as much as $6 and $6.10 per hundredweight, and they could not realize more than 4 cents a pound today. Those cattle are going to have to go to market at a terrific loss within the next few months unless something is done. I am particularly anxious to see that group taken care of under the provisions as outlined in this bill.

I feel it is only fitting and proper that we bring the cattlemen under the provisions of the A.A.A., for the reason that it will make a unified program. Any plan of agricultural relief that we undertake in America today should be united. We cannot have producers of one product going in one direction and the producers of another product going in another direction. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ARENS].

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Speaker, we have before us today an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act—A.A.A. It provides that beef cattle shall be added to the list of basic farm products and appropriates $200,000,000 to be used by the Department of Agriculture to deal with the problems of relief for the beef and dairy cattle industries. There is no objection to the adding of beef cattle to this list; in fact, the Secretary of Agriculture should be given authority to add any farm products to the list coming under the A.A.A. whenever an emergency exists.

An appropriation of $200,000,000 for one part of the farm industry is rather a large sum, but not too large, if considering the liberality of Congress for all other purposes, but I am wondering if the bottom of Uncle Sam's pocket will not soon be reached. To this sum will be added a large amount to be collected through a processing tax. It has been admitted by the Secretary of Agriculture, by packers, and by other witnesses before the Agricultural Committee that a large part, and in some instances the entire amount, is taken from the price paid to the farmer.

Mr. Wilson, a Chicago packer, being asked, said that the farmer was paying the processing tax and should not object to it because he would receive it back later on. The representatives of the beef industry unanimously opposed before the committee a processing tax, because at present the producers of beef could not afford it. The dairy industry has always opposed a processing tax and surely will oppose a tax as high as 5 cents per pound as proposed in this report of Mr. Wallace. If the processing tax is borne by the producer (farmer), then why a processing tax?

In Minnesota the processor is the cooperative creamery, and if the creamery is asked to pay the processing tax to the Government it in turn will have to deduct the amount from the price paid to the farmer for butter fat.

The processing tax for flour must be taken from the producer as well as the consumer according to the attached price quotations from the Jordan Independent, Jordan, Minn.:

	Aug. 6, 1908	Aug. 5, 1909	Feb. 1, 1934
Wheat	$1.10	$1.16	$0.79
Winter wheat	1.07	1.14	.78
Rye	.65	.60	.54
Corn	.60	.60	.39
Oats	.45		.27
Barley	.50	.40	.40
Butter	.18	.20	.25
Cream		.26	.23
Eggs	.16	.19	.17
Live hogs	6.00	6.80	3.35
Cattle	3.50	3.50
Veal	.04½	.04	.04½
Live chickens	.07	.08	.06
Spring chickens	.13	.13	.08
Ducks	.07	.06	.07
Geese	.07	.06	.07
Turkeys	.12	.10	.15
Potatoes	.60	.50	1.25
Flour	3.00	3.35	4.10
Bran	23.00	24.00	18.00
Shorts	23.00	25.00	18.00
Flour middlings	26.00	27.00	27.00

To take away from the farmer a large amount of money through the processing tax and use from this amount a substantial part for the operation of the large organization necessary to enforce this act and then pay the farmer back what there is left, is not solving the farmers' problems. The $200,000,000 appropriated shall be paid back by the farmer later on, as stated by Secretary Wallace to the Agricultural Committee on January 29, 1934, through the processing tax.

I agree with Mr. Wallace in his contention regarding the dairy industry, that he cannot fix the price of milk in a given area and not consider the price of butterfat as a whole. He cannot elevate the price of any farm product or the price of any part of any product with permanent success. He must help agriculture as a whole. He also must either take care of the surplus or control production. The processing tax and voluntary allotment does neither.

Under the voluntary allotment plan in Minnesota 60 percent of the total acreage sowed to wheat was signed, in Ohio only 30 percent. The total average did not exceed 50 percent. If the 50 percent that did not sign up increase their acreage, and there is plenty of evidence that they did, we will again be confronted with the usual 200,000,000 bushels surplus, unless the good Lord steps in and reduces the average yield.

In the voluntary hog-reduction program the farmers answered freely in supplying the 5,000,000 pigs for butchering, but when it came to deliver 1,000,000 piggy sows only 110,000 were delivered. The farmer was very careful to have plenty of pigs for next fall.

The Secretary of Agriculture, in order to get results for the farmer, if he insists on the processing tax, should fix a minimum price to be paid the farmer for his products when the processing tax goes into effect. Then the tax cannot be passed on to the farmer.

The allotment plan must be made compulsory. As long as all the products are taxed, all farmers should be compelled to come under the reduction program. Of course, this would be called a dictatorship and objectionable to the farmer, but we are doing many things in the name of emergency. This plan would be effective but I would suggest another plan, and to illustrate it will take the dairy industry as an example.

There is not a large surplus of dairy products at present and there will be no surplus as soon as the purchasing power of the public is restored. And any one of these compulsory plans should have to be enforced for 1 year only.

The present surplus of dairy products is not over 15 percent. The average price received by the northwest farmer for butter fat in 1933 was about 20 cents per pound.

The Secretary of Agriculture should issue a ruling that the purchaser of butter fat should pay the deliverer of butter fat for 85 percent of the amount delivered, a price to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture. This price should not be any higher than the consuming public is willing to pay in order not to create a new surplus. The price should be raised whenever general conditions warrant and when the purchasing power of the public is increased. The final price should be the cost of production. If the price of butter fat to begin with would be set at only 23 cents per pound, the farmer would receive immediate payment for 85 percent of his production and this amount would be equal to his total receipts in 1933. The general public, I believe, is willing to pay up to 30 cents per pound now and not reduce consumption and this would enable good creameries to pay 25 cents per pound.

The 15 percent of the total amount of butter fat for which the farmer does not get paid at once constitutes the surplus, and should be taken over by the Government and if possible disposed of or held for time of shortage. The Government should dispose of it first to the relief organizations, and, secondly, should be sold abroad if possible. The receipts should be used for operation of this program and the balance, if any, be returned to the farmer.

Under this program the farmer would be reminded of the seriousness of a surplus every time he markets his products and would reduce voluntarily. This program would be easy to put into effect and not expensive to the public. It is the principle of the McNary-Haugen bill. If it was tried for 1 year and some other proposed remedies applied, it would solve the dairy program. In wheat, cotton, pork, and beef it would probably have to be extended over 1 year.

All the above measures are considered emergency help. To bring agriculture permanently back on its feet it is necessary to provide at once other remedies, some of which we mention in the following:

We must create more markets and proper distribution for our farm products. It is my contention that there is not an overproduction of farm products in the world. With the exception of cotton, pork, and wheat there is no overproduction in the United States. The Government should continue and complete its program to help farmers market their products through their own organizations. It should prevent the necessity of farm products having to pass through the bottleneck of the boards of trade and chambers of commerce, through hands of unnecessary middlemen that have added to the cost of the product by taking their profit without having added one single iota to the value of the product or having performed a necessary service.

The Government should see to it that the largest part of the consumer's dollar is returned to the producer.

The Government should see to it that proper trade relations are established with other nations so that our surplus farm products can be traded off to them.

We have been told that there is no foreign market left for our products. The German Ambassador told me the following:

> Germany is living almost altogether today on what she produces. She still has a good deal of unemployed and does not eat and use any more than she can produce or buy.

Providing all her people were working and if her entire population could obtain all they desired, she could consume one third more than at present. She cannot buy for cash because she has no cash.

Germany produces a good many articles that we can use that are absolutely excluded by our high tariff. Germany and, in fact, all European countries would like to carry on an international trade with the United States, but are forced to abstain because of our high tariff.

Germany today for every dollar's worth we buy of her buys $1.80 worth of us. Statistics from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce show that she bought extensively of us in 1923 under a reasonable tariff as compared to today. (See tables.)

Exports to Germany

	1923	1932
Corn	$4,680,653	$113,136
Rye	10,868,482	153,546
Wheat	2,781,100	981,855
Wheat flour	6,288,135	164,219
Bacon	11,132,555	33,374
Lard	46,352,868	9,425,446
Oleo oil	1,481,637	776,649
Fresh beef	1,000,002	844,000
Total	84,585,432	12,492,224

The Ambassador also stated that the operators of textile mills in Germany, Belgium, and Holland are buying most of their raw cotton from India on account of the difference of the monetary system. Silver is the money used by India as well as the money of China. And in order to gain the markets of India, China, and the South American Republics, remonitization of silver is necessary.

Labor unions and manufacturers will probably object to a policy of encouraging imports. By Congress readjusting tariffs or granting a commission, or the President, the power to adjust tariffs or trade agreements, would enable us to trade with all nations to the fullest extent.

Reestablishment and the developing of new markets coupled with a permanent policy of crop control would bring about a demand for all our commodities at good prices.

Permanent crop reduction should be brought about by the elimination of tubercular cows, hogs, and poultry, also by withdrawing small tracts of unusable and submarginal lands from cultivation. The Government should encourage the planting of wood lots. Federal and State Governments should at least help furnish trees and reduce the taxes on land planted to trees until some returns could be derived therefrom, and, by all means, stop the building of dams and ditches to create new land.

These measures enacted, I believe would solve the farm question and would avoid new bureaus and dictators.

The farmer would be free to develop his home and could launch a program of home improvement which would create a tremendous market for manufactured goods. This plan if placed into effect immediately would aid labor and industry to such an extent that they would soon forget the competition of foreign labor.

Agriculture would be better served if farmers could produce unrestrained by Government supervision and not encouraged by Government subsidies. Equality in tariff by lowering of the enormous high tariff on manufactured goods and an equal tariff on the competing agricultural goods especially oils and fats. Immediate freedom of the Philippines, so imports of oils and sugar from them could be regulated, and an elastic tariff that can be adjusted immediately to enable us to trade with other nations. I would prefer to try along this line rather than to resort to dictatorial methods of reduced production and a continuous dipping into the Public Treasury.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 118

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein my own remarks on House Joint Resolution 118.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Commissioner from the Philippines?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

House Joint Resolution 118, to provide for the return to the Philippine Islands of unemployed Filipinos resident in the continental United States, to authorize appropriations to accomplish that result, and for other purposes

Whereas there are large numbers of natives from the Philippine Islands residing in continental United States who have fallen into financial distress, are not employed, have been and are beneficiaries of public and private charity; and

Whereas the removal of these Filipino wards of public and private charitable organizations and these unemployed Filipinos would relieve the local burden now borne by the cities and communities in which they live; and

Whereas there is a growing and wide-spread desire among these unemployed and financially distressed Filipinos to return to the Philippine Islands if a way could be provided for their passage, transportation, and maintenance en route from continental United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That any native of the Philippine Islands residing in continental United States, or the Territories of the United States, on the date this resolution is enacted, without regard to the date of his last entry into continental United States, or the Territories of the United States, who has fallen into financial distress and is not employed, and who desires to return to the Philippine Islands, may voluntarily apply to the Secretary of Labor through any officer of the Immigration Service for removal from the United States or Territories at Government expense in the manner provided by section 23 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, as amended. After an investigation of the facts and approval by him of the application, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Secretary of the Navy and to the Secretary of War and commercial steamship companies controlled by citizens of the United States and operating ships of United States registry as hereinafter provided all names of Filipinos eligible to be returned to the Philippine Islands under the terms of this resolution.

SEC. 2. Every such native of the Philippine Islands who is named in a certificate from the Secretary of Labor, to either the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, or commercial steamship companies controlled by citizens of the United States and operating ships of United States registry as hereinafter provided, shall be entitled to passage and maintenance on either Navy transports or Army transports, whenever space is available, or any ship of United States registry operated by any commercial steamship company controlled by citizens of the United States that has a contract with the Secretary of Labor as hereinafter provided, for continuous journey from a port on the west coast of continental United States, or from a port in any Territory of the United States, to the port of Manila, P.I.

SEC. 3. Concurrent authority is granted the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War to use their discretion regarding distribution and sailing dates for transports available for natives of the Philippine Islands eligible to the benefits of this resolution. The Secretary of Labor is hereby directed to contract with any commercial steamship company controlled by citizens of the United States operating ships under United States registry that will agree to passage and maintenance to Manila, P.I., at rate as low as, or lower than, the rate charged under this resolution for passage and maintenance on Army transports and with other facilities in the United States for any transportation authorized by this resolution other than that furnished by the Army or Navy transports.

SEC. 4. Authority is hereby granted to appropriate, from moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, necessary amounts to carry out the provisions of this resolution and to pay the actual expense incurred in the transportation from their present residence in continental United States or in the Territories of the United States to the port of Manila, P.I., and maintenance en route, of every native of the Philippine Islands entitled to the benefits of this resolution.

SEC. 5. Authority is granted to the Legislature of the Philippine Islands to initiate necessary procedure to appropriate from the treasury of the Philippine Islands sufficient funds to reimburse the Government of the United States such amounts as may be expended from the United States Treasury for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

SEC. 6. Appropriations to carry out the provisions of this resolution shall be administered by the Secretary of Labor. A special fund shall be set aside for this purpose, and all expenses, including those incurred by the Navy Department and the War Department, shall be charged thereto.

SEC. 7. No application for the benefits of this resolution shall be accepted by any office of the Immigration Service after December 1, 1933; and all benefits under this resolution shall finally terminate on December 31, 1933, unless an application is approved and journey has been started before that date; in that case the journey to Manila shall be completed.

SEC. 8. Nothing in this resolution shall be construed as authority to deport any native of the Philippine Islands, and no native of the Philippine Islands removed from continental United States or from the Territories of the United States under the provisions of this resolution shall hereafter be held to have been deported from the United States.

SEC. 9. In all cases preference shall be given, when arranging for passage and maintenance of Filipinos entitled to the benefits of this resolution between continental United States or the Territories of the United States and Manila, P.I., to steamships under United States registry operated by such commercial steamship company or companies as the Secretary of Labor is able to enter into contracts with for a rate for such passage and maintenance which is as low as, or lower than, the rate offered for such passage and maintenance aboard Army transports: Provided, That no commercial steamship company transporting Filipinos to Manila, P.I., under the provisions of this resolution shall be required to pay Federal tax upon the passage and maintenance charged for such transportation.

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to provide for the return to the Philippine Islands of unemployed Filipinos resident in the continental United States or the Territories thereof, to authorize appropriations to accomplish that result, and for other purposes."

House Joint Resolution 549

Joint resolution to provide for the return to the Philippine Islands of unemployed Filipinos resident in the continental United States, to authorize appropriations to accomplish that result, and for other purposes

Whereas there are large numbers of natives from the Philippine Islands residing in continental United States who have fallen into financial distress, are not employed, have been and are beneficiaries of public and private charity; and

Whereas the removal of these Filipino wards of public and private charitable organizations and these unemployed Filipinos would relieve the local burden now borne by the cities and communities in which they live; and

Whereas there is a growing and wide-spread desire among these unemployed and financially distressed Filipinos to return to the Philippine Islands if a way could be provided for their passage, transportation, and maintenance en route from continental United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That any native of the Philippine Islands residing in the continental United States on the date this resolution is enacted, who has fallen into financial distress and is not employed, and who desires to return to the Philippine Islands, may, without regard to the date of last entry into continental United States, voluntarily apply to the Secretary of Labor, through any office of the Immigration Service for removal from the United States at Government expense pursuant to the provisions of section 23 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, as amended. After an investigation of the facts and approval by him of the application, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Secretary of the Navy and to the Secretary of War all names of Filipinos eligible to be returned to the Philippine Islands under the terms of this resolution.

SEC. 2. Every native of the Philippine Islands who is named in a certificate from the Secretary of Labor, to either Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, shall be entitled to passage and maintenance on either Navy transports or Army transports, whenever space is available, for continuous journey from a port on the west coast of continental United States to the port of Manila, P.I.

SEC. 3. Concurrently authority is granted to the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War to use their discretion regarding distribution and sailing dates for transports available for natives of the Philippine Islands eligible to the benefits of this resolution.

SEC. 4. Authority is hereby granted to appropriate, from moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, necessary amounts to carry out the purposes of this resolution and to pay the actual expense to the United States for the transportation from their present residence in continental United States to the port of Manila, P.I., and maintenance en route, of every native of the Philippine Islands found eligible to the benefits of this resolution.

SEC. 5. Authority is granted to the Legislature of the Philippine Islands to initiate necessary procedure to appropriate from the treasury of the Philippine Islands sufficient funds to reimburse the Government of the United States such amounts as may be expended from the United States Treasury for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

SEC. 6. Appropriations to carry out the provisions of this resolution shall be administered by the Secretary of Labor, and all disbursements shall be from a special fund set aside for this purpose.

SEC. 7. No application for the benefits of this resolution shall be accepted by any office of the Immigration Service after December 1, 1934; and all benefits under this resolution shall finally terminate on December 31, 1934, unless an application is approved and journey has been started before that date; in that case the journey to Manila shall be completed.

SEC. 8. Nothing in this resolution shall be construed as authority to deport any native of the Philippine Islands, and no native of the Philippine Islands removed from continental United States under the provisions of this resolution shall hereafter be held to have been deported from the United States.

SEC. 9. The Secretary of Labor is authorized to use the general immigration fund now available, in his discretion, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution until such time as Congress shall appropriate a separate fund for this purpose.

SEC. 10. This act shall take effect upon its acceptance by concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature.

STATEMENT OF HON. CAMILO OSIAS, RESIDENT COMMISSIONER FROM THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am in favor of the object and purpose of House Joint Resolution 549, and wish to express my appreciation for the spirit that is behind the presentation of this measure. It is calculated to relieve suffering here and to benefit countrymen of mine in the United States who are unemployed and in distress.

I should like to state for the record, and for the information of my own people, that in the 4 years I have served in Congress, during which I have at different times appeared before this Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the decision has invariably, without exception, been fair and just to our interests. The passage of this resolution, perhaps with certain amendments, would be a happy sequence to that record established by this committee. Let it be made clear that the return of Filipinos to the islands according to the measure would be voluntary, not compulsory.

Mr. Chairman, before the American occupation of the Philippines there were practically no Filipinos in the United States. By 1920 there were about 5,600. When I testified before congressional committees in 1931 I made a very careful check of all the available data and under oath said that there were in the neighborhood of 55,000 in the United States. The estimate of the Secretary of Labor this morning was about 51,000 in the whole country, although the estimate of the assistant to the Secretary of Labor who testified was that there were 60,000 in Los Angeles County alone. I am inclined to think that the latter figure is too high, but I do not want to engage in a dispute. I have, however, Mr. Chairman, made a study of this, as it is my duty to do, and I wish to give estimates from the most exhaustive work published dealing with Filipino immigration, by Mr. Bruno Lasker. On page 349 I find this statement:

We thus arrive at the following estimate of the total number of Filipinos on the mainland of the United States:

Resident Filipinos enumerated in 1920, 5,603.

Excess of arrivals over departures of steerage passengers from and to the Philippines and Hawaii, 1920–29, 48,480.

Excess of arrivals over departures from and to other ports, 1920–29, 2,000.

Total, 56,083.

I naturally must respect the official estimates of governmental agencies in the United States Government, and according to the last census there were in the neighborhood of 45,000. According to the report of the Secretary of War, the next to the last one published, there were 45,000. I should say that now, if those figures are accurate, the number ought to be less, because there have been more returning to the Philippines and less coming in, owing to the knowledge that a wide-spread depression exists in the continental United States.

Furthermore, there are in the neighborhood of 65,000 Filipinos in Hawaii, and I am quite certain that the number in the continental United States must be considerably less.

I should like to leave with the committee a little picture, if I may, Mr. Chairman. In the early part of the American occupation, in the beginning, the number of Filipinos here was practically negligible. Then came the American occupation and its direct and indirect influence upon us. We were schooled under American teachers; we had American officials; we used American books that depicted the glories of America as the wonderful land of opportunity. Then our government, in cooperation with the American administrators who were interested in fostering better relations between the two countries and to hasten our preparation for self-government, adopted the policy of sending Filipino students to the United States at the expense of the Filipino people and the Philippine government.

The first group of students came in 1903. They were welcomed with open arms in California. Many of them stayed in the schools and colleges there, and, of course, because of their just and fair treatment, they wrote glowing letters to the Philippine Islands praising the spirit of America and the hospitality of the American people.

The coming of Filipino students continued for several years, and I myself belong to the group that came to the United States in 1905. Many of those students have since returned. Some of them have achieved a little measure of success.

Naturally, the influence of all these has contributed toward inviting or toward influencing young Filipinos to come here in search of new culture and to familiarize themselves with America and things American.

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but the steamship companies in fostering their own business waged a nation-wide campaign in the Philippines to encourage Filipinos to come to America, and, statements to the contrary notwithstanding, there were commercial interests that labored to induce Filipinos to come here and be employed at low wages. These account for the influx of Filipinos here.

A little change in sentiment came about in the United States of late with respect to the attitude toward Filipinos. That gained publicity in the islands, and our people have not been encouraged to come here as they once were. You can see, therefore, Mr. Chairman, the forces that have operated to bring in a number of Filipinos to this country.

When they settled in large numbers in different localities, especially on the Pacific coast, a new problem was created, economic and social, now accentuated by the world-wide depression, and, for the information of my people as well may I say for the record, that they may later read it, the estimates of the number of Americans unemployed have, from the accounts that I have read, varied from 10 to 13 million.

Now, once the Philippine people learn of the passage of this resolution they will avail themselves of its provisions. I want to say that the Commissioners here, Mr. GUEVARA and myself, will cooperate in the enactment of the resolution and in carrying it out into practice.

I should like to make a minor suggestion that in section 7, lines 5 and 6, you strike out "1933" and in lieu thereof put "1934."

I have reasons for making the suggestion, Mr. Chairman. Listening to the representatives of this Government here today I find that even if we would expedite the working out of this legislation it would take some little time to transport Filipinos from the United States to Manila; and I think if we put this amendment in, we will be in a better position to carry out the purpose of the law.

Mr. JENKINS. What would the gentleman think of this kind of amendment: Provided, That the law should operate for 1 year after the date it went into effect?

Mr. OSIAS. I think the remarks of the gentleman tend toward the same end, and I would abide by his judgment, knowing his better knowledge of the wording of legislation.

Mr. JENKINS. In other words, you think a year would be sufficient, do you not, to meet the emergency?

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Chairman, I have watched the processes of enacting legislation in both Houses of the Congress of the United States [laughter], and I think that more could be accomplished if you make it 1934 instead of 1933.

I should like to invite the attention of the committee, also, to section 5. If it is contemplated that the government of the Philippines shall reimburse the amount of expense that is incurred in whole or in part, it would be necessary to add a new section, say, section 10, reading somewhat as follows:

"This act shall take effect upon its acceptance by a concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature."

The two reasons for the suggestions are: First, that under our laws the auditor cannot authorize the expenditure of a single cent from Government funds unless expressly authorized by law.

Secondly, there is a principle involved. If some amount of money is to be expended by the Philippine government, it is but fair that the Philippine Legislature concur in it, or we would be establishing a very bad precedent. However, if that is not contemplated in the law, then I should say the section suggested would not be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. We felt that if the Philippine people feel themselves morally obligated in some way to the United States, this would give them the right to present that to their legislature, but that of itself does not stop the procedure, you understand. The American Government will proceed along the lines as outlined by the resolution, to give every unemployed Filipino who makes application an opportunity to depart. At the same time this section 5 simply provides that if the Philippine government is willing to reimburse the United States, we will not have any objection to taking it.

Mr. OSIAS. With that understanding I simply throw out the suggestion and abide by the combined wisdom of the members of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. We appreciate the thought and take it into consideration.

Mr. OSIAS. In closing, Mr. Chairman, may I just leave this as a last picture? The object of returning Filipinos to the Philippine Islands, especially in the midst of these hard times, is a most laudable one, and I can say to you that the Filipinos in our homeland would certainly be better off than they are in the United States. The rigors of the climate and our social customs argue in support of my statement.

I should like to quote in closing one short paragraph from this book that I hold in my hand. Speaking of the problems of destitution that obtain in the United States, after analyzing the habits of the Filipinos and their custom of taking care of themselves and their close relatives and friends, the author makes this statement:

"In short, frequent statements to the contrary notwithstanding, it may be said with certainty that under present circumstances, that is, with the given aids and sex composition of the group, the Filipinos in America do not tend to become a public charge and do not throw a heavy burden upon organized charity."

That was more true, of course, before these unusual and extraordinary times came upon the world.

The CHAIRMAN. I think each individual member of the committee will agree with me that we do not want to go into that question, but we do feel that there is an unusual condition existing at this time and that the Filipinos seem to have more difficulty than any other group in the situation in which they find themselves; and in view of the fact that the Filipinos want to get their independence and everything else that goes with it, we thought it would be an act of kindness to alleviate their condition by giving them an opportunity to go back to their homeland and at the same time they are removed from the need of charity and the dangers that go with their present situation.

Mr. OSIAS. The chairman's remarks oblige me to reiterate my appreciation. Of course, we are very happy that the prime purpose of having Filipino Resident Commissioners here was to have them work for an independence act, and that having been accomplished I think it is well that we should follow it with a piece of legislation like this, which I trust may be the precursor of a series of acts that will enhance the friendship between the United States and the Philippine Islands.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much, Commissioner. We will now hear Commissioner GUEVARA.

JANUARY 5, 1934.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. DICKSTEIN: I was in the Philippine Islands for several months while the Congress was not in session, and I found the sentiment favorable to your bill for the voluntary repatriation of Filipinos in the United States who are unemployed and in distress. On my return I stopped at Honolulu and conferred with representative elements of the Filipinos in Hawaii to get their reaction on the measure you presented, and they unanimously favored the enactment of your bill for the relief of unemployed Filipinos in the continental United States and in Hawaii. You and your Committee on Immigration and Naturalization know my views as I spoke in favor of your bill when you conducted hearings on it.

The purpose of my writing you is to transmit views I gathered among my countrymen in the Philippines and in Hawaii, and to urge that the Dickstein bill in question be pushed to final passage because I am convinced that its enactment would be beneficial to labor and the laborers, both in the United States and in the Philippines.

Very sincerely yours,

CAMILO OSIAS.

CATTLE AS A BASIC AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, there are as many, and, perhaps, more, cattle grown in my district than in any other one district in the United States. Ninety-nine percent, I am sure, of the cattlemen in my section are broke if their debts were paid. These men think as I do—that this is the only way they can get relief.

There is no industry in the United States that has been hit as hard as the cattle-producing industry of the country, and every other business that I know has shown some improvement, perhaps with Government help, during the last year.

This bill, you will recall, passed the House at the last session and cattle were eliminated by another body. There is all the more reason now for its passage, and I sincerely hope and believe that the measure will receive the vote of an overwhelming majority of the Members of this House. I am strongly in favor of this bill. I wish time were allotted in order that we may go into some of the details, but that is not necessary. Everybody seems to realize there must be prompt and effective action. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. KAHN].

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, with me it is not a question of the merits or the demerits of this bill, but I have sat here appalled at the fact that practically without discussion, with no opportunity to amend, with the proponents of some of these bills acknowledging they have no idea how they are going to work out, in 3 hours we have appropriated $1,185,000,000—in 3 hours, mind you—above and beyond the proposed Budget of the President as submitted to us less than 30 days ago.

It seems to me it is just about time that we stopped, thought, and considered. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER].

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, let me add in the short time allotted to me a few words in support of what the lady from California has just said.

It seems to me we are listening to a very strange philosophy of government when it is enough to have someone get up here and say that a particular industry needs the money; that a large percentage of the people in that industry need the money; and without more consideration or justification we ask the Federal Government to appropriate $200,000,000 for that industry.

I have no doubt but that many other activities are in the same condition, whether they are agricultural activities or manufacturing activities, and if it were merely enough of a showing that the people in a particular line of business are to a great extent bankrupt—if that is enough to get the money, then there certainly would never be an end to Federal expenditure.

I say very solemnly that the time is coming, the time is really here now, when we must hesitate before we go into the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars without any thought of where the money is coming from.

Mr. Speaker, it is our children and our children's children who are going to be paying the bill for the expenditures we are making today. Make no doubt about that. This money has to be paid for in some way. We are spending it day after day with a liberal hand, but we do not know where it is coming from when the time comes to pay it. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, in deference to my good friend, Mrs. KAHN, from California, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. HOLLISTER, particularly, I call attention to this book of hearings which were had before the Committee on Agriculture on the amendment now before us from January 4 and concluded on January 26. As a matter of fact, this should show that there has not been any desire on the part of the committee to rush anything through here except insofar as it pertains to meeting the emergency in this way.

When you consider this amendment and the facts involved, you will find, in reviewing the condition of the beef-cattle industry and the dairy-cattle industry, that there is no group in more dire distress than these two industries embrace.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. What does the gentleman say about the manufacturing industries of the country, where there is practically nothing left but bankruptcy?

Mr. KLEBERG. To what industry does the gentleman refer?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Well, the machine-tool industry, for instance; would the gentleman be in favor of appropriating $100,000,000 to that industry?

Mr. KLEBERG. I do not know about that. What the Committee on Agriculture has tried to do is to bring about a condition of affairs where the tools the gentleman refers to will again be employed and those who wield the tools at least will be paid for their labor.

As a matter of fact, in the history of this country there has never been a condition where the basic industry has been confronted by such a situation as it is today—where all other industry in industrial lines of endeavor find themselves in the deepest depression and despair.

The purpose we have in offering this amendment under suspension of the rules is to enable us to take the most immediate step possible to formulate a program under this amendment to relieve these great industries referred to.

I should like to call attention to the fact that the four basic crops—cotton, corn, wheat, and tobacco—utilized 191,000,000 acres. By comparison with these four crops the cattle and dairy industries, represented in this bill, utilized 1,300,000,000 acres.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken, and, two thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I rise in behalf of the now pending bill which will authorize an appropriation of $200,000,000 direct from the Treasury of the United States for the immediate and necessary relief of the cattle industry, both for dairy- and beef-cattle producers.

It is my information and understanding that if cattle are made a basic commodity, which is a provision of this bill, that the money to be spent as the above appropriation will not be raised from a processing tax at the present time. The money is to be a direct grant from the Treasury and is to be paid back at some time in the future when and if the price of cattle reaches a point where the cattle raisers will receive the cost of production plus a reasonable profit.

I would not support this bill if I did not have definite assurance that this would be done. It is my understanding that the Government will proceed to purchase and kill canner cattle and cows at an approximate price of not less than $17.50, with a fair prospect of paying as much as $20 a head. It will also be the intention to pay to the producers in the form of a bounty for the spading of heifer calves.

This measure was formulated and sent to Congress after an extensive study and exhaustive hearings, during which time practically every representative of the cattle industry was allowed to present his views. It is a foregone conclusion that a great many people will disagree with what is being done and undertaken in the bill; but it is also a matter of fact that the cattle industry, under the present prices and demoralized conditions, cannot survive except for a very limited period of time. Everyone concerned, while they may not agree upon the details of the legislation, must agree and are unanimous in the opinion that the Government must take some step to improve present conditions in the cattle industry.

If this legislation does not produce the desired results, the bill gives wide and discretionary powers to the President and the Secretary of Agriculture which will enable them, after a fair trial has been had, to change the course of efforts. The measure is at least a start in the right direction. I believe that after a reasonable trial it will produce at least a portion of the desired benefits which we, who represent the cattle industry, are striving to obtain.

I am greatly disappointed that the amendment which I proposed to introduce to the measure, making sugar beets a basic commodity also, was adjudged not germane to the legislation we are now considering by the rules of the House.

It was my intention to offer an amendment to appropriate a sum of $25,000,000 from the Federal Treasury, immediately, in order to enable the Department of Agriculture to pay a bonus of $1.50 per ton on all sugar beets and cane grown and delivered to the processors during the year 1933.

I believe I am familiar with the conditions prevailing at the present time among the sugar-beet-raising farmers. They have been forced, by unfair and unreasonable contracts, to grow and produce sugar beets at a price which is far below the cost of production until they now find themselves, after years of hard and honest work, practically without funds to continue further activities. They have been unable to cope and contract, with any degree of success, with the sugar processors of their respective territories. They have been the victims of unfair, dishonest, and unreasonable contracts which enabled the sugar manufacturers to pay a multitude of cash and stock dividends to the detriment and impoverishment of the beet growers themselves.

The amendment which I intended to propose would guarantee on all further contracts under the prevailing cost of production at the present time that the beet farmers receive not less than $6.50 per ton for their beets, and would also make it mandatory for the Secretary of Agriculture to act as an arbiter to see that all further contracts relating to prices, tares, and sugar contents are fair and reasonable and that if in the future the cost of production should rise above this figure, the farmers' price would rise in proportion. This would protect the domestic sugar growers in the matter of quotas and would enable him to expand the present production to 2,000,000 tons per annum.

I am quite hopeful in regard to such legislation as it is my understanding that in the very near future the administration intends to offer at least a part of the ideas embodied above for the consideration of Congress. While this legislation does not meet with my entire approval, it is at least a step in the right direction and from all indications will eventually bring benefits to both the cattle and sugar-beet industries.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, the fact that the American cattle industry is in a very serious condition is scarcely debatable. It is a matter of common knowledge that both the dairy-cattle and the beef-cattle men have suffered terrifically during the last few years. The United States Government has even made extensive loans in the western sections of the country in an effort to save the business from a complete collapse. Prices have continued to drop. The foreclosure of obligations long past due has left the rancher in a pitiful condition, while the price of finished beef has been such that the feeder could not pay his notes.

The Omaha Daily Journal Stockman said in the issue of January 1, 1934, that—

> For the fifth consecutive year cattle prices averaged lower during 1933 than they had been in the preceding 12 months. Closing declines were not great, less than a dollar in most instances, but they carried values on the various classes to the lowest levels in between 30 and 40 years.

There are at least two dominant causes of this situation. In the first place, the demand for meat products has been extremely narrow, due to the panic that has swept the land during the last few years.

Furthermore, in the face of a widespread economic collapse that has occasioned the decreasing demand, our productive capacity in terms of numbers of animals is on the increase, which only serves to occasion further complications. Beef-cattle numbers began to increase in 1928. Milk cows have also been increasing since about 1927. Moreover, the increase has extended up into the North Atlantic States, where the number had previously been on the decline for many years.

It is perfectly evident from this sketchy picture that it is only fitting and proper for the Congress of the United States to consider the plight of the cattlemen. The method to be followed in relieving the situation is one that has been very difficult to determine. This much we know to be a fact.

We have an established policy of agricultural relief that should be given a trial. The administration during the extra session of Congress adopted what is known as the "Agricultural Adjustment Act." If we are to grant the fact that the situation of cattlemen is unusually difficult and endeavor to map a program for their relief, it would seem only natural that cattle should be included as a basic product under the provisions of the three A's, as provided in H.R. 7478. With this thought in mind I desire to call a few specific angles of the situation to the attention of the country and of the Congress, especially with reference to beef.

In this field it is the man who produces cattle on the range and likewise the man in the Middle West who fattens them in his feed lots who deserve consideration. In my district we have hundreds of the latter group who are now faced with an extremely severe problem. My continuous residence on an Iowa farm since birth has placed me in an advantageous position to observe this particular angle of the problem. Today there are thousands of cattle on feed in southwest Iowa that went into the lots at prices ranging as high as 6 cents or better that today would not bring 4 cents per pound. When we begin to talk about relief of cattlemen I think we should take this particular group into consideration. That is why I am making these remarks in connection with my affirmative vote on the bill under discussion.

In the first place, that man is faced at present not only with the low price of his finished product but also the fact that the price of corn has been set at 45 cents a bushel. Every single one of us who is in the farming game is delighted to see the price of the grain at that level and hope it goes higher. But we also want the price of finished meat products on the hoof to be at such a level that it will warrant the feeding of the 45-cent corn.

I understand the principle of this measure to be a reduction in the number of range cows, with the thought in mind that the supply of calves and cattle can thereby be reduced. The theory also goes on to indicate that a scarcity of such livestock going into the feed yards of the country will have a tendency to increase the price of finished beef. That is probably true. At this juncture, however, I am particularly interested in the farmers of my district who have invested their money in feeding cattle at a price substantially higher than can be realized for the finished product on the present market and who will not receive the benefit of such a program in time. I feel justified in urging upon the administration the necessity of incorporating provisions that will take care of this particular group of men who are facing financial annihilation within the next few months. They cannot feed their 45-cent corn to the cattle they have in their yards, sell them at present prices, and make out. Furthermore, they cannot balance their books by discontinuing their feeding operations. That act would necessitate the sacrifice of their half-finished product at ruinously low price levels.

When the Secretary of Agriculture prescribes regulations for the application of this proposed act, provision must be made for the relief of the group I have just described if the cattle-feeding business is to return to a healthy condition. It is possible that benefits can be paid to feeders on the basis of an adjustment per bushel of corn fed, as between the loan value of 45 cents and the price received for it as beef, in return for reductions in the number of cattle going back into the farmers' lot or reductions in the number of calves grown on the farm, or both, where the latter is insignificant.

I also want to suggest another very important angle to the cattle problem that applies both to beef and dairy products. It should be considered as an integral part of the program to be mapped out under the provisions of the bill now before the Congress.

I have always been a firm believer in the advantages of advertising. I have noticed that many manufacturers have built up a tremendous trade through a well-planned program of Nation-wide, and sometimes world-wide, advertising. At this juncture I make bold to say that some manufacturers have even gone so far as to use meat products as a stepping stone for realizing their ambition of greater sales. I dare say it would be rather difficult to prevent the insertion in an advertisement of such statements as "more sustaining than meat", but certainly the practice is extremely selfish and would not be tolerated in a code of fair competition.

I think a portion of the funds we are appropriating for the relief of the cattle industry along with portions of others under the Agricultural Adjustment Act should be devoted to a well-organized and carefully planned Nation-wide program of advertising for the purpose of selling to the American people the merits of meat and dairy products. I am confident such action would serve to arrest the steady decline in the per capita consumption of beef that has occurred in recent years. That program should include appeals through the channel of daily and weekly newspapers, magazines, trade journals, radio broadcasts, and educational programs extending over a long-time period.

If we could increase the per capita consumption of meat 3 pounds annually, which I dare say you will admit is a comparatively small amount, it would mean a total increase in consumption in the United States of more than 500,000,000 pounds of such products. Increased demand should have a beneficial effect upon the market prices, particularly for cattle, hogs, and sheep, on the open markets.

The Department of Agriculture and various organizations, such as the National Livestock and Meat Board, have been endeavoring to conduct some extensive research programs with reference to the value of meat from the standpoint of its nutrition. Meat charts and much data of that nature have been prepared and should be made available to the public, especially in the populous areas of our country.

A special effort should be exerted to contact doctors, dentists, and dietitians who are in positions that afford them an opportunity to increase the consumption of meat.

As stockmen and cattle feeders, most of us do not stop to consider the vital importance of our Nation's housewives in relation to the industry in which we are interested. The housewives perform the stupendous task of preparing and serving a great portion of the Nation's meat supply. Every 24 hours more than 41,000,000 pounds of meat are placed on the family table by Mrs. American Housewife. The extent to which meat is used on the American breakfast, dinner, and supper tables is of great concern to the producers of livestock in all parts of our country. I was reminded of that fact by the remarks of my colleague the Honorable JENNINGS RANDOLPH, of West Virginia, favoring the passage of this bill that makes cattle a basic product under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. We would not normally think of that State as being an interested producer of cattle.

Another phase of this advertising program should include instructions as to ways and means of cooking meats. Many a good steak or roast has been completely ruined through improper handling over the fire. I dare say that every efficient housewife will welcome assistance and information of this kind, especially when it is issued through official channels as part of the program to increase the consumption of meat with a view to improving the financial condition of American farms and ranches.

I mention these important angles to the cattle situation because I want to impress them upon everyone who may be concerned with the operation of the bill that is about to be enacted into law. They should be incorporated in the finished picture. I trust that after the passage of this measure all of the various phases of the industry will cooperate in an effort to draw up as satisfactory a series of regulations as possible. There will undoubtedly be portions of the program that will not meet with the approval of everyone. We must realize, however, that a uniform program for agricultural relief is necessary if we are to succeed in our herculean undertaking. Cattle constitute a major product and thus are of the utmost concern to producers. It seems only reasonable that they should be included in the Agricultural Adjustment Act if we are to advance along all fronts simultaneously. Personally I feel confident that we will be able to develop the proposed relief measure in such a manner that it will serve the dairy interests, the beef producer, and the feeder of beef cattle, all of whom deserve consideration and proper assistance at this critical period.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the majority leadership of the House has seen fit to have this very important piece of legislation considered under suspension, which, of course, limits debate to 40 minutes and bars amendments, regardless of their merit. The absurdity and the travesty of this performance can be appreciated when it is realized that few more important pieces of legislation have been considered in this Congress, and that, notwithstanding the fact that practically the entire Membership of the House is vitally interested in the measure, the procedure under which it is considered will allow practically no discussion whatever.

Mr. Speaker, there are 435 Members of the House, many of whom would like to speak on this bill, and among them there are 27 members of the Committee on Agriculture that reported the bill, all of whom would doubtless like to have time in which to debate its provisions, and yet we have only 40 minutes to discuss it. Mr. Speaker, the whole proposition is a melancholy farce! I have gone to both sides of the Chamber and solicited time and was unable to secure even 30 seconds, and, therefore, I am reduced to the necessity of availing myself of the privilege to revise and extend, if I am to appear in the RECORD at all on this subject. I want to repeat, with all the emphasis that I can command, that this method of considering legislation of such vital and far-reaching importance is a sad reflection upon parliamentary procedure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have always entertained grave doubts as to whether substantial benefits to industry can result from this sort of artificial stimulation. I have always been a stanch subscriber to the immutable laws of supply and demand. I have never been an apostle of the subsidy school. However, Mr. Speaker, I realize that if there is any industry in this country that is prostrated to the point of paralysis, it is the dairy- and beef-cattle industry. With choice beef cattle in my section selling at from 2 to 3 cents a pound, and a first-class milk cow and calf, which 2 years ago would have easily brought from $50 to $100, going at from $15 to $20, you can appreciate my anxiety and concern on this subject. And, since this bill gives some promise of relief, I am cheerfully supporting it in the hope that some material benefit may result therefrom to this industry, the recovery of which is so essential to our national welfare and prosperity.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, it was expected that the Unanimous Consent Calendar would be called today, but it is now getting late and it will be possible to call the calendar tomorrow with the consent of the House. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to call the Unanimous Consent Calendar tomorrow immediately after the disposition of the appropriation bill now pending, and which, I understand, will not take more than an hour's time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GOSS. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to ask the gentleman if there will be any opportunity to consider the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Now, in reply to the gentleman from Connecticut, I will say that if the House is willing there will be an opportunity to consider the Private Calendar on Thursday next. I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to call bills unobjected to on the Private Calendar on Thursday next after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the majority leader, the gentleman from Tennessee, when will the tax bill be taken up?

Mr. BYRNS. I am not able to say. It will not be taken up before Thursday. Of course, the tax bill has the right-of-way and will be taken up and disposed of promptly.

Mr. BLANTON. This unanimous-consent order would not put it aside?

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, no; not at all. I am simply asking that it be made in order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. May I also say it is expected to call the committees on Calendar Wednesday? I give notice so that the chairmen of committees may understand now that that will be the order of procedure on Wednesday.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, when the vote was taken on the bill H.R. 7527, amending the Emergency Relief Act and extending the C.W.A., I was unavoidably absent attending a meeting of the Sky Line Drive. I wish to state that if I had been present I would have voted "aye."

INVESTIGATION OF MILK SHEDS

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last I gave to the House certain information based upon investigation and audit made by the A.A.A. with reference to milk sheds in four of the largest cities of this country. Based upon that investigation I desire to offer a resolution, and I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be read at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas an audit made by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has revealed that distributors in four of the largest milk sheds in the United States, for the 5 years ending December 31, 1933, made a net profit of 25.71 percent on their net plant investment; and

Whereas this audit shows the net profits of distributors in each of the milk sheds for the 5-year period to be: Philadelphia (distributors handling 85 percent of volume), 30.76 percent; Boston (distributors handling 75 percent of volume), 22.45 percent; St. Louis (distributors handling 67 percent of volume), 14.64 percent; and Chicago (distributors handling 90 percent of volume), 25.84 percent; and

Whereas during this same 5-year period the wholesale price of milk sold by farmers declined 50 percent resulting in severe hardships and suffering to milk producers throughout the United States and strikes and violence in many rural and metropolitan centers; and

Whereas the aforesaid audit by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has revealed net profits of milk distributors which tends to establish that similar conditions exist in other milk sheds throughout the United States; and

Whereas an investigation in the District of Columbia, pursuant to Senate Resolution 76, Seventy-third Congress, first session, revealed testimony which abundantly sustains the contention that over a period of years large milk distributors have attempted to create a monopoly in the District of Columbia, and, largely as a result of these efforts, farmers producing milk for the District of Columbia milk shed have received low returns for their product and have been placed at a serious disadvantage; and

Whereas the testimony adduced at hearings in the aforesaid investigation in the District of Columbia tends to prove that similar monopolistic efforts likewise exist in other milk sheds in the United States; and

Whereas there is reason to believe that there exists a close tie between certain leaders of milk producers' cooperatives and milk distributors, which tie is unbeknown to milk producers and detrimental to their interests; and

Whereas the continuation of the practices now engaged in by milk distributors and certain leaders of milk cooperatives seriously endangers the efforts of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and of the several States to alleviate and remedy the distress now wide-spread among dairy farmers in the United States, which distress, if permitted to continue, will result in the destruction of the already sorely pressed agricultural industry: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Federal Trade Commission is authorized and directed to investigate conditions with respect to the sale and distribution of milk and other dairy products within the territorial limits of the United States by any person, partnership, association, cooperative, or corporation, with a view to determining particularly whether any such person, partnership, association, cooperative, or corporation is operating within any milk shed of the United States in such a manner as to substantially lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the sale or distribution of such dairy products, or is a party to any conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in any such dairy products, or is in any way monopolizing or attempting to monopolize such trade or commerce within the United States or any part thereof, or is using any unfair method of competition in connection with the sale or distribution of any such dairy products, or is in any way operating to depress the price of milk sold by producers. The Federal Trade Commission shall report to the House of Representatives as soon as practicable the result of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary remedial legislation.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the majority leader, in calling the committees on Calendar Wednesday, if it is intended to start with the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. BYRNS. That is the committee which has the first call.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. Did not the Committee on the Judiciary have 1 day on its call, and still has another day, from the last session, that holds over?

Mr. BYRNS. I am not sure. I am reading from the calendar, which says the call rests with the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. GOSS. Can the gentleman inform us how it got that way?

Mr. BYRNS. I suppose that the Committee on the Judiciary, which had the call on June 12, exhausted its time.

Mr. GOSS. Did it not have 1 day remaining?

Mr. BYRNS. A committee has only 1 day, unless a bill is carried over.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the majority leader a question? Inasmuch as the Committee on Banking and Currency will have the call on Wednesday, I wish to state that the banks over the country are becoming alarmed about the report that this Congress may change the law so that there could be checking on postal savings accounts. I am against the Government's entering any such general banking business.

I understand from members of the committee that while there is such a proposition before the committee, no such bill will be reported to this Congress. Does the majority leader understand that to be the case? The bankers are wiring and writing and wanting to know about it. It would stop all this present uneasiness if the majority leader could assure us that there will be no such proposition before the present Congress.

Mr. BYRNS. I am not in position to give the gentleman any assurance about it, but so far as I know there is nothing of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. Several members of the Banking and Currency Committee who have charge of such bills assure me there is no such proposition brought before the House in this Congress.

Mr. BYRNS. I can assure the gentleman there are bills before the committee on which the committee may hold hearings; but what disposition will be made of the bills I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. I take it, then, there is no likelihood of any such bill being reported out.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. If I were betting on the matter, I would bet 10 to 1 that no such bill would be reported out.

Mr. BLANTON. That is enough assurance for me. The country banks have been hit hard enough already. They could not survive competition by the Government. I am against the Government's competing in private business. I sincerely hope that before we adjourn, this Congress will repeal the law requiring a 2-cent tax on each bank check. This has hurt all the banks everywhere and helps the Government very little. I hope that all of us will make a special effort to repeal this check tax law and take this 2-cent tax off the bank checks. And we must first reduce first-class postage to 2 cents.

REREFERENCE OF BILL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. EICHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there may be re-referred from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors the bill (H.R. 6573) to authorize the Secretary of War, upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, to adjust, settle, and pay claims of drainage districts and levee districts for damages on account of increased seepage and/or increased cost of drainage resulting from certain improvements on the Mississippi River, which was erroneously referred to the Committee on Claims. I have here the written consent of each of the committees concerned to such reference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made this morning and to insert therein a few short tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

USE OF DAIRY PRODUCTS IN C.C.C. CAMPS

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a resolution adopted by the Wisconsin Dairy Campaign Committee relative to the use of butter, cheese, and milk in the C.C.C. camps.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolutions of the Wisconsin Dairy Campaign Committee.

Whereas many complaints have been made that in the C.C.C. camps and Federal forestry camps operating in this State during the past year sufficient milk, butter, and other dairy products were not available for the men stationed in those camps; and

Whereas the supplying of necessary milk, butter, and other dairy products for such purposes would aid in reducing the now-claimed surplus of such products: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Wisconsin Dairy Campaign Committee assembled in the city of Madison on this 24th day of January 1934, That we respectfully urge the national administration to take prompt steps to make available in these various camps milk, butter, and other dairy products in sufficient quantities to supply the normal needs therein; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, duly attested by the presiding officer and secretary of said committee, be sent to Hon. Robert Fechner, Director of the Emergency Conservation Work at Washington D.C., and to each Representative from Wisconsin in the Congress of the United States.

WISCONSIN DAIRY CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE,
GEORGE L. MOONEY, President.

CROP PRODUCTION AND HARVESTING LOANS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill having been passed by the House, the bill H.R. 7521, to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1934, and for other purposes, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. TERRY for today on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, February 6, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1934

Rev. Harry Lee Doll, assistant rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art the source of all goodness, because Thou art life, teach us to live in Thee always in all things. Redeem our timid souls from the tyranny of self. Build up in us Thine own nature. Help us to live nobly. Let there be no satisfaction for us until we are more and better than we are. Grant unto us the courage to work with Thee as builders of a world where righteousness, justice, and love shall reign and triumph over hate and strife. Through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be all honor and glory, world without end. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1975) to provide loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1934, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 7478) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle as a basic agricultural commodity, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

I regret to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the president of the National Academy of Sciences, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the academy for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the Library.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact necessary legislation for the continuation of the Civil Works Administration

Whereas it is reported that the funds available for the continuation of the Federal Civil Works Administration will soon be exhausted; and

Whereas drastic cuts have already been made in the quotas assigned to Wisconsin and its political subdivisions; and

Whereas the Congress apparently has so far failed to take any steps toward providing funds for the continuation of the Civil Works Administration; and

Whereas the curtailment of the Civil Works program until February 15, 1934, will have serious economic effects in this State, and its abandonment after that date would be disastrous to the State of Wisconsin: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to take immediate steps to provide the necessary appropriations to finance the continuation of the Civil Works Administration upon such basis as will provide jobs for unemployed citizens in distress during such period as the need therefor exists; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to President Roosevelt, Federal Administrator Hopkins, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
O. S. LOOMIS,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of legislation to abolish the 15-percent reduction in the pay of Government employees under the so-called "Economy Act", which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Charles Forney, of Norfolk, Va., praying for the passage of legislation defining cost and profit under the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the McKinley Square Section, Bronx Division of the American Jewish Congress, of New York City, protesting against the mistreatment of the Jews in Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Mrs. M. Willson, of New Orleans, La., relative to propaganda against Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from Louisiana, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a resolution and memorial adopted at Manila, P.I., by the national convention of the Palihan ng Bayan, favoring complete independence of the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate an order of the City Council of Chicago, Ill., petitioning the enactment of proper laws and regulations providing for the control of natural resources of the coal industry, its sale, quality, and prevailing prices, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Council of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Mrs. Jessie Simpson, of Utica, N.Y., praying for the revaluation of gold, the restoration of silver for use as money with gold, and the use of new currency to cancel interest-bearing bonds, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram from the national secretary of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists, and Technicians, of New York City, urging an appropriation substantially larger than $950,000,000 for the continuance of the Civil Works program beyond May 1, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented petitions of members of the faculty and student body of the Maryland State Normal School, praying for the passage of the so-called "Copeland pure food and drug bill", which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FESS presented a resolution endorsed by 18 of the 21 members of the council of the city of Toledo, Ohio, favoring the making of prompt appropriation providing additional funds for C.W.A. work, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter from the Fritz-Rumer-Cooke Co., of Columbus, Ohio, favoring the making of provision from public funds for a large scale railroad grade-separation program, which, with the accompanying editorial from the Cincinnati (Ohio) Enquirer, entitled "Lasting Improvements", was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COSTIGAN presented the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Senate Memorial 7 (by Senators Ammons, Healy, Herrin, Quiat, Houston, and Hill)

Whereas at the American Legion Convention held in Chicago last October a four-point program was adopted which was a minimum legislation asked of the Congress of the United States in behalf of the ex-service men of the World War; and

Whereas many of the ex-service men are now in serious financial trouble and need of the necessities of life because of lack of employment and many of them are in need of hospitalization; and

Whereas the present laws are inadequate to properly take care of the ex-service men and the regulations provided under the present laws are forcing many ex-service men to seek charity from the counties, from the State, and from their Government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Twenty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Colorado in extraordinary session assembled, That it ratify and approve the principle of the American Legion's four-point program, to wit:

1. That no war veteran disabled in line of duty suffer any reduction of those benefits granted such veterans in the World War Veterans' Act as in effect prior to March 20, 1933.

2. That hospitalization under Federal Government auspices be afforded all veterans not dishonorably discharged who require hospital treatment and who are not able to reasonably pay for their own treatment;

3. That perpetuation of service connection for all veterans properly granted such service connection, under laws in existence prior to March 20, 1933, be recommended as an item of Legion policy;

4. That the benefits provided for dependents of veterans as established in the World War Veterans' Act be resumed and maintained as the Government's policy, and that in no event shall widows and/or dependent children of deceased World War veterans be without Government protection; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado to the United States Congress be requested to work for the passage of such a measure; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted to the President of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado to the United States Congress.

Mr. COSTIGAN also presented the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Joint Memorial 6, concerning the importation of foreign meat and meat products (by Senator Headlee)

Whereas it has come to the attention of the General Assembly of the State of Colorado that large quantities of meat and meat products are being imported into the United States from foreign lands and that such meat and meat products are being sold in the State of Colorado and the United States generally; and

Whereas producers of livestock in the United States have been operating at a loss for more than 3 years, and the general condition of the livestock industry is the most deplorable in the history of this country, and if such industry is to survive, it must receive relief in some form and be fully protected against foreign and unfair competition; and

Whereas, instead of renewing loans and increasing mortgages as an attempt to relieve this situation, the prohibition of the importation of all kinds of fresh and canned meats until at least the livestock industry in the United States has an opportunity to obtain cost of production would have a more permanent and beneficial effect on the industry: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the house of representatives concurring herein), That the President of the United States is hereby respectfully requested to exercise his authority to stop the importation of meat and meat products from foreign countries; or if by reason of the lack of such authority he is unable to comply with the request herein set forth, he is respectfully requested to cause the Federal Tariff Commission to raise the import duties upon such meat and meat products to the utmost limit in order that the importation of such meat and meat products may be effectively discouraged; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States and Federal Tariff Commission and to the Representatives and Senators from the State of Colorado in Congress.

Mr. COSTIGAN also presented the following memorials of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Senate Joint Memorial 4 (by Senators Tempel and Hunter) concerning the approval of the proposed Caddoa Dam project

Whereas at the first extraordinary session of the Twenty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, held in August 1933, the following House Joint Memorial No. 2 was passed:

"Whereas various governmental agencies and interested parties now have under consideration the construction of a public-works project known as the "Caddoa Dam", at or near Caddoa, Colo.; and

"Whereas if such dam were built, it would constitute an important element in the flood-control problem of the Arkansas and Mississippi River Basins, would be a vital asset to the irrigation interests of Colorado and Kansas in the Arkansas River Basin, and would forever settle the long-existing water-rights controversy between the two States of Kansas and Colorado, and would constitute a most important public-works project for the relief of the unemployed and destitute: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives of the twenty-ninth general assembly in extraordinary session assembled (the senate concurring herein), That His Excellency the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, be, and he hereby is, petitioned and urged to give his consideration and approval to the construction of the proposed Caddoa Dam, at or near Caddoa, Colo., in order that the purposes herein set forth may be realized without further delay; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to President Roosevelt, to the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, as the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in Congress."

And

Whereas the application for the approval of the Caddoa Dam project is still pending before the Public Works Administration in Washington, D.C.; and

Whereas the desirability of the project still obtains and the urgency of some immediate action on the matter still exists; and

Whereas the Army engineers have given the proposed Caddoa Dam project their approval; and

Whereas the proposed dam would be located in or near the drought area in southeast Colorado where the unemployment and relief problem has become extremely grave because of the 3-year drought and crop failures in that area: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate of the twenty-ninth general assembly, assembled in the second extraordinary session thereof (the house of representatives concurring herein), That His Excellency the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, and the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, as the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, be, and they hereby are, respectfully petitioned and urged to give their consideration and approval to the construction of the proposed Caddoa Dam at or near Caddoa, Colo., in order that the purposes set forth in the memorial quoted herein may be realized without further delay; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to President Roosevelt, to Secretary Ickes, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in Congress.

Senate Joint Memorial 7 (by Senator Warren), protesting the construction by the Federal Government of the Casper-Alcova and the Seminoe Reservoir projects in the State of Wyoming

Whereas the special board for public works of the Federal Government has approved the projects commonly referred to as the "Casper-Alcova" and the "Seminoe Reservoir" projects, and is about to or has begun the construction thereof; and

Whereas there has existed for several years and still exists an acute controversy between the State of Colorado and the State of Wyoming concerning the equitable division of the waters of the North Platte River as between said States and the respective citizens thereof; and

Whereas repeated efforts have been made for and on behalf of the States of Colorado and Wyoming by their duly accredited officials to settle the existing controversy by defining by compact their respective equitable rights in and to the waters of said North Platte River, but that all such efforts to the present time have failed; and

Whereas the construction of the aforesaid projects by the United States, without reference to the rights, interests, and equities of the State of Colorado and of its citizens in and to said North Platte River would tend greatly to aggravate the said controversy and lessen the chance for any permament settlement thereof by compact and lead to prolonged and costly litigation; and

Whereas this whole controversy has been more fully set forth in Senate Joint Resolution No. 3, passed at the first extraordinary session of the twenty-ninth general assembly: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Colorado in special session assembled (the house of representatives concurring herein), That it does hereby resist and protest against the approval of said projects and the construction thereof unless and until the rights and interests of said States and of their respective citizens in and to said waters of the North Platte River be defined and determined, by compact or otherwise; and that it does hereby respectfully pray that the Public Works Administration of the Federal Government be ordered by the President of the United States to cease and desist from further construction of said projects or the expenditure of any moneys in connection therewith; and that the Congress of the United States may likewise make no appropriations of the public funds in connection with the construction thereof; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded for personal delivery to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of the Interior, as the Administrator of Public Works, and that copies hereof be also forwarded to the Senators and Representatives in Congress, respectively, from the State of Colorado.

USE OF GRANITE IN FEDERAL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred copy of resolutions which were adopted by the Massachusetts General Court, memorializing Congress in favor of proper consideration for granite in Federal construction projects.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions memorializing Congress in favor of proper consideration for granite in Federal construction projects

Whereas Massachusetts is the leading granite-producing State of the Union; and

Whereas granite is a building stone of the highest quality, lending itself to beauty, dignity, and permanency, characteristics particularly desirable in all public buildings; and

Whereas distressing conditions of unemployment have been needlessly aggravated by the general use of machine-fabricated Indiana limestone in recent Federal construction projects; and

Whereas it is apparent from its wide-spread use in Federal buildings that this Indiana stone has enjoyed undue favor; and

Whereas it is neither desirable nor proper for a substantial portion of benefits arising out of expenditures for public buildings to be confined to one State through the specification and purchase of a material, the production of which is largely monopolized by that State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Court of Massachusetts, That Members of the Congress of the United States from Massachusetts be and are hereby urged to continue their efforts to secure proper consideration for granite in Federal construction; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to each Member of the Congress from Massachusetts.

In house of representatives, adopted, January 25, 1934.

In senate, adopted, in concurrence, February 1, 1934.

A true copy.

Attest:

[SEAL] F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

REMOVAL OF TABLETS FROM MILITARY CEMETERIES

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I present and desire to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by Philip Preston Johnson Camp, No. 56, Sons of Confederate Veterans, at Lexington, Ky., protesting against removal by the War Department of tablets of a certain nature from various military cemeteries.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the War Department has removed and is now removing from the military cemeteries, tablets upon which are engraved Theadore O'Hara's immortal poem, The Bivouac of the Dead; and

Whereas such action seems to have been taken without consulting the wishes of any patriotic organization or those most vitally interested in honoring our heroic dead: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the members of the Philip Preston Johnson Camp, No. 56, Sons of Confederate Veterans, at Lexington, Ky., at a meeting held on January 18, 1934, That we unanimously go on record as protesting against the removal of said tablets from said military cemeteries and that we favor that those removed be placed back again in their respective places and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to our Senators and Congressmen from the State of Kentucky, with the request that they take this matter up with the proper authorities at once and have carried out the purpose of this resolution.

R. E. LEE MURPHY,
VILEY MCFARREN,
O. B. KELLER,
Committee.

FARM FINANCING

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed or noted in the RECORD and appropriately referred 2 resolutions and 11 petitions, all dealing with agricultural financing.

The first resolution is concurrent resolution no. 8, adopted by both branches of the Kansas Legislature in special session last November. It urges the early passage by Congress of the so-called "Frazier bill" for the refinancing of farm mortgages.

The second matter is in the shape of a number of petitions from local Farmers' Union organizations and citizens in Kansas counties also urging the passage of the Frazier bill. I favor the enactment of this legislation.

The other resolution is one adopted by the American National Live Stock Association in its annual convention at Albuquerque, N.Mex., urging lower rates of interest on loans by governmental agencies on livestock. Their appeal has my hearty approval.

Mr. President, it will be noted that all these resolutions and petitions point out the urgent need of loans for agricultural purposes at lower rates of interest. I do not believe that cheaper financing by itself is the answer at all to the farm problem. Better prices for farm products are more necessary than everything else, but I do believe that cheaper financing is absolutely necessary. I urge every Senator to give serious consideration to this question, and may I express the hope that worth-while action will be taken in this direction before the present session shall adjourn.

I send the resolutions to the desk with the request they be printed in the RECORD and then referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

I ask that the petitions be noted in the RECORD and also properly referred.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 8, memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass the Frazier bill and place American agriculture on a basis of equality with other industries

Whereas Kansas is largely an agricultural State and largely dependent on that industry; and

Whereas prices of agricultural products, both crops and livestock, are now and have long been so low that the farmers are unable to pay taxes, interest, and upkeep and to secure a living return for their capital and labor; and

Whereas interest rates on farm-mortgage indebtedness from both private and public funds have not decreased in proportion to the decreases in prices of agricultural products; and

Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States a bill known as the "Frazier bill", which provides that the Federal Government with Treasury notes shall refinance farm mortgages at an interest rate of 1½ percent and an amortization rate of 1½ percent, making a total of 3 percent, the Treasury notes being retired as the mortgage debt is paid; and

Whereas such legislation is necessary in order to rehabilitate American agriculture: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States is urged to enact into law as soon as possible the Frazier bill; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, and to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the Members of the Kansas delegation in both House and Senate.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the senate and passed that body November 8, 1933.

RATE OF INTEREST ON LIVESTOCK LOANS

Whereas the crisis through which the cattle business is now passing is well known to Government officials; and

Whereas it would be to the ultimate advantage, not only of the livestock producer but of the Government as well, if interest upon all livestock loans made by the various Federal agencies were substantially reduced: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we ask that the interest upon all Government livestock loans be reduced to not more than 5 percent per annum.

[Resolution adopted by the American National Livestock Association, in annual convention assembled at Albuquerque, N.Mex., Jan. 10–12, 1924.]

The petitions presented by Mr. CAPPER from sundry citizens of the counties of Barton, Cloud, Cowley, Crawford, McPherson, Marshall, Riley, Stafford, and Trego, and of members of the Farmers Unions of Dickinson and Nemaha Counties, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called "Frazier farm refinancing bill", were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 7199) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 263) thereon.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1484) for the relief of Miles Thomas Barrett, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 264) thereon.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 1820) to amend the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 265) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 316) relative to the qualifications of practitioners of law in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 266) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2635) granting a pension to D. H. Waide; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2636) for the relief of James Slevin (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2637) for the relief of Margaret A. Douglas; to the Committee on Finance.

(Mr. WALSH introduced Senate bills Nos. 2638 and 2639, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration, and appear under a separate heading.)

By Mr. CLARK and Mr. PATTERSON:

A bill (S. 2640) authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to certain hospitals; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 2641) to provide fees to be charged by the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

(Mr. KING also introduced Senate bill 2642, which was ordered to lie on the table, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. DUFFY:

A bill (S. 2643) restoring citizenship to Harry A. Prudome; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LOGAN:

A bill (S. 2644) for the relief of Mary Seeley Watson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2645) to provide for an additional district judge for the eastern and western districts of Kentucky, and to amend section 83 of the Judicial Code, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 2646) granting a pension to George W. Newman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASHURST (by request):

A bill (S. 2647) prescribing the procedure and practice in condemnation proceedings brought by the United States of America, conferring plenary jurisdiction on the district courts of the United States to condemn and quiet title to land being acquired for public use, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 2648) to authorize the purchase of certain parcels of land in squares 3182 and 3184 in the District of Columbia, by the Commissioners of the said District, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 2649) to fix the rates of postage on certain periodicals exceeding 8 ounces in weight; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 2650) amending the Agricultural Adjustment Act of May 12, 1933; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. DILL (by request):

A bill (S. 2651) to provide for the prompt disposition of disputes between carriers and their employees, and to amend sections 1, 2, 3, 5, and 6 of the Railway Labor Act approved May 20, 1926; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. BYRD:

A bill (S. 2652) to include peanuts as a basic agricultural commodity under the agricultural adjustment act; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 2653) for the relief of Henry Charles O'Dell; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 2654) for the relief of J. Worrall Henry; and

A bill (S. 2655) for the relief of Floyd Heytz (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2656) granting a pension to Mamie Northrup (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2657) granting a pension to Effie Welsh (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2658) granting a pension to Elizabeth Winscott; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 2659) granting compensation to Joseph M. Burr; to the Committee on Claims.

(Mr. DILL introduced Senate bill 2660, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. OVERTON:

A bill (S. 2661) for the relief of Clayton M. Thomas; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

A bill (S. 2662) authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of subcontractors for material and labor furnished in the construction of a post-office building at Las Vegas, Nev.; to the Committee on Claims.

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION FEES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I introduce two bills seeking to bring about a reduction in naturalization fees and fees for records of registry under the immigration laws.

A very exhaustive report on this subject was made by the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship. In connection with the two bills, I ask that this report, together with a statement by myself and letters upon the same subject which were printed in the RECORD in the last Congress when similar bills were presented by me, be again printed, and the matter referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 2638) to reduce certain naturalization fees; and

The bill (S. 2639) to reduce the fee for records of registry under the immigration laws; were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The statement prepared by Mr. WALSH is as follows:

These two bills would reduce by 50 percent the fees required under the naturalization and immigration laws for naturalization and registry.

At the present time an alien who came to the United States before June 23, 1921, of whose arrival no record is found, must pay $20 for a certificate of registry, in order to have his admission legalized so that he can apply for citizenship. By the provisions of my bills this fee would be reduced to $10.

In addition, the present fee required for certificate of arrival would be reduced from $5 to $2.50; the fee for receiving and filing a declaration of intention would be reduced from $5 to $2.50; the fee for filing and docketing a petition for citizenship and final hearing would be reduced from $10 to $5. Also, the fee for the issuance of new certificates of citizenship or declarations of intention in place of those lost, mutilated, or destroyed would be reduced from $10 to $5.

I have been endeavoring for several years to secure a reduction in the naturalization fees, as I have long considered that the present rates put naturalization beyond the reach of the average applicant; that the desirability for citizenship should not be measured by an ability to pay an exorbitant fee, but that the true test should be an individual's merit, etc.

During the Seventy-first Congress I presented a bill (S. 3697) which provided for the reduction of the fee for record of registry from $20 to $10, and for making, filing, and docketing petition for citizenship and final hearing thereon from $10 to $5.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, during the Seventy-second Congress I presented S. 3217 to reduce certain naturalization fees and S. 3218 to reduce the fees for records of registry, but no action was taken by the Senate Committee on Immigration on either of these measures. Therefore, I am reintroducing them both, as I am hopeful that relief of this nature can be granted to those in more or less straitened circumstances who are unable to meet the excessive fees now demanded.

The report of the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship, with related data, presented by Mr. WALSH, was referred to the Committee on Immigration, to accompany the bills, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOREIGN LANGUAGE INFORMATION SERVICE,
New York City, January 20, 1932.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator from Massachusetts,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I have been asked to forward to you a report from the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship dealing with the subject of naturalization fees and the effect of the increased fees. I think you will find in this report a wealth of important material on this subject. We are all hoping that you can make effective use of it in support of your bill to cut naturalization fees 50 percent.

You are privileged to use this report or the material it includes in any way that you feel will be effective. I may say that the report as sent you is a first draft which the committee in charge has rushed in order that you might have the material at the earliest possible moment. The National Council hopes to be able to print the report. Before this is done some minor changes may be made, but it will stand substantially as I am sending it.

With assurances of our cooperation, I am,

Sincerely yours,

READ LEWIS, Director.

FOREWORD

The National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship is composed of member organizations and of individual men and women affiliated with national and local civic bodies representing every part of the United States. Its purpose is to promote coordinated effort in behalf of assimilation of the alien and education for good citizenship. It is designed to be of practical help to agencies interested in prospective citizens by assembling information and acting as a clearing house.

The large decrease in the number of persons applying for citizenship following the passage of the amendment to the naturalization law which increased the fee for naturalization, caused the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship to undertake a Nation-wide study to determine the effect of the increased fee.

The report now presented has been prepared with much care and thought. The evidence gathered shows that the present fee of $20 seriously discourages the naturalization of our alien population. After a review of the data secured, the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship at its annual meeting held in 1931 unanimously adopted a recommendation that the high fee for naturalization be reduced.

Thanks are due the many civic agencies throughout the country who have assisted in assembling material for this report. Let us hope their efforts will aid in the correction of a situation which works a disadvantage to the alien and to the entire country, and that the emphasis in the requirements of citizenship will be transferred from a monetary to a more idealistic plane.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBT. C. DEMING,
Chairman Executive Board.

JANUARY 15, 1932.

HANDICAPS IN NATURALIZATION—A STUDY OF THE EFFECT OF HIGH FEES UPON THE NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS IN THE UNITED STATES

(This study was conducted under the auspices of the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship, New York City, by a committee consisting of Mrs. Kenneth F. Rich, director of immigration of the Immigrants' Protective League of Chicago; Mary O'Donnell Turner, director of the Americanization Bureau of Detroit (this organization has recently been disbanded); Florence Cassidy, of the national board of the Young Women's Christian Association, New York City; Thomas Mulholland, of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, New York City; and Cecilia Razovsky, executive director of the department of service for foreign born of the National Council of Jewish Women, chairman.)

In the 10 years, 1920 to 1929, an average of over 175,000 aliens became American citizens each year. As the years went by the number receiving their final naturalization certificates had steadily increased until in 1929, 224,197 aliens became citizens. In the fiscal year 1930 this number suddenly dropped and in 1931 fell further to 143,495. There was an even more startling decrease in the number of declarations of intention and petitions filed.

Here was a situation of deep concern to all interested in the assimilation of our alien population and their incorporation into the common life of our Nation. What was the reason for this sudden unprecedented decrease of over 81,000 (or more than one third) in the number of aliens naturalized? It was this question that the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship undertook to study and to answer. The present report is a result of its investigations.

On March 2, 1929, the naturalization law was amended by a provision increasing the fees for naturalization from $5 to $20. The new fees went into effect July 1, 1929. The inference that this radical increase in fees was the cause for a striking decrease in naturalization was thus obvious and natural. The National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship was not, however, satisfied with any such easy conclusion.

There might be other factors responsible for this sudden decline. Were our restrictive immigration laws responsible? What was the situation in each of the 12 naturalization districts into which the country is divided? How were the different States affected by the new law? What was the testimony of competent civic and educational organizations throughout the Nation? The results of this inquiry show conclusively that the high fee is responsible for the decrease in naturalization during the past 2 years.

The reports submitted from a number of large cities contain so much significant data that there is great temptation to quote them in full. Because of lack of space, the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship is limiting the report to a condensed summary of the material received, which is believed to be representative of conditions throughout the country.

Up to 1929 the progressive growth in the naturalization of the aliens in this country (table I of exhibits) shows how slowly but steadily the incorporation of the alien into our citizenry was being accomplished. In 1910 out of an alien population of approximately five and a half millions about 1 percent were naturalized that year. In 1920 the proportion of aliens naturalized in relation to the total alien population, according to the census figures for that year, had increased to 3.3 percent. By 1929 this proportion had increased to 4.5 percent. This increased proportion was only affecting slightly a practically stable alien population of over 5,000,000 persons. To put it in another way, while the alien bloc remained practically stationary (see United States census figures in table I), the progress in naturalization took care roughly of all new alien admissions to the population accruing through immigration and including a few of those already in the country. For example, in 1929 the total number of immigrant aliens over 16 years of age admitted amounted to 200,923. (Report of Commissioner General of Immigration, 1929. Figures for aliens 21 years of age and over are not available from the reports of the Commissioner General of Immigration.) The number of aliens naturalized that year amounted to 224,197. Thus it can be seen that, however slight, an impression was being made on the solid alien bloc, since the naturalization figures were greater than the number of new aliens admitted.

The passage of the amendment to the Naturalization Act in 1929, increasing the cost of naturalization from $5 to $20, resulted in the following year in a drop in the proportion of the number of aliens naturalized to the alien population to 3.3 percent—back to the 1920 figure. In 1931 there was a further drop in naturalization to 2.8 percent in relation to the alien population.

IS DECREASE IN IMMIGRATION RESPONSIBLE FOR DECREASE IN NATURALIZATION?

It may occur to some that the great decrease in declarations of intention issued is to be credited to our restrictive immigration laws, but this presumption is obviously groundless in the presence of over 5,000,000 of aliens, of whom, according to the United States census of 1930, 3,342,837 had not yet declared their intention to become citizens. The very restrictive nature of our immigration laws which makes traffic back and forth from Europe difficult for aliens, should have stimulated many of those residing in the United States for years to a new attempt to become citizens. Then, too, the deportation laws, the increased deportation activities of the Government, the threat of registration of aliens so greatly feared by them, should, it would seem, have induced many to declare their intention to become citizens or to complete their naturalization. Discrimination in many branches of industry, in the employment of public works, in membership in trade unions, in employment in private industries, should have created a scramble for the filing of declarations and petitions. In inducting 124 applicants into citizenship in New York City recently Judge Cotillo was quoted as having made the following remarks regarding the effect of the fee:

"The fee of $20 for naturalization was exorbitant in these times of depression, and that to get a job easily the alien was compelled to become a citizen because industry closes 3 of every 5 jobs to aliens." (New York Times, Dec. 31, 1931.)

But what do we find? With but few exceptions the naturalization of the alien has declined in practically every part of the country since 1929, and this despite the advantages and privileges, material as well as spiritual, which, particularly at this time, citizenship confers upon the alien. Two factors impose themselves for consideration—the high fee and the unemployment situation, which weighs particularly heavily upon the alien population. Table II (see exhibits) shows a decided decline in the number of petitions filed and the number of final certificates issued in 1930 and 1931 as compared with the numbers for 1929. The figures speak for themselves.

HOW HAVE THE VARIOUS STATES BEEN AFFECTED?

Before proceeding with a discussion of the replies received to the questionnaire sent out by the committee, attention is called to table III (see appendix), which shows the figures for naturalization by States for specified years, together with the total alien population over 21 years of age for each State, as given by the United States census of 1930, and the percentage of aliens naturalized in 1931 as compared with this total alien population. The figures for alien population for each State were obtained by subtracting from the total foreign-born population over 21 the number reported as being naturalized citizens. It will be noted that all the States show a large decrease in 1930 as compared with 1929 for declarations of intention issued, petitions filed, and final certificates granted. The drop in declarations of intention filed for each State in 1930 as compared with 1929 is indeed startling.

While it is true that by 1931 all the States, with the exception of Kentucky, show an increase in the number of declarations filed, as compared with the preceding year 1930, none of them approaches the figures for 1929, the year before the law was amended. Similarly, in 1931 the number of petitions filed in all the States shows an increase over 1930, but again the petitions do not reach the 1929 figures. It should be remembered that it was during this period that there developed a growing discrimination against aliens in industry, and in the granting of public relief and employment relief to aliens. Undoubtedly because of this discrimination, many aliens hastened to make declarations or to file petitions for naturalization.

The conclusions reached by an interested group in Los Angeles are:

"The increased fee makes a difference which is offset by the added advantage that citizens have over aliens in obtaining work. The fee works an undue hardship upon the prospective applicant. The fee should not become a test of citizenship because * * * economic barriers are unfair * * *."

However, the final certificates issued in 1931 as compared with 1930 show a further decrease so that there is a considerable decline in 1931 over the peak year 1929 in final papers granted. The year 1931 shows the smallest number of persons naturalized since the year 1917. (See table II.) The following 35 States show this continued decrease in naturalization during 1931:

Alaska, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

The variation between the States as shown in table III is obviously the result of several factors, such as differences in the depth of the depression, differences in educational facilities offered by State and city, variations in the legislation regarding employment of aliens on public works, etc.

Since the percentage of aliens naturalized in 1931 for the United States as a whole amounted to 2.8 percent, a column is included in table III showing the percentages of aliens naturalized by States in relation to their respective alien population. A map has been prepared—table IV—in an attempt to show more graphically the unevenness of the progress of the naturalization of the alien in different sections of the country.

HAVE RURAL DISTRICTS BEEN EQUALLY AFFECTED BY THE FEE?

Data were secured from certain urban and rural communities in answer to the questionnaire sent out by the committee. It is evident from the reports that even within any one individual State the rate for naturalization is spotty, depending again upon local conditions and activities.

Let us take Sullivan County, N.Y., as an illustration. This is a rural district consisting of rural farm population, rural nonfarm, small towns, and villages. The entire rural population is 28,395. Of this number, 6,324 are foreign-born whites over 21 years of age, 1,995 of whom are not yet naturalized. In the year 1930, 6 people in Sullivan County applied for declarations of intention as compared with 89 in 1929. For the past fiscal year, 1931, 17 persons applied for declarations of intention in this county. In 1929, 95 aliens received their final papers, whereas in 1930 the number had decreased to 74, and in 1931 there was a further decline to 35.

A similar report was received regarding the situation in Ulster County, N.Y., where the rural people find it exceptionally difficult to apply for papers, as they must pay witnesses for their transportation and also must pay for extra labor on the farm and the use of teams when they take their own teams to the naturalization office. According to Miss Bessie Myers, educational supervisor of the farm and rural department of the National Council of Jewish Women, her experience in assisting aliens to make out applications leads her to believe that the high cost of the fee has deterred them from filing and completing their applications.

A report from Los Angeles states that while the urge to become citizens has been sufficient in the urban sections to overcome the hardship of paying the extra fee (because of pressure from employers), the increased fee has resulted in a hardship in the agricultural districts in the San Joaquin Valley; that is, in Fresno and Kings Counties.

According to a Minneapolis report, "The present unemployment situation and the high cost of fees are responsible for the decrease in naturalization, but it is possible this is only a temporary situation."

An outstanding instance of the effect of local conditions is that in the case of Detroit, where the number of aliens naturalized jumped tremendously in 1931, increasing to 11,295 declarations of intention from 6,794 in 1930, and where the number of certificates granted in 1931 amounted to 11,116 as compared with 10,055 in 1930. In 1930 the Detroit district had reacted as normally as the other districts to the effect of the fee.

The number of declarations of intention issued in 1930 amounted to 6,794, as compared with 22,852 issued in 1929. Similarly there had been a decrease in 1930 as compared with 1929 in the total number of certificates granted, 10,055 having been issued in 1930 as compared with 12,331 in 1929. The cause for the increase in 1931 is attributable to the alien ruling adopted in the city of Detroit in March 1930, which removed from city pay rolls all alien employees. The pressure from employers who preferred citizens to aliens is also responsible for the increase. To quote from the report sent in by Miss Mary O'Donnell Turner:

"Pressure from employers and the fact that the city of Detroit requires its employees to be citizens have increased the demand for citizenship. Aliens believed that citizenship would assist them in securing and keeping employment. The ban on alien employees adopted by the city of Detroit and the removal of city employees from city employment caused the aliens to apply for papers in greater numbers."

The passage of the Michigan registration act (recently declared unconstitutional) was undoubtedly an additional cause for the increase.

IS THE HIGH FEE PRIMARILY RESPONSIBLE FOR THE DECREASE IN NATURALIZATION?

In answering one of the questions which called for factors responsible for the slowing-up of the process of naturalization the following interpretations were elicited:

High fees are given as the first factor in the effect on naturalization by agencies reporting from the following States and cities:

Boston, Mass.; Chicago district; Connecticut, including Bridgeport, Hartford, Meriden, New Haven, Middletown; Colorado; Dayton, Ohio; Erie County, Pa.; Oakland, Calif.; Portland district, Maine; San Francisco, Calif.; Seattle, Wash.; Syracuse, N.Y.; and western counties of Massachusetts.

High fees plus unemployment are given by the following sections and cities as being the two most important factors:

Brownsville, Tex.; Chicago, Ill.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio; Denver, Colo.; Massena, N.Y.; Oneida County, N.Y.; Ulster and Sullivan Counties, N.Y.; Utica, N.Y.; and Yonkers, N.Y.

Among other factors mentioned are higher educational requirements, itinerant labor, delay experienced by the local bureaus of naturalization in securing necessary supplies of new blanks, uncertainty as to procedure, and "red tape."

WHY MUST THE ALIEN PAY FOR AN OMISSION FOR WHICH HE IS NOT RESPONSIBLE?

Certificates of registry required by the law have caused the alien many difficulties and hardships. While the provision in the law permitting aliens who arrived before June 3, 1921, to legalize their residence by securing certificates of registry where they cannot recall the date of arrival or name of steamer, or have entered without inspection, is excellent and greatly appreciated, it should be remembered that the fee for a certificate of registry is $20, in addition to the $20 further required for naturalization. Very few aliens who arrived in the United States before June 29, 1906, are able to recall the name of the steamer on which they sailed or the date of their arrival. On the other hand, at very few points of arrival were adequate records kept by the Government before 1906. One of the comments made in the report of the Commissioner of Naturalization (1931) refers to such certificates of arrival. According to this report—

"The records prior to 1906 have been imperfectly kept, and attempts to make use of them have disclosed the impossibility of administering the requirement of the March 2, 1929, law that 'a certificate of arrival be furnished from the records for those aliens who entered the United States prior to June 29, 1906.'"

Even after June 29, 1906, and until some time in 1908, there were 90 points of arrival on the United States borders where no records were officially kept. To require certificates of arrival from aliens within this category is to tax them for an omission for which they cannot be held responsible. To secure a certificate of registry is for many aliens an expensive as well as a very difficult matter. In some instances the applicants must pay for the wages and transportation and luncheons of their two witnesses to the nearest immigration station where they are called for examination. It has been stated on good authority that the cost of certificate of registry mounts sometimes to as much as $100, taking into consideration loss of time and wages of the witnesses and of the applicant together with other necessary expenses.

One community center in New York City reports that there are quite a number of cases in their files of aliens who entered before 1906 and who are unable to obtain proof of their legal entrance because Ellis Island records were destroyed in a fire. An instance is cited of one woman who came to the United States in 1898 when she was only 2 years old. She was educated in this country and is thoroughly American. There is no record of her arrival. She wants to become a citizen, but cannot afford the cost of a certificate of registry in addition to the naturalization fee, because her husband is out of work and because they belong to that group in our population that has definite and immediate use for every penny earned and no chance to save.

The State director of adult education of Connecticut has a long list of aliens who arrived before 1906 and who are not responsible for their failure to secure verification of their arrival.

WHAT ABOUT NATURALIZATION OF WOMEN?

That women are also seriously affected by this change in the naturalization law is obvious from table V (see exhibit). With the passage of the Cable Act in September 1922, when married women were granted the privilege of independent citizenship, the number of women taking advantage of this opportunity became gratifyingly larger each year.

In 1929, 57,063 women had become naturalized in their own right. In 1930, after the change in the law, the number had decreased by 8,258, a drop of 14.5 percent for women. Incidentally there had been a drop of 28.1 percent for men in 1930. In 1931 the effect was reversed and we find that the decrease for women was 24.6 percent of the 1930 figures, whereas for men the drop was but 11.5 percent of the figures for 1930. In 1931 there were 20,287 fewer women who had become citizens as compared with the 57,063 who had become naturalized in 1929—a total drop of 35.6 percent. The percentage of decrease for men in 1931, as compared with the number of men naturalized in 1929, amounts to 36.4 percent; there were 60,950 fewer men naturalized in 1931 than in 1929.

Many agencies called attention to the fact that a greater proportion of women than men living in their communities were deterred from completing naturalization because of the high fee. A visiting nurse in one city reported that nurses are often called in to aid families that have spent every cent on the father's citizenship and are therefore destitute. Their gas and electricity are turned off, they have no money left to purchase food after their grand naturalization splurge. As between father and mother, the naturalization of the father seems to be more urgent and the mothers are obliged to postpone taking any steps until there is more money in the family exchequer.

SOME ILLUSTRATIVE CASES FURNISHED BY AGENCIES

The following cases are given by various agencies as examples of hardship dependent upon the increase in fee:

"Mrs. T. was left a widow last March. The 4 children, 2 boys and 2 girls, range in age from 8 to 15. Mrs. T.'s health will not permit her to work and the children are too young. There was a little insurance, but only sufficient to pay the funeral expenses and debts accumulated during Mr. T.'s illness. The only income now is the small amount which Mrs. T. receives from her brother-in-law, who lodges with her, the newspaper-route earnings of one of the boys, and some groceries contributed by charitable organizations.

"Mr. T., a native Italian, became an American citizen a few years before his death. He intended to remain in this country and rear his children here, and so he bought a small home, putting into it the few hundred dollars he had managed to save and borrowing the balance. In the ensuing years he was able to pay back part of this, but there is still a mortgage on the place, and it is quite a problem for his widow to meet the interest due every 6 months. Mrs. T. wants her children to be educated and bitterly regrets that the eldest, a girl, had to leave high school when her father died.

"Mrs. T., like her husband, Italian by birth, is anxious to become a citizen, for, she says, she considers this country her home and will never leave it; her children are its citizens, and surely their mother ought not to be an alien. She has been in this country since 1914, speaks English quite well, and earnestly believes that she can pass the citizenship test with the help of the International Institute, which is only too willing to lend its assistance. But how is she to pay the increased fees? That is the question she has asked of the social worker interested in her problem, but as yet no answer has been found." (McKeesport, Pa.)

"John J., employed as storekeeper in State institution for past 20 years. He arrived prior to head-tax period from Canada. He recrossed border many times, but has been admitted on basis of his State employment. He cannot see his way clear to invest $20 for record of registry." (Boston, Mass.)

"M. C., Hartford, Conn., came to the United States as a baby in 1902; lived at Hartford and attended school there. Could not make application for first papers until 18 years of age, which he did; joined the Army and served 2 years in the Philippines and has honorable discharge. His first papers lapsed, and another declaration was taken out in 1926. In April 1929 he applied for second papers and heard nothing until October, when told his record of arrival could not be found and to apply at the Immigration Department. Here he was told to secure a record of registry, at a cost of $20. Mr. C. will be unable to proceed at present, hoping that the law will be modified so as to recognize his entrance, without the payment of $20 in addition to the twenty for naturalization." (Hartford, Conn.)

"Fairly prosperous Italian family, consisting of mother, father, and three children. Sickness and unemployment. Low salary now. Waiting for better salary to pay fee." (Washington, D.C.)

"Seventeen years ago an ambitious husband and father came to America, with the idea in mind of finding work and establishing a home, so that after his position became secure he might send for his wife and family in Czechoslovakia. While building for this future possibility he kept in close touch with his family and sent quite large sums of money for their support. The World War was declared the year he landed in the United States, so that for 4 years there was no possibility of his wife and children joining him in this country. Then it became difficult to secure steady employment and consequently difficult to put money away for the passage of his family, as well as support them in Czechoslovakia.

"In 1921 immigration quotas were established under the new Federal policy, and it became especially difficult for families from southern European countries to secure admission to the United States. Then the Immigration Act of 1924 went into effect, and full citizenship was required before a man's wife and children could enter outside the quota. This man had not had the advantage of education in his country, and so a long period of study and preparation became necessary before his plans could be accomplished. His declaration of intention had been properly filed, and in September 1930 he was called for the examination on his petition. He successfully answered all the questions and passed the examination, but could not be given his petition card because he did not have the necessary $10 fee. Economic depression had again meant the loss of his job, and the consequent lack of money. In the meantime his children will soon be past the age when they are entitled either to preference or nonquota status. Full citizenship, especially at so high a cost, is often an impossible price to ask of families as the basis of reunion.

"There is a young widow in Chicago with six children under 16 years of age. She came to the United States a year or two before the war with her husband, but has been so busy with her large family that she has learned very little English. Her husband had taken out his declaration of intention in 1922, but died before citizenship was completed. He had served in the American Army during the World War. This mother is anxious to qualify for a pension from the juvenile court by completing citizenship upon the basis of her husband's first papers. When she attempted to file a petition she found they had expired, and that she must begin the process all over again. She hopes to learn English and civics before the time of the examination. It will be very difficult for her to pay the $20 now required to complete the process of naturalization. Her situation raises a grave question as to whether citizenship should be required as the price of a mother's pension.

"One of the women who finds the new naturalization fees hard to meet is a widow with six children, the oldest of whom is a girl of 13. There were bills amounting to $440, and funeral expenses of $500, met by the subscription of their friends. In order to keep her family together this mother has applied for a juvenile court pension. In order to secure it she must be a citizen of the United States. As a matter of fact, she was born in Chicago and has never been out of the country. But she married an Italian, who had come to America many years ago, but who had not become naturalized. Since the marriage took place (before the passage of the Cable Act in 1922) she had lost her citizenship in the United States. In order to regain it she need not take out first papers to be sure. But she must file a petition and pass the examination in civics. She has not the $10 necessary to meet the fee for second papers." (Chicago, Ill.)

THE HISTORY OF THE FEE

Up to 1906 there was no uniformity in the fees charged for naturalization. The fees varied considerably in the different States. From a report on the history of naturalization (F. G. Franklin, Legislative History of Naturalization in the United States) we find that in 1840—

"Fees varied greatly, being much higher in Federal than in State courts. They were often reduced by arrangements with political committees. The local fees ranged from 50 cents to $3 for naturalization and from 20 cents to $1.25 for a declaration of intention. In some States the total fee amounted to $3; in others it amounted to $10."

In the report of the House Committee on Immigration that accompanied the naturalization bill (Feb. 26, 1906) it was stated that the average amount charged throughout the United States for naturalization amounted to $11—$1 for declaration of intention, $5 for filing of petition, and $5 for issuance of certificate. It was not until 1906 that Congress for the first time passed a law calling for a uniform naturalization fee. When the report of the committee was discussed in the House the chairman, Mr. Bonynge, in answer to a question as to how the committee arrived at the figures for fees, replied:

"We endeavored * * * to ascertain as near as we could, and it was largely a matter of conjecture, what the expenses of the national supervision of naturalization would be * * *. Upon further consideration, we have concluded that the fees provided by the amendment which we will offer [this amendment reduced the total fee to $5, and was adopted in conference.—C. R.] will be sufficient to pay the expenses, and it is our desire to charge only a sufficient amount to cover the expenses of naturalization." (United States CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1906, p. 7035.)

We quote further from the United States CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1906, page 3647:

"Mr. JAMES. If a man in good faith wants to become a citizen of this country, it ought to be possible for him to do so without the clerk collecting from him an exorbitant fee in order to obtain the right to become an American citizen.

"Mr. BONYNGE. We do not desire that he should collect an exorbitant fee.

"Mr. GOLDFOGLE. You cannot improve the quality of citizenship by an increase in the present fees for naturalization" (p. 7043).

ARE THE PRESENT FEES NECESSARY TO DEFRAY THE COST OF OUR NATURALIZATION SERVICE?

According to the annual report of the Commissioner of Naturalization, the excess of net receipts of 1929 as compared with the cost of administering the naturalization law amounted to $192,911.88. In 1930, after a year under the new law, the excess of net receipts increased to $1,648,101.71; that is, 8½ times over that in 1929—854 percent. In 1931 the excess of net receipts over cost of administration increased over 10 times that of 1929, or 1,026 percent, to $1,981,933.63. As against this remarkably high excess of net receipts over expenditures, we find that the increase in the cost of administration in 1930, as compared with 1929, was only $143,396.22, or 11½ percent. For 1931 the cost of administration, as compared with the cost in 1929, shows only a little over 12 percent. The excess income from naturalization from 1907 to 1930 amounted to $1,098,926.37. In the last 2 years only it amounted to $3,629,135.34.

If the fee is only to cover cost of naturalization, it is extremely exorbitant; if it is to pay for the privilege of becoming a citizen, then who is willing to set the price of such a precious prerogative, whose value is inestimable? To quote Judge McCoy, of Washington, D.C.:

"If the fee is to be measured by the value of the privilege, the privilege is going cheap at $5 or $10. If the privilege is one which we desire the immigrant to exercise, both for his own good and ours, weren't the previous fees high enough?"

WHAT THEY DID IN SOUTH AFRICA

The situation in South Africa with respect to increase of fees might well be cited. Originally the fee in that country was a little over £2 6s. ($10). In July 1921 it was increased to £10, then reduced in December 1921 to £5. In December 1924 it was again reduced, this time to £2 10s., because it was felt that the fee was a material consideration to applicants who are not in a financial position to incur the outlay involved.

SOME OPINIONS FROM INTERESTED CITIZENS

Many of the figures in the questionnaire received were supplemented by opinions, from which are quoted the following. It is evident from these statements that many teachers, social workers, judges, directors of adult education, etc., believe that the fee is too high and is responsible for the decrease in naturalization and its disastrous social consequences.

Mrs. Kenneth F. Rich, of the Immigrants Protective League of Chicago, states: "We expected a decrease in naturalization, but we were not prepared for the immense drop in the Chicago district. The leading reasons are increase in fees, delay in supply of blanks, discouragement of the alien over the technicalities and obstacles on the long, long trail of the applicant."

Mr. Robert C. Deming, supervisor of adult education, Hartford, Conn.: "Americans believe in equality of opportunity and that 'a man's a man' regardless of his worldly wealth. When Congress radically increased the cost of naturalization in a time of depression, putting the emphasis upon wealth and not upon character and educational requirements, it ran contrary to our traditional ideals of democracy and lost a great opportunity to place citizenship on a spiritual rather than a material basis. How must citizenship be looked upon by our prospective citizens when it is a barrier and obstacle toward an economic, social, or immigration objective rather than an envied objective through educational and spiritual qualitative requirements? Somehow the lamp of citizenship has been dimmed."

Miss Clara L. Soule, director of Americanization, Portland, Maine, says: "My experience has been that the increased naturalization fee has proved a great hardship to many, even causing indefinite postponement."

Mr. Clarence L. Hewitt, director of adult education, Syracuse, N.Y., states: "I do not believe that the expense of naturalization demands the high fees. The high fees cause a postponement of the declaration and a consequent delay in preparation for citizenship. Even in good times the high fees will be a burden. In these hard times the high fees are an indirect tax on the community by reducing the petitioner's ability to take care of himself. In many cases the fees are loaned to petitioners by their friends. In a few instances private charitable agencies have paid the fees. This has had to cease on account of exhaustion of funds. They have caused resentment on the part of foreign born and have served to perpetuate the mass of alienage. In the cases of some the expiration of the 7 years allowed for the life of a declaration has come when the alien could not possibly raise the money to pay the fees for a petition, so the money and time expended on the declaration became a total loss."

Rev. John C. Carr, Catholic Charities, Buffalo, N.Y.: "The fees are too high for even normal times, and unemployment makes the fees doubly hard and prohibitive. I now know a number of worthy people who are not financially able to get their final citizenship papers."

Miss Maude E. Aiton, administrative principal of public schools, Washington, D.C., writes: "I believe the fee for naturalization is too high, and I also believe your study will show that to be the general feeling among workers with adult foreign born. No fee can be commensurate with the gift of citizenship. A fee that covers the cost of naturalization to our Government so that our own citizens will not bear the financial burden seems to me to be an ample charge. As I understand it, this was so before the larger fee was legislated for. The larger fee is denying to the economically handicapped man and woman, even though of high qualizations and real loyalty to the Government, its protection, and rights."

Miss Irene Siachta, director Catholic Immigrant Aid, New York City, states: "I am very much in favor of the reduction in naturalization fees. We have quite a number of clients who, like those enumerated in your statements, must defer their naturalization because of the charges. A smaller fee would be a blessing for them."

Mr. Read Lewis, director Foreign Language Information Service, New York City, writes: "The increased fees for naturalization are in our experience a serious deterrent. Many aliens who desire American citizenship cannot afford what it now costs. This seems particularly unfair during the present period of unemployment. We discriminate against the alien on the one hand and on the other increase the difficulties of his becoming a citizen. What is to be gained by such a policy? Naturalization should, it seems to us, be encouraged as soon as the alien has a sincere desire for it. If the former fees are not restored, the high fees now in force should, we believe, be substantially reduced.

Capt. Fritz Nelson, secretary immigration and Americanization department of Salvation Army, New York City: "The number of cases handled by the immigration and Americanization section has decreased since the July 1929 act which increased the fees for naturalization. People are prevented from becoming citizens because of the high fees. Of course, the present depression and hardship of obtaining money is also responsible for the decrease in the number of applications for citizenship. People who are having a hard time keeping body and soul together need their money for necessities. Citizenship is not a necessity. It is a duty and privilege, and therefore is a second consideration in times like these. The fee should not exceed the actual expenses incurred by the Government in the necessary progress of examination and issuance of certificate, etc."

Mrs. Maurice L. Goldman, chairman department of service for foreign born of the National Council of Jewish Women, says: "In this organization's experience with aliens who are applying for citizenship in practically every section in the country, the high fee is causing great hardships. Some of our local branches have undertaken to assist the aliens by having them deposit a small weekly sum until the full amount is made up with which the fee may be covered. The efforts of our organization to stimulate interest among foreign-born women to become naturalized as a part of their participation in community life are unfortunately frustrated by the increased fee, since most women are obliged to sacrifice their personal desires in order to take care of the urgent needs of their families."

Mrs. Edith Terry Bremer, executive, department of immigration and foreign communities, National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association, states: "To acquire American citizenship has always been important and has been held by successive thousands to be a precious privilege. To acquire it now is not only important, it often constitutes a family's one hope of remaining together or of maintaining independence. The excessively high fees required now have become a block to the fulfillment of naturalization hopes. To permit, in these times, a monetary figure to constitute a deciding factor in the business of qualifying for citizenship, amounts to casting the idealistic value of American citizenship over into the shadows of cynicism. I believe the fees connected with naturalization process should be immediately and materially lowered."

Mrs. Oscar Geballe, National Council of Jewish Women, San Francisco, Calif., says: "The applicants who apply to our organization for aid in naturalization find the high fees the most important factor which prevents them from completing their naturalization."

Mr. Henry Fruchter, Naturalization Aid League, New York City: "The high fee is the primary factor in the reduction of naturalization. Besides the high fee there are two other factors causing the decrease in the number of applications for naturalization—the depression. This is, of course, a very important factor. It is very difficult for an alien earning about $18 a week to afford citizenship. But when that alien is out of work the hardship is even greater. The educational requirements for citizenship eliminate approximately 5 percent of the people who apply."

Mrs. Joseph Skwirsky, chairman Newark Americanization Classes of the National Council of Jewish Women, reports: "Many of the women are ready for citizenship but have not the money with which to pay the fee. Our own experience has shown that many people are not able to pay the fee, but it is not certain if this is due to the present situation or that it might have been the same were conditions better."

Mrs. Joseph Kohn, of the Council of Jewish Women, and Miss Jeannette Kaner, of the Jewish Charities, Duluth, Minn. state: "The increase in fees makes it difficult for many of our people to think of getting their papers."

Miss Sara C. Clapp, Kips Bay Neighborhood Association, New York City, adds in her report: "Many people who come here for information concerning citizenship procedure and rates believe that they are being misinformed when they are told about the new fees. They go from one organization to another asking whether the fees could really have been raised to the extent they have been advanced. The old-age pension law, which came into effect on January 1, 1931, in New York City, has brought many inquiries about citizenship, inasmuch as it will benefit citizens. However, the inquiries are not followed up with applications for citizenship because of the new high cost of naturalization which very few can afford."

Mr. A. L. Sluger, Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, New York City, says: "The reasons for the decrease may be the combined factors of the increased fee as well as the present scarcity of money, with possibly the strict curtailment of immigration under the National Origins Quota Act."

Mr. Harold Fields, executive director National League for American Citizenship, New York City, states: "It is absurd to assume that the higher fees we charge, the more assured are we of a better grade of citizen. In the 1860's, when Carl Schurz and others became naturalized, the fee was $1 and the resultant product has become publicly known as 'our pioneers.' * * * These higher fees have already been the cause of a painful decrease in the number seeking citizenship and the number being granted citizenship. * * * These increased fees coming at a time of depression have caused a definite slow-down in the whole process of naturalization. That leaves us faced with the fact that the fees can only be paid out of income and that the income of aliens is being curtailed because in many cases they are losing their jobs, or are without jobs, because of their very alien status. If one cannot get work unless naturalized, and one cannot become naturalized unless one has work—a circle that actually exists today—the situation calls for correction. I speak for myself and for the National League for American Citizenship when I say that we will look upon the reduction in fees for naturalization as a very sensible form of legislation and a very wise act in Government policy."

CONCLUSIONS

The data submitted in this report show that there had been a steady growth of progress in the naturalization of aliens up to 1929.

There were more aliens naturalized in 1929, before the new law went into effect, than the admission of new aliens over 21 into this country. Since the passage of the new amendment increasing the fee there has been a definite decline in the process of incorporation of the alien throughout the country.

Whereas since the passage of the Cable Act in 1922 women were becoming naturalized in increasing numbers each year up to 1929, the high fee has affected them very markedly and fewer women are now being naturalized.

Practically all observers agree that the present fee for naturalization is entirely too high.

Many civic agencies agree and insist that the present fee is responsible for the decrease in naturalization.

Many observers believe that the present economic situation undoubtedly aggravates the detrimental effect of the high fee on aliens who desire to become citizens.

The present cost of administering the naturalization law has increased by only 11½ percent more than the cost in 1929. The excess in receipt of fees amounts to 1,052 percent more than in 1929. There is, therefore, no need for the high increase in fee to balance the Budget.

COMMENTS

Naturalization is in a sense a part of the educational and assimilation process of the alien in this country. The effort to make a citizen out of an adult alien is analogous to the education required in teaching civics and citizenship to a native child. We do not expect any revenue from the education of the child who is to be our future citizen. Why should we require revenue for incorporating the alien into our community life?

One of the most potent arguments that made restriction of immigrants acceptable to the country was that we would be able to assimilate the alien already within our gates. The economic argument for restriction of immigration was by itself a debatable one and by many considered fallacious. The World War had taught us that there were great groups of unassimilated aliens in our country and a great post-war Americanization movement was inaugurated to hasten the assimilation process of the aliens.

Now are we going to retard the assimilation of the very alien whose bulk loomed large and whose future assimilation was planned when our Government adopted the restricted-immigration program?

We have a bloc of aliens in this country amounting to over 5,000,000 people. At the rate we are going at present, it will take more than a generation to naturalize them. Economically, socially, and culturally they are isolated. Are we going to put greater obstacles in their path than they experienced before?

We have cut their cultural bridges to their old fatherlands behind them by our restrictive immigration measures. Shall we at the same time build a Chinese wall around them here so that the new fatherland is closed to them? It must not be forgotten that the effect of alienage is not confined to the actual 5,000,000 but to their immediate descendants as well. Particularly grave hardships are imposed in making naturalization difficult for those aliens whose families are still abroad.

There can be only one effect in this increase of cost which with unemployment is deterring many aliens from becoming naturalized. That effect is the perpetuation of a permanent body of noncitizens who will constitute an alien bloc of the population, which history shows has always led to a serious social problem.

The high fees should be reduced.

Respectfully submitted.

CECILIA RAZOVSKY,
Chairman Subcommittee on Effect of Increased Fee on Naturalization, National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship.

The letters referred to by Mr. WALSH, protesting against naturalization and registration fees, were referred to the Committee on Immigration, to accompany the bills, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION,
Fall River, January 24, 1930.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senator from Massachusetts, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As you are no doubt aware, the Massachusetts Bureau of Immigration is directly interested in the subject of naturalization, since practically 90 percent of all those that have gained American citizenship during the past 10 years have been assisted and advised at each step in the process of our organization.

Because of our intimate connection with this work, I desire to bring to your attention one particular clause of the new regulations that apparently works a grave hardship on a large group of people in this vicinity.

I refer especially to that section of the law which makes it mandatory that a record of arrival be produced for each candidate for citizenship, regardless of the date of entry.

Since the system of recording arrivals at our seaports began more than half a century ago, such persons are not affected by the recent law, to the same extent as those who entered from Canada prior to June 1906, the date on which formal inspection at the Canadian border line was inaugurated.

In this city especially are great numbers of Canadians who entered this country long prior to the year 1906, and consequently are not in position to satisfy the requirements anent record of entry.

For the most part, the group in question are not in financial circumstances to permit of their availing themselves of the legalization privilege, and I find it quite an impossible task to explain the necessity for such action. Within a week at least six persons of the class in question were informed of the necessity of legalization as a requisite for citizenship, and I am certain that in no instance will they proceed further. When we consider that frequently these persons, with great sacrifice, have attended evening schools for several years in preparation for a naturalization examination only to be confronted with the prohibitive fee of $40, I am sure that you will agree with me that their particular cases warrant your earnest consideration.

I am aware that our laws are frequently enacted with the retroactive feature, but I feel that this law is retroactive to the extent that it exacts an impossibility from a considerable group of people.

To be concise, the law now permits an arrival from Europe who entered at a seaport, such as Boston or New York in the year 1900, to acquire his citizenship at a cost of $20, while, on the other hand, a Canadian who crossed the land border in the same year must undergo the difficulty and expense of legalization in addition to the fee for citizenship.

May I respectfully request that you have the kindness to favor me with an opinion on this phase of the law, and also advise as to the possibility of any action that might be taken looking toward an amendment to correct this seeming injustice.

Very truly yours,

DIVISION OF IMMIGRATION AND AMERICANIZATION,
PATRICK J. HURLEY, District Immigration Agent.

SOMERVILLE, MASS.

DEAR MR. WALSH: I would appreciate very much if you would tell me what I could do in the following case: I was born in Canada, coming to this country at 6 months of age with my entire family. In 1927 I took out my first papers, and the second papers are now ready, but find that I will have to pay $35 before I can receive them, as they claim that there is no record of my entering this country. My parents claim at that time no record of entry was taken. I have my birth certificate and the date of my entry. I desire very much to become a citizen, but am not in a position to pay the extra $20 that they claim I must pay to the Immigration Bureau. Hoping that you might be able to help me, thanking you, I remain,

Yours truly,

ARTHUR M. HYDE,
158 Albion Street, Somerville, Mass.

THE SALVATION ARMY,
New York, N.Y., April 10, 1930.

Senator WALSH of Massachusetts,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The fee I referred to in my previous letter is the one paid by all applicants for (first papers) declaration of intention to become an American citizen, in the past $1, now $5.

In order to enlist in the United States Army aliens must have such first papers, and very frequently the recruit is without funds and unable to raise the fee. In such cases private organizations are asked by the recruiting officers to do so, and we have always done so cheerfully.

I feel that any alien recruiting for the Army should receive his first papers without any fee whatsoever.

I enclose Form A–2213, stating the sum payable.

Sincerely yours,

Capt. FRITZ NELSON.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As you know, the fees for naturalization are outrageous, as the result of Republican legislation. I presume that the time is not opportune for a change in the charges because of the narrow Democratic margin in both Houses. However, I believe a start should be made, and it would not hurt the party in this State any to have these new citizens know that efforts were being made to reduce these charges to their original status, which was fair and reasonable, $1 for primary declaration, $4 for final papers, and $1 for duplicate of last paper, instead of the present charges of $5, $20, and $10 for the same papers.

Very faithfully yours,

JOHN J. BUTLER.

BROOKLYN, N.Y., December 8, 1930.

Senator WALSH,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: As a former Bostonian, I am asking for your advice on a matter important to me. I should like to have introduced in Congress a bill to lower by at least 50 percent the fees for naturalization (especially the $10 fee for second papers). The general antialien reaction has raised a barrier to naturalization in these huge fees. Even though these were intended to be a part of permanent law, they can and ought to be changed.

As an example of the injustice they work, take my mother's case. She came here in 1897 and never could afford naturalization. I started the process in 1927 as a patriotic duty with my own money. Now, I have spent over $8 and still require $10 to pay the final fee, and I'm out of a job and broke. If the fee were reduced to $2, it would be a great help. Now, my mother could die happy without being a citizen, but why should naturalization be discouraged? Do you notice the outlaw condition of the Chinese here? Don't you think such a condition will exist among the foreign born if the policy of treating the alien as badly as possible is continued?

I hope you will introduce and press to a vote a bill reducing by at least 50 percent all fees for naturalization.

Yours very truly,

MARTIN FALL.

REGULATION OF STOCK EXCHANGES

Mr. KING. Mr. President, several years ago, and upon one or two occasions since, I introduced measures, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and which, in my opinion, if they had been enacted into law, would have prevented the debacle of 1929 so far as the stock exchange, stock sales, and so forth, are concerned.

Unfortunately, no action was taken with respect to those measures. I am now introducing a bill to establish a Federal stock exchange and securities commission, to regulate transactions in securities on the various stock exchanges, and for other purposes. If the measures which I formerly offered had been enacted into law, this rather drastic measure would not have been necessary. I ask that the bill may lie on the table for the present.

The bill (S. 2642) to establish a Federal Stock Exchange and Securities Commission to regulate transactions in securities on the various stock exchanges, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and ordered to lie on the table.

AMENDMENT OF THE RADIO ACT

Mr. DILL. I introduce a bill amending the radio law, to prevent the setting up of studios in the United States which are connected with radio stations in foreign countries that broadcast back into this country. I ask to have the bill referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The bill (S. 2660) to amend the Radio Act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (44 Stat. 1162), was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 7478) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle as a basic agricultural commodity, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. DUFFY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6951, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 39, line 14, to strike out "$51,310" and insert "$56,310"; and strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000."

On page 39, line 21, strike out "$346,835" and insert "$351,835."

STUDY OF LIQUIDATING AND TRUST COMMITTEES

Mr. McCARRAN submitted the following concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 8), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas the present national economic crisis has resulted in an emergency due to an abnormal decline of business enterprise and a corresponding decrease in the market value of real estate and other collateral securing issues of stocks, bonds, and mortgage notes; and

Whereas all such issues so secured were originally made in conformity with State laws regulating, defining, and restricting the pledging of collateral as security for such issues; and

Whereas great numbers of American people invested their life savings in such issues in reliance upon the protection guaranteed by incorporation act and acts regulating the issuance of securities; and

Whereas the economic situation has resulted in a "freezing" of the assets of many enterprises financed by such issues, resulting in a suspension of dividend and interest payments and a general depreciation in the market value of collateral pledged for such issues; and

Whereas in a great majority of such enterprises minority groups controlling large blocks of securities have organized "liquidating", "bondholders'", "reorganization", or "trust" committees, and have solicited proxies from minority stockholders and bondholders for the stated purpose of liquidating or refinancing defaulted issues, or otherwise reducing or reorganizing the capital structure of the enterprise; and

Whereas such committees have caused, through hasty liquidation, doubtful adjustment and questionable insolvency proceedings, the loss of much, if not all, of the investment of holders of a security interest in such enterprise; and

Whereas these methods of hasty liquidation through the medium of such committees are matters of tremendous disproportionate expense and result in bewilderment to the average small investor in such enterprises: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a joint committee of the Congress to be composed of 4 Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and 3 Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The committee is authorized and directed to make a general study of the organization and activities of reorganization committees, known as "liquidating", "bondholders'", "reorganization", or "trust" committees, organized by minority groups controlling large blocks of securities of business enterprises, with a view to determining particularly the desirability of such reorganization committees and the integrity of the members thereof. The committee shall report to the Congress, as soon as practicable, the results of its studies, together with its recommendations for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

INVESTIGATION OF SENATORIAL CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES, ETC., 1934

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S.Res. 173) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the campaign expenditures of the various candidates for the United States Senate, in all parties, the names of the persons, firms, or corporations subscribing, the amount contributed, the method of expenditure of said sums, and all facts in relation thereto, not only as to the subscriptions of money and expenditures thereof but as to the use of any other means or influence, including the promise or use of patronage, and all other facts in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest but which would aid the Senate in enacting any remedial legislation or in deciding any contests which might be instituted involving the right to a seat in the United States Senate.

No Senator shall be appointed upon said committee from a State in which a Senator is to be elected at the general election in November, 1934.

The investigation hereby provided for, in all the respects above enumerated, shall apply to candidates and contests before primaries and conventions and the contests and campaign terminating in the general election in November, 1934: Provided, That where complaint in writing, supported by affidavit of probable cause upon information and belief by any candidate of any party, or his authorized manager, is filed at least 20 days before the date of the primary or convention, the committee or duly authorized subcommittee shall immediately investigate the charges made in the complaint.

Said committee is hereby authorized to act upon its own initiative and upon such information as in its judgment may be reasonable or reliable. Upon complaint being made before said committee under oaths by any person, persons, candidate, or political committee, setting forth allegations as to facts which under this resolution it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, the said committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after a hearing upon said complaint, the committee shall find that the allegations in said complaint are immaterial or untrue.

Said committee is hereby authorized, in the performance of its duties, to sit at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as it deems necessary or proper. It is specifically authorized to require the attendance of witnesses by subpena or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents; to employ counsel, experts, and clerical and other assistants; and to employ stenographers at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words.

Said committee is hereby specifically authorized to act through any subcommittee authorized to be appointed by said committee. The chairman of said committee or any member of any subcommittee may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpenas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee or who appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation shall be punished as prescribed by law.

The expenses of said investigation, not exceeding in the aggregate $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers signed by the chairman of the committee or the chairman of any subcommittee.

All hearings before said committee shall be public, and all orders or decisions of the committee shall be public.

The committee shall make a full report to the Senate on the first day of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri desire the resolution referred to any committee?

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. LONG. Just a moment, Mr. President. I wish to object. I desire to make a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. There are not going to be any elections in the State of Louisiana this year, so this resolution is wholly unnecessary. I am sure the Senator from Missouri did not take that into account. Louisiana holds no elections to the Senate this year, so this would just be passing an unnecessary resolution. I hope the Senator will think that matter over before pressing the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA—EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. CONNALLY. I submit a Senate resolution requesting an additional appropriation to pay the deficit of the Louisiana election-expenditures committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and properly referred.

The resolution (S.Res. 174) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee authorized and directed to investigate the campaign expenditures of the various Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates, and candidates for the United States Senate, and other matters thereto related, in primaries, conventions, and general elections in 1932 is hereby authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $6,000, or so much thereof as may be found necessary, in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for said purpose.

INFORMATION FROM NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, which I ask to have read. I invite the attention of the Senate to it, since I intend to ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S.Res. 175) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the National Recovery Administration is requested to transmit to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, the following information:

(1) The names of all persons who have been or are now employed by such Administration, either in a regular or advisory capacity, whether or not they receive compensation, together with the residence addresses of such persons and the designation of the positions held by them with the Administration.

(2) The present and past business connections of all persons described in paragraph (1) who have held or are now holding positions (other than positions as stenographers, clerks, or messengers) on any National Recovery Administration department or board.

(3) A list of all industrial codes, either pending or approved, with which each person designated in paragraph (2) has been connected in any capacity, either official or advisory.

(4) The positions now held by all employees, deputies, attorneys, and advisers who have severed their connections with such Administration, such information to contain particularly the statement as to whether any such employees, deputies, attorneys, or advisers are now, or have been at any time, employed as members, officers, or agents of code authorities named under approved National Recovery Administration codes.

(5) A list of all codes handled by each administrator, deputy, or assistant deputy of such administration.

(6) The names of all members of each code authority, together with the name of the firm or other business connection of each such member.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a resolution comprehending a part of the subject matter of this resolution has already passed the Senate. I have not had an opportunity of examining this resolution, and I ask that it go over under the rule.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Arkansas that I am well aware of the resolutions for information which have already passed the Senate. There is no repetition in the pending resolution, as I am sure the Senator will find upon studying it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The resolution will go over under the rule, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Mr. DILL submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 176), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce hereby is authorized to employ a special assistant, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at $3,600 per annum, from March 1, 1934, until otherwise provided by law.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there are pending before the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs some 15 bills, many of them of major importance. Hearings are desired upon some of them, and there is no provision for having the testimony taken down by stenographers so that it can be preserved.

I have in my hand a short resolution of four lines only, authorizing the employment of a stenographer. I ask that it be read, and then I shall ask for action upon it at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S.Res. 177) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs or any subcommittee thereof be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventy-third Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during sessions or recesses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. That was done the other day for a Senator who had a similar situation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I am satisfied, however, to have the resolution referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The only question in the mind of the Chair was whether he was authorized, under the rules, to recognize a request for unanimous consent on a resolution of this kind. It seems to the Chair that anything can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. No, Mr. President; the practice has always been to have these resolutions referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. In order to cut the matter short, I consent to the reference of the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Under the law, the resolution has to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands there is a statute which requires that course to be taken.

Mr. McNARY. Yes, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which the foregoing resolution (S.Res. 177) was referred, reported it without amendment, and it was ordered to be placed on the calendar.

EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATOR FOR THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. McCARRAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 178), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof appointed to consider the nomination of Judge Frank H. Norcross to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, is authorized to expend not to exceed $2,500 out of the contingent fund of the Senate for the purpose of defraying the traveling and other necessary expenses of an investigator to be appointed by said Committee on the Judiciary, or subcommittee thereof.

STUDIES OF THE GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

On motion of Mr. PITTMAN, it was Ordered, That 100 copies of Senate Document 116, parts 1, 2, 3, and 4, relating to the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway, be printed, with illustrations, for the use of the Senate.

J. G. BRICKEL—WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON, it was Ordered, That the papers filed with the bill (S. 2182) granting a pension to J. G. Brickel, Seventy-second Congress, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

REGULATION OF INTERNATIONAL MESSAGE COMMUNICATION RATES (S.DOC. NO. 127)

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have made a public document a memorandum on the subject of the regulation of international communication rates prepared by Mr. Irvin Stewart, of the Treaty Division of the State Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

FEDERAL BANK DEPOSIT INSURANCE

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, one of the most thoughtful and usefully analytical discussions which I have ever read respecting Federal bank deposit insurance is an address by William P. Chapman, Jr., of the New York City bar, delivered on January 26, 1934, before the savings division of the American Bankers Association. I am particularly struck by the calculations which Mr. Chapman has scrupulously made respecting the actuarial problem involved in deposit insurance. He has pretty well disposed of the hostile argument that there is no actuarial base upon which to figure our deposit insurance. Indeed, in this aspect, he has carried his investigations much farther than my own, although he fully verifies the mathematics upon which I asked the Senate to rely when I was pressing the Federal deposit insurance law 1 year ago. These figures of Mr. Chapman's are so valuable that I want them to be a part of the RECORD for the information of Congress.

Mr. Chapman has compiled the complete record of our banking mortality from 1862 to 1932, inclusive. He finds that the grand total of all bank deposits for this period was $1,136,042,630,000. The total deposits in all suspended banks was $5,861,061,000. Then he made his computation on the theory that 90 percent of the deposits are insured; that is, 90 percent in money volume, and that 40 percent represents the average deficiency resulting from the liquidation of assets. Thus he finds that a Federal deposit insurance fund operating through these 68 years would have had to suffer net losses of $2,109,981,960. Then he figures that if all these banks during all this period had paid a modest annual insurance premium of one quarter of 1 percent, the fund at the end of 1932 would have a net favorable balance, after paying all losses, amounting to the tremendous sum of $730,124,615.

This is utterly convincing proof of the validity of the new Federal deposit insurance law. Mr. Chapman's 40-percent figure, in respect to the average liquidation deficiency, certainly is conservative. I believe it is more likely to be as low as 35 percent. On the basis of recent experience it might go as high as 45 percent. But the 40-percent average certainly is sound.

Meanwhile, it is to be noted that Mr. Chapman figures on a 90-percent coverage in his calculations, whereas our present deposit insurance law, stopping with the insurance of deposits up to $2,500, while covering 97 percent of our depositors in numbers, actually involves only about 30 percent of our total deposits in dollars. Call it 35 or 40 percent. Still it would involve but half the risk upon which Mr. Chapman has figured. In other words, based on 68 years of our banking experience, a hazard fully twice as great as that involved in our present insurance law would require annual premiums of but one quarter of 1 percent in order to produce a favorable margin of safety amounting to nearly three quarters of a billion dollars.

These figures furthermore include no initial capital in an insurance fund, and our capital is in the neighborhood of $200,000,000. The inevitable conclusion is that we are proceeding upon absolutely sound ground with the new Federal deposit insurance law, which became effective last New Year's. It is with both pride and consolation that I present this actuarial vindication of the new law.

I ask that Mr. Chapman's general conclusions in this admirable address may lie on the table and be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONCLUSIONS

I believe that the following deduction is more than amply sustained by the figures that I have gathered, namely: Whether the deposit-guaranty system proves in the long run to be useful or otherwise, there are no rational grounds for denouncing it as inherently and necessarily unsound or for believing that it is fraught with the possibilities of disaster or grave and insupportable losses to the solvent banks. My belief is that the system is entirely workable in principle, and so far as the commercial banks are concerned may prove to be a revolutionary utility which will avoid the necessity of instituting a Nation-wide system of branch banking. Changes in the law can be made which should be effective in removing any reasonable feeling of apprehension on the part of the commercial banks.

My own further conclusions are:

1. Since the savings banks in 69 years have contributed less than 0.8 percent to the total bank losses, they should not be required to contribute over 25 percent to the cost of insurance, and the law should be amended so as to treat the savings banks as a special risk with a much smaller annual charge against them than is applied to the commercial banks.

2. The law should be amended to require an annual contribution of at least one fourth of 1 percent from the commercial banks until a fund has been accumulated which, together with the initial contribution, amounts to at least 2½ percent of the total deposits and which should thereafter be maintained at that relative level.

3. The United States should insure the payment of any deficiency in the fund in the even of the happening of any unusual calamity upon such terms as may be worked out.

4. Such insurance being given, a reasonable limit should be placed upon the rates of the charges that may be assessed upon the banks that are members of the fund within any period of 1 year, 2 years, and 3 years.

5. The mutual savings banks should join the temporary fund and use their efforts to obtain amendments to the law on the lines above indicated, and, if such amendments are obtained, it would be unwise for the mutual savings banks to remain outside of the permanent fund.

THE TARIFF, RECIPROCITY, AND N.R.A.—ADDRESS BY WILLIAM L. MONRO

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a recent address delivered by Mr. William L. Monro, of Pittsburgh, Pa., president of the American Tariff League, at the Forty-ninth Annual Meeting of the American Tariff League in the city of New York, January 18, 1934. The address is entitled "The Tariff, Reciprocity, and N.R.A." Mr. Monro is a careful student of tariff problems.

In his address Mr. Monro indicates that at the present time we have a tariff problem in this country in every way more acute than at any time during the past 50 years; that very few people realize the flood of imports produced under labor and wage conditions far lower than our own which threaten to undermine our own living standards; that there is little purpose in seeking to eliminate cut-throat competition in our domestic markets through the N.R.A. unless we protect ourselves from the menace of cut-throat competition from abroad; that only an adequate protective tariff stands between our wage levels and living standards and those of the rest of the world; that higher prices for American-made goods, toward which we are moving, are a direct invitation to increase importations of competitive foreign-made products, and that the passage of the Recovery Act makes tariff reciprocity with foreign countries out of the question. Mr. Monro urges every industry in the United States to be on its guard against the adoption of what may be termed a "tariff-scuttle policy."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We have rounded out another year in the record of the Tariff League, and with this meeting the league enters upon its fiftieth year. By a singular coincidence, as the league approaches its half-century mark, the country is confronted with a tariff situation which is in many respects similar to the situation in the midst of which the league was founded. The league was organized in 1885, the same year which brought a Democratic administration into power in Washington under President Cleveland. The tariff act in force at the time was the act of 1883, the first major revision which had been made in our tariff since the Civil War period. In the 49 years that have elapsed since 1885 the country has operated under eight different tariff laws, in the formation of all of which the league has taken an active part. I shall make no attempt here to discuss even the outstanding features in the league's tariff record for the past 49 years, but shall simply say that it is a record of achievement on which I believe we can all stand.

AN IMPORT MENACE CONFRONTS AMERICAN INDUSTRY

With these few backward glances, I turn now abruptly to the all-important present situation. That this is serious, insofar as the tariff is concerned, is or ought to be obvious to all. In my former annual reports to you I have attempted to outline the principal features in the tariff situation confronting us at the beginning of each year. I shall do so again this year, particularly because in the tariff situation confronting us today I believe we are confronted with an import menace which only a very few people appreciate. I have referred on more than one occasion in the past to the attitude of complacent indifference with which many of our people have come to regard the tariff. I suppose this is to be expected, for it seems to be an inherent characteristic of human nature to "lock the door after the horse is stolen." Nothing in our whole national history has emphasized this fact more than our experience over the past 14 years with the prohibition question. Fourteen years ago there was much the same attitude of indifference on the part of the country at large toward prohibition as there is today toward the tariff. After the passage of the Volstead Act people began to realize the full effect of the prohibition amendment, with the resultant interference with personal habits and the shocking defiance of law that followed. Storms of protest arose against it, and 14 years of bitter, costly agitation were required to repeal it.

This same attitude of indifference applies with respect to the tariff. The existence of a protective tariff law on our statute books breeds a false sense of security on the part of our people. They seem to regard that tariff law as fixed and unchanging as a law of the Medes and Persians. They overlook the fact that it changes, as it did in 1894, as it did in 1913, and as it will again—perhaps this year. And it almost seems as though nothing but such a change as we had in 1894 and 1913 will arouse our people to the economic necessity of a protective tariff for this country. A major activity of the Tariff League, in season and out, is to drive home this fundamental truth: Only an adequate protective tariff stands between our wage levels and living standards and those of the rest of the world. To maintain these the tariff must be sufficient at least to equalize the difference between production costs in this country and those of foreign countries.

I said that we are confronted with an import menace—an import menace which very few of us appreciate, partly because for the past 6 months it has been held in check by the depreciation in our dollar in international exchange. I am thoroughly convinced that were it not for the depreciation in our dollar our import statistics would be running into figures which would convince even the most skeptical of the seriousness of the tariff problem confronting us. I believe this to be so in view particularly of the upward movement in our import statistics which has occurred despite the depreciation in our dollar. Furthermore, when the dollar is finally stabilized on an inflated basis, it must be expected that foreign countries will take adequate steps to offset any advantage in foreign trade that we may temporarily secure by such inflation. They are certain to fight for their share of the world's markets, and for as large a share as possible of the market in this country, the most highly prized market in the world.

INCREASING IMPORTS—1933 VERSUS 1932

For the last 5 months of 1933 for which statistics are available, July through November, our total imports were valued at $724,000,000 as compared with $478,000,000 for the same 5 months of 1932. This is an increase, as between the two periods, of 51 percent in the value of our imports despite the depreciation in our dollar. A considerable part of this increase is due to increased importations of crude and raw materials, many of which are on the free list, but the increase is by no means confined to these products. Take finished manufactures, for example, practically all of which are covered by the dutiable schedules in our tariff law.

For the 5 months, July through November of 1933, our imports of finished manufactures were valued at $163,000,000. For the same 5 months of 1932 they were valued at $128,000,000. This is an increase as between the two periods of 27 percent. These, of course, are value figures, and as such reflect changes in the unit prices of the imports. The volume figures tell much the same story, however. Using the Tariff League's index number of the volume of imports, which takes out of the figures all influence of price increases and decreases, the volume of our total imports of all commodities increased 30 percent as between the period July through November 1932, and July through November 1933. In the case of finished manufactured imports, the volume increase between the two 5-month periods of 1932 and 1933 amounted to 22 percent.

Before leaving this subject of import statistics, I should like to refer to one other significant showing made by the Tariff League's volume index. Our index uses the average monthly importations for the 3 years 1923–25 as a 100 base. According to the league's index, the volume of our total imports for the 5 months, July through November 1933, averaged 95 percent of the 1923–25 base. For finished manufactured imports only, the league's index for the 5 months, July through November 1933, stands at 83 percent of the 1923–25 base. Such figures as these, especially when they are compared with the shrinkage in the volume of our domestic business, indicate, it seems to me, the seriousness of the import menace confronting us. The story is even more striking as regards imports of individual commodities. I shall refer briefly to a few that are typical of a great many more, using for comparison in each case the imports for the 5 months, July through November 1932, and July through November 1933. As between these two periods dutiable acids and anhydrides increased from less than 8,000,000 pounds to over 21,000,000 pounds. Printed cotton cloth increased from 4,000,000 square yards to over 7,000,000 square yards. Imports of bleached cotton cloth increased from less than 2,500,000 square yards to over 6,000,000 square yards. The bleached cotton cloth story is even more striking than these figures would indicate. For the 11 months of 1933 just short of 19,000,000 square yards of imported bleached cotton cloth came into this country. This 11-month figure is higher by more than 5,000,000 square yards than the total for any full year in the last decade.

Such is the situation from the statistical standpoint. I turn now to certain other factors in the tariff outlook which, in my opinion, increase greatly the seriousness of the import menace confronting us.

THE FLEXIBLE-TARIFF THREAT

The first of these has to do with the Tariff Commission and with section 336—the so-called "flexible-tariff provision." Since last March only three tariff-rate changes have been proclaimed by the President under section 336. One of these changes was made on fish and resulted in an increase in duty. The other two changes were made on what I believe may fairly be called industrial products—velvets and velveteens and agricultural hand tools. The rates on twill-back velveteens and on agricultural tools were cut the full 50 percent allowable under the law. I am not going to say that these slashes may not have been indicated by the Commission's statistical analysis. However, I do say that both of these rate reductions were made on the basis of cost data compiled before the National Recovery Act went into operation; and that therefore neither of these reductions could have taken into consideration the increased American costs resulting from the operation of the Recovery Act.

I mean no unfair criticism of the Commission or of the President, but I believe both of these rate reductions were unwarranted at the time at which they were made. I shall go further, and say that I believe the President would be fully justified in making section 336 a "one-way tariff street"—a one-way street leading up only. Our whole industrial recovery program is designed to increase American costs and prices, and while this program continues in force, and to the extent that it is successful, I believe rate reductions which are made under the flexible tariff on the basis of domestic costs taken from 6 to 12 months prior to operations under the N.R.A. are wholly unwarranted and unjustified. Until and unless some such policy is adopted, the flexible-tariff provision constitutes a very real part of the import menace confronting American labor and industry. How real this is can very well be indicated by a reference to the fact that the Commission's own statistics in its seventeenth annual report indicate that it now has 35 flexible-tariff investigations in various stages of completion and pending applications for 49 more.

N.R.A. AND THE TARIFF

So much for the Commission and the flexible tariff. Let us consider next how the tariff is affected by the whole industrial recovery program. Let me make it clear at the very outset that in what I say I intend no adverse criticism of the Recovery Act itself, nor the program carried out pursuant thereto. It has undoubtedly done much to improve business—in fact, more than was ever believed possible. By its proper administration it is certain to bring about still further improvement. It is remarkable what has been accomplished in solving a problem of this magnitude in such a short space of time. In his efforts to revive industry through the administration of the National Recovery Act, the President deserves the enthusiastic support of everyone. I wish to discuss only the effects and accomplishments of the Recovery Act and program insofar as they have a bearing on our tariff problem. From the best information I have been able to secure one result of the Recovery Act to date has been an increase in industrial labor costs of from 15 to 40 percent. With labor cost so important a factor in the production cost of all products, the increased labor costs resulting from the operation of the Recovery Act have resulted in higher costs of production, which inevitably mean higher prices for American-made products. Higher prices for American-made products are a direct invitation to increased importations of competitive foreign-made products. In other words, to the extent that the National Recovery program is successful, it will raise the whole level of costs and prices in this country still higher above what these are in foreign countries. To the extent that this happens, to that extent must industries secure increased tariff protection, limited, however, as previously stated, at least to the difference in the costs of production in this country and abroad.

THE WEAKNESS IN SECTION 3 (E) AND A REMEDY

It will be said that the Recovery Act provides in section 3 (e) its own means for preventing increased importations of foreign-made competing merchandise, the effect of which would be to undermine our whole industrial recovery program. It is true that section 3 (e) was intended to control the menace of increased imports, and if used promptly it can be made an effective control. I do not wish to seem to prejudice section 3 (e) or the Recovery Administration's use of it, but I am nevertheless compelled to say that the developments to date surrounding section 3 (e) give little promise of its prompt and effective use to restrict competitive imports, and if these are not restricted they will disrupt our whole recovery program. Section 3 (e), it seems to me, is defective in one respect. According to the present plan for its administration, an American industry operating under a code making an application for relief from increased imports must file a statement of supporting evidence in great detail.

The industry's application is subject to a preliminary analysis and check by the N.R.A. import division, and if the complaint is found to be justified, the next move is an investigation by the Tariff Commission into the facts of the case. All the while this is going on, the American industry which has made the valid complaint, and whose costs have been greatly increased under the N.R.A., must await the outcome of the Commission's investigation and meet as best it can the competition from the imported merchandise. By the time all this has been done the industry requiring assistance will probably have succumbed. This obviously is neither right nor fair, and the remedy is simple. Provision should be made that the day the N.R.A. import division decides that the complaint filed by an American industry under section 3 (e) is valid, from that day on, all further imports of the commodity in question should be suspended pending the outcome of the Tariff Commission's investigation, or the importer should be required to give bond to pay such duty as the Commission shall find warranted. This would help close the door before the horse is stolen, even though it did not lock it, and it would afford the American industry a measure of relief under section 3 (e) which is now no part of the plan. Section 3 (e) was written into the Recovery Act for the benefit of American industry. Unless some such plan as I have suggested is adopted, the recovery of many industries will be impossible, and to that extent the purposes of the N.R.A. will be defeated.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S TARIFF ATTITUDE

All of which brings me to the subject of the administration's attitude toward our tariff problem. In the last analysis, section 3 (e) of the Recovery Act will be effective or ineffective depending upon the attitude adopted toward its administration, and so it is with our tariff problem as a whole. The Democratic Party came into power last spring, pledged not only to a revision in our existing tariff law but to a change in the underlying principle of our whole protective-tariff policy by the inauguration of a system of tariff bargaining and reciprocity. To date this policy has not been made effective.

The passage of the National Recovery Act with its organization of industry on a higher cost level makes tariff reciprocity for this country out of the question, unless it is intended deliberately to sacrifice some industries in order to increase export trade for other industries. The adoption of such a policy can be justified only on the theory that we can bring about economic recovery in the United States by developing and expanding our export trade, and that this result will justify sacrificing many of our industries for the benefit of foreign countries in return for tariff concessions by those countries to our export trade.

Such a policy then arouses concern as to the basis for determining what industries are to be sacrificed on the altar of export trade. Are the owners of those industries to be compensated for the destruction of their investments? Are their employees to be shifted to other industries or forced to join the army of unemployed? Are the smaller industries to be sacrificed for the larger? These and many similar questions must be satisfactorily solved before any industry can complacently contemplate a tariff policy which means its extinction.

That such a plan is under consideration by some of the President's advisors is unquestionable. That the President will adopt such a ruthless policy to secure such uncertain and meager results is almost unbelievable. Nevertheless, it behooves every industry to be on its guard against the adoption of what may be termed a "tariff-scuttle policy."

Here are the principal features in the tariff problem confronting us, and here, too, are the principal details in the import menace which confronts us today. If, in the midst of this situation, the administration at Washington abandons our protective tariff policy in favor of a policy of tariff bargaining in the avowed attempt to expand our export trade, then many industries are confronted with a most critical situation.

INTERNATIONALISM VERSUS NATIONALISM

Such is the trend here in our own country, while in every foreign country of any importance the whole program is one of extreme nationalism. Does our Government, in other words, propose to launch forth on a program of internationalism at the very time when the whole foundation of the economic program in foreign countries is first and foremost one of protecting their own industries and their own labor? In the last analysis, except for the actual shedding of blood, there is little difference between economic warfare and military warfare—the one is fully as destructive of the independence of a country as the other. Believing this, I cannot help but feel that if we now abandon our policy of protecting our industries and our labor against unlimited foreign competition we shall be doing exactly the same thing that we would do if we were to disarm this country and strip it of its national defenses in the face of a world-wide program of increasing armaments.

I am not recommending that we do not develop and expand our export trade as much as possible, but I am recommending that we do not sacrifice a portion of our great domestic market for a mess of export porridge. Furthermore, as I said a year ago, we can only increase our export trade by engaging in a battle of prices in the world's markets with foreign producers who have always had a tremendous competitive advantage over us as a result of their lower labor and production costs, and whose competitive advantage is today greater than it ever has been as a result of the increase in our wages and production costs made necessary by the National Industrial Recovery program. I believe this latter fact deserves all the emphasis which can be placed upon it. When on June 16 last our President signed the National Industrial Recovery Act, he shoved into the background the whole plan of expanding our export trade by a policy of tariff bargaining. The whole industrial recovery program is inconsistent and completely out of tune with the proposal of increased foreign trade, and if persisted in, it will be at the expense of the industrial recovery program.

Is it not a great mistake to talk reciprocity with countries whose exportable products are largely the same as those of which we have an enormous surplus? Can a reciprocal tariff policy be justified that will let in those products for which the Government is paying large bonuses in the effort to reduce unwieldy surpluses and maintain prices that will assure a livable return to the raisers of those products? Can any reciprocal tariff policy be justified that brings into competition with the shorter working hours and higher labor rates paid in this country under the NRA, the pittance paid labor, toiling from morning to night, of various foreign countries? With our ability to absorb in normal times 90 percent of what we produce, our first care should be the protection of our own market for our own industries before we seek to share our market with others.

THE ROLE OF THE AMERICAN TARIFF LEAGUE

I have been amazed and astonished at the frequency with which during the past few years I have encountered an attitude on the part of some manufacturers and merchants to the effect that we no longer have a tariff problem in this country. In my opinion we have a tariff problem in this country in every way more acute than that problem has been during the past 50 years. I have tried to indicate to you my reasons for believing this to be the case, and in doing so, I have intended to indicate why I believe at no time since it was founded in 1885 have we had as much need for the American Tariff League as we have today. It should not be necessary for me or anyone else to have to justify the league's existence. Every word I have said concerning the tariff problem and the import menace confronting us is an argument for American industry's support of the American Tariff League. The league has aptly been called "the holding company for the protective tariff policy." Not in my lifetime has that policy needed a holding company as it needs it today.

For well over a hundred years we have paid, and paid dearly, every time we have abandoned the protective tariff policy, and its abandonment has brought retirement to those who caused it. I close by telling you of a significant incident reported to me by a friend of mine who happened to be an intimate advisor of the late Theodore Roosevelt. In a conversation with my friend, just before the close of his administration in 1909, President Roosevelt said: "Jim, as I look back over the last 7 years, I can see some mistakes I have made, but, by gad, there is one mistake I didn't make. I didn't open up the tariff."

OPERATIONS OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD a tabulation of the operations of the several Federal land banks. I think the information contained in the table will be of interest to all Members of the Senate.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Federal land banks and agents of Land Bank Commissioner—All banks, week ended Jan. 10, 1934

ATTITUDE OF THE BAR TOWARD SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC CHANGES—ADDRESS BY WILLIAM HEALY

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an address by Mr. William Healy, president of the Idaho Bar Association, delivered at the meeting of that association at Boise, Idaho, on July 14, 1933, be printed in the RECORD. It is a remarkably clear view as to the proper attitude of the bar toward the profound social and economic changes being attempted by the administration in our national life.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I shall not undertake anything so formidable as an address. I should like, instead, to suggest a question for the consideration of the bar. It has to do with the subject upon which Judge Ailshie indirectly touched in his remarks just now. I do not pretend to know the answer to this question.

It might be framed in this manner: What is to be anticipated as the probable attitude of the bar toward the profound social and economic changes that are being attempted in our national life? It may be said that there is no general answer to a question such as this; that lawyers are individuals like other people and that the attitude of the individual lawyer is determined by his outlook on life rather than by force of his membership in the legal profession. But I am thinking of the bar as an institution—as an institution with traditions and settled habits of thought, possibly indeed possessed of certain inhibitions. And I am wondering whether those traditions, inhibitions, and habits of thought may not prove to be in serious conflict with the spirit of the time.

In a recent opinion Justice Brandeis took judicial notice of the widely prevalent view that our economic system and practices have fostered a rapid and undue concentration of wealth, and that the resulting disparity in incomes was a major cause of the great depression. It is widely believed that the malady from which the country has suffered for the past 4 years was brought on in considerable measure by the ravages of uncontrolled greed. It is felt that economic health cannot permanently be restored and that equality of opportunity is not possible without fundamental changes in many of our old concepts. These convictions are wide-spread and they are deep and they have found their most rapid growth during the past few years. Ideas as to methods and remedies are tentative, even to the point of vagueness, but the will to act upon these convictions dominates the country. The philosophy underlying these ideas obviously did not originate with the bar. It had its origin, or at least its vocal expression, in large measure, in the universities. Where does the bar stand with respect to it?

Lawyers, of course, have long been familiar with the power of Government in respect of business affected with a public interest. But the underlying thought of the Industrial Recovery Act is that all business is affected with a public interest, and that social ends take precedence over the freedom of private contract. The profit motive, hitherto reigning in solitary grandeur in the field of private enterprise, is asked to move over and make room for considerations of public service and the welfare of labor. The end of enterprise is thought to be not merely the making of profits, but rather the making possible of finer and happier living conditions for all.

Thus emphasis is being transferred from property rights to what are deemed to be human needs. Old concepts thought unchangeable are no longer held necessarily valid. Many barriers erected by lawyers and courts in the field of constitutional law must be surmounted or ignored.

The notion is expressed in many quarters that these changes are temporary only and are intended merely for the purpose of pulling us out of the slough of depression; and that once embarked on the high road to prosperity they will be discarded, and the old unrestrained scramble for profits will be resumed in all its pristine vigor. These notions are, to my way of thinking, in the last degree fantastic. If these ideals are valid, if they contain within themselves the germ of essential truth, as even these commentators seem to concede, then they are with us to stay. The probable impact of ideas such as these upon the bar of America is at least an interesting subject for speculation. In any suggestions that I may put forward with respect to the matter, I hope you will not consider that such suggestions are made in a bumptious or critical spirit, because I discover within myself the traits which I believe to be common to the profession. We lawyers in our thinking are largely circumscribed by the rule of stare decisis. The legal mind tends to look backward over highways already traversed rather than forward to new fields or byways where no path is discernible. We are, perhaps, better equipped as guardians of established institutions than as guides in a wilderness of experiment.

The legal mind is not accustomed to appraising a new idea with sole reference to its utility. Indeed its utility is frequently lost sight of in our attempt to reconcile the idea with what we conceive to be established principles. We have built a majestic temple of law and we desire humanity to adapt itself to the structure. We are apt to be nonplused if humanity, deeming the structure a dwelling house and not a prison, undertakes to make it over in some unorthodox way. We are inclined to insist that the changes shall at least conform to the traditional architecture, even though the utility of the changes may suffer in the process.

Bench and bar are, to a degree, the victims of their own technique. It is a common charge of the laity that the bar has an irresistible habit of substituting the fictions of precedent for the facts of life; and there is considerable truth in the charge. It seems at times as though we were in the service of some alien deity who is indifferent to the hot problems of mankind and preoccupied only with maintaining the integrity of a pattern or a tradition. We have only to read many modern opinions dealing with social and economic legislation to mark how the court labors with matters that are beside the point and often from beginning to end of the opinion fails to come to grips with the real question involved.

In some such way as this we may seek to forecast the probable attitude of the bar toward the tendencies of the age. It is not possible for us to remain aloof from this movement of which I have spoken. The very terms of our employment require us to come to grips with it. The only question is what is to be the spirit of our approach. Will it be in the traditional manner by seeking to confine the movement to old channels which, as many are persuaded, lead back inevitably to the swamps of yesterday; or shall we glimpse the movement for what it really is, the gropings of a people, perplexed and in extremity, striving to set their feet on the path to better days. Shall we put ourselves in harmony with the spirit which animates this movement and help as best we can to guide it wisely toward the ideals which it has set for itself; or shall we undertake to saddle and bridle it and ride it to futility?

There is room for wide divergence of opinion with respect both to the wisdom and practicability of these ideas. I am not now discussing either their wisdom or their practicability. There can be no difference of opinion as to their profound significance. Nor is there room for difference of opinion that the problems out of which they grow are problems crying aloud for solutions. James Truslow Adams recently remarked that if we cannot measurably solve these problems we cannot be said to have a civilization, but only a mere existence. I am not suggesting either that the bar embrace or that it reject these ideas. I am suggesting only that it approach the consideration of them, not on a plane of cold legalism, but on a plane of realities.

The task which the country has imposed on itself is a colossal one. It may well prove to be one impossible of accomplishment. I understand Al Smith to say that the job is not one for the lawyer and the legislator at all, but rather one for the priest, the philosopher, and the doctor. But the art of the priest and of the philosopher is long, and time is fleeting. There may be need for haste. He cannot be called an alarmist who calls attention to the ominous warnings we have had that the fabric of things may collapse before our eyes. The lawyer and the legislator cannot abdicate and leave the task to philosophy and religion, although they may well study with profit the precepts of both.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, out of order I desire to make a statement with reference to the Louisiana case. On the 10th of January the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, asked to have referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections certain petitions and communications received by the Vice President and by him referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That motion was concurred in by the Senate, and certain petitions and other documents were transferred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

That committee has had more than one meeting, and at its last meeting the chairman of the committee was authorized to fix a date for a hearing of the issues raised by the petitions. The Judiciary Committee has reserved, however, two questions originally referred to that committee; that is to say, whether or not the petitions should have been received by the President of the Senate and whether or not the petitions or matters and things therein contained were privileged. It is obvious, I think, that the Privileges and Elections Committee will deal with some embarrassment with the petitions in the case until that question has been answered by the Judiciary Committee.

I am advised that the Judiciary Committee has made no formal response to the inquiry propounded by the Senate at the time the petitions were referred to it; that is to say, the Judiciary Committee has not answered whether the petitions should have been received or, having been received, whether they are privileged, and until the committee decides that matter the Privileges and Elections Committee, for reasons which it is wholly unnecessary to detail, will find itself in a somewhat embarrassing position.

It is obvious, I think, that we cannot undertake to say that the petitions do or do not raise issues of which the Senate should take cognizance unless in fairness to the committee and in fairness to the petitioners, indeed in fairness to the whole Senate, we are able to say what the charges are; in other words, unless we are able specifically to set out the charges contained in the several petitions.

It may be that the reference to the Privileges and Elections Committee would authorize the committee to proceed to lay upon the record the full charges. Certainly the committee would desire to do that if it expresses its opinion either one way or the other upon the sufficiency of the petition. But obviously it is not the proper thing for the Committee on Privileges and Elections to do until the Judiciary Committee has answered the questions propounded to it originally.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not quite in accord with my distinguished friend, the Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Several months ago, indeed at the last session of Congress, a number of communications in the form of petitions forwarded by citizens of Louisiana were presented to the Vice President and by him laid before the Senate. Upon motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] those petitions and communications were referred to the Judiciary Committee for two purposes and two purposes only: First, to determine whether or not the Vice President or the Senate should have received the petitions or memorials or communications and, secondly, if so received, whether they were privileged.

As stated, upon motion of the Senator from Arkansas, those particular petitions, memorials, or communications were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Later, and at this session of the Congress, while those same petitions and memorials are in the custody of the Judiciary Committee, other petitions, perhaps similar in character containing similar allegations or charges, were presented to the Senate and by the Vice President laid before the Senate and were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we can distinguish between those petitions, though they may cover the same ground in part, that were referred to the Judiciary Committee at the last session of Congress and the petitions and memorials which were presented at this session and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Therefore—and in that respect I differ with my friend from Georgia—I do not see any embarrassment in the Committee on Privileges and Elections proceeding to the consideration of those petitions which were sent to it.

May I say that at the time the latter petitions to which I have referred were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. ASHURST] specifically stated that with respect to the petitions and matters before the Judiciary Committee it was not intended to deprive that committee of the consideration of the same.

A statement which I made at the time in effect was that the petitions referred to the Judiciary Commitee were referred to a subcommittee, of which I was chairman, that I prepared the report, which I did, analyzing the various legal questions involved and the subcommittee considered the report. I am sorry the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is not here. The Senator from Louisiana raised some question with respect to the report and desired to be heard, after the subcommittee had referred the matter back to the full Judiciary Committee. Thereupon it was suggested that the matter go back to the subcommittee, where it now lies.

Sometime ago I called the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to the fact that the subcommittee is very anxious to get the matter disposed of. I asked him to be ready to appear and make such suggestions as he might see fit with respect to the report. I have conferred with the Senator this morning and it is my purpose, if I can get the subcommittee together this afternoon, to take up the report which I prepared months and months ago and ask for its approval, so it may be submitted to the full committee, and, after it shall receive the approval of the committee, if that shall be had, it will be reported back to the Senate.

I make this statement in order that the Senate may know there has been no neglect in the consideration of the matter.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, my statement was in no sense critical of the Judiciary Committee. I was merely calling attention to the situation which actually exists. I think the Senator from Utah is quite right in saying that with respect to the petitions which have been presented at this session of the Congress the Committee on Privileges and Elections may proceed without the slightest embarrassment; but I may say to the Senator from Utah that the petitions presented at this session by reference make a part thereof the petitions originally presented and on which the original question of privilege arose, and they are substantially all the petitions filed at this session.

Mr. President, I repeat there was no disposition to be critical, but to invite the Judiciary Committee, if possible, to dispose of the question of privilege and the other question as well, because as Chairman of the Privileges and Elections Committee I have been authorized to fix the date for the hearings and commence investigation of the petitions, and under that authority have decided to fix the first hearing for Wednesday of next week, February 14. For that reason I was bringing the matter to the attention of the Senate at this time.

CONTROL OF BANK CREDIT

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I think we are all greatly interested in the matter of bank credit and the way the general public, and the farmers in particular, have suffered during the last few years in the matter of concentration of bank deposits. I can hardly believe most of us realize how great this concentration has been. An editorial appeared in the Philadelphia Record of February 1 under the title of "Who Controls the Bank Credit?" reminding us that at the end of 1932 the 200 largest banks in the country controlled only 58 percent of all commercial deposits, while at the end of 1933 the 100 largest banks controlled $17,000,000,000 out of the $33,000,000,000 involved in banks, leaving only $16,000,000,000 which was out of the hands of the few.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record, Feb. 1, 1934]

WHO CONTROLS BANK CREDIT?

The big banks are getting bigger; the small banks are getting smaller and fading from the picture.

The American Banker reports that the Nation's 200 largest commercial banks controlled 63 percent of all deposits in commercial banks, or $20,000,000,000, at the end of 1933.

Only 37 percent, or $13,000,000,000, were left to be divided among 14,000 smaller banks.

At the end of 1932 the 200 largest banks controlled only 58 percent of all commercial deposits.

Concentration of control in banking proceeds at a relentless pace. The 100 largest banks controlled $16,000,000,000 of a total of $40,000,000,000 of commercial deposits at the end of 1926. Twenty-four billion dollars of deposits were out of their hands.

At the end of 1933 the 100 largest controlled seventeen billions out of thirty-three billions. Only sixteen billions were out of their hands.

These larger banks, with their growing monopoly of bank resources, dominate the smaller banks, dominate the Federal Reserve banks, and hold a dictatorship over American bank credit.

The 200 largest by no means represent 200 separate interests. They are joined in groups with similar backing, leaving control of bank credit actually in the hands of a very small number of men.

These men, through their domination of the 12 Federal Reserve banks, have actually usurped the Government's sovereign function of dictating the national credit policy. Credit is expanded and contracted as they decide—not as the administration wants or as the national good demands.

That is why the administration must, in the very near future, merge the Federal Reserve banks into a single central bank of issue. It must manage the central reservoir of national credit, expand and contract the quantity of credit to keep the dollar stable in purchasing power.

We shall never have a stable dollar while the money changers possess the power to inflate or deflate credit at pleasure for their own private profit.

INFORMATION CONCERNING CERTAIN GOVERNMENTAL CORPORATIONS

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I desire at this time to call up Senate Resolution 151, which was submitted by me some days ago and now lies upon the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A resolution (S.Res. 151) requesting information concerning the creation of certain corporations in connection with the administration of acts of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. STEIWER on January 22, 1934, as follows:

Whereas it appears that certain corporations have been set up by various agencies of the United States Government in connection with the administration of acts of Congress, and among others the following:

Federal Surplus Relief Corporation, in connection with the administration of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933;

Commodity Credit Corporation, in connection with the administration of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, and the Executive order reorganizing agricultural credit agencies of the United States, dated March 27, 1933;

Federal Emergency Housing Corporation, in connection with the administration of title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act;

Electric Home and Farm Authority, Inc., in connection with the administration of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933; and

Whereas detailed information with respect to the organization of such corporations is not available to the Members of Congress, and no reports have been made concerning the operations of any of such corporations; and

Whereas no act of Congress specifically authorized the organization of any of such corporations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the several agencies of the United States Government having supervision over the operations of the corporations named above are hereby requested to transmit to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, a statement showing (1) the authority for the organization of the corporations in connection with the administration of such agencies; (2) the functions performed or intended to be performed by such corporations; (3) the amount of money, if any, which has been received and expended by such corporations, together with a general statement of the sources of all receipts and the purposes for which the money has been expended; (4) the number of officers and employees of such corporations and the salary received by each officer or employee, together with copies of the articles of incorporation, bylaws, and other pertinent matter relating to the incorporation of such corporations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what are the several agencies of the United States Government having supervision over the operations of the corporations named, and why does not the Senator expressly set forth in his resolution those agencies?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, they are set forth in the recital in the preamble of the resolution. The agencies are the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the National Industrial Recovery Administration.

The only purpose of the resolution is to provide for the use of the Senate certain pertinent information which, in my opinion, can be furnished without any expense at all to the Federal agencies, and which will make a rather valuable contribution to the information which is before us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered by the Senate and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calender, under rule VIII, is in order.

The first business on the calendar was the bill (S. 882) to provide for the more effective supervision of foreign commercial transactions, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think that bill had better go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REDUCTION OF SUBSIDIES

The bill (S. 506) conferring upon the President the power to reduce subsidies, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but I think an explanation of its provisions should be made by the author of the bill, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, it will be seen that this bill was introduced on March 13, 1933. Since that time the Black committee has been appointed and has already made in part, and is continuing to make, a thorough examination into these air mail and ocean mail contracts.

The developments concerning those contracts are remarkable, indeed. They show that when some of us, a year or two ago, were informing the country through speeches in this body that scandalous operations were being carried on in connection with these subsidies, we were exactly right.

There is no particular necessity for the passage of this bill at this time, and I see no reason why it may not be indefinitely postponed. However, in order to be extremely careful, I am going to ask that it stay on the calendar until after a full report is made by the Black committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. I should not want any inference to be drawn, and none could be properly drawn, from the statement made by the able Senator, that the President of the United States does not now have the authority to abrogate any of those contracts which fall within certain categories.

Mr. MCKELLAR. That is entirely true. In another measure the President was given that authority. I am quite sure the President will use that authority. I think the developments in relation to these subsidy contracts are such as to show to us here in the Senate, and to the American people, that those contracts are all fraudulent—fraudulent in fact as well as in law—and I have no doubt that at the proper time the President will take steps under the authority he now has.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be passed over.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (H.J.Res. 93) to prohibit the exportation of arms or munitions of war from the United States under certain conditions was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this joint resolution involves matters of such great moment that I do not think a measure of this importance ought to be passed under the 5-minute rule. Therefore, I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1403) to authorize the merger of the Georgetown Gaslight Co. with and into Washington Gas Light Co., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 583) relating to the classified Civil Service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG (and other Senators). Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION

The bill (S. 1658) to supplement and support the Migratory Bird Conservation Act by providing funds for the acquisition of areas for use as migratory-bird sanctuaries, refuges, and breeding grounds, for developing and administering such areas, for the protection of certain migratory birds, for the enforcement of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act and regulations thereunder, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be substituted for Senate bill 1658 Senate Bill 2633, being Order of Business 288, containing some amendments which I think will entirely elucidate, explain, and do away with any objections that have been found to the bill by any of the Senators. I will explain in just a moment what those changes are.

First, the original bill provided for the purchase of sanctuaries. The amended bill provides for the purchase of inviolate sanctuaries; that is, sanctuaries on which there can be no shooting.

Second. The original bill provided that 75 percent of the fund raised would be used for the purchase of sanctuaries. The amended bill provides that 90 percent of the fund raised will be so used.

Third. The original bill provided that 20 percent of the amount raised would be used for enforcement. The word "enforcement" has been entirely taken out of the bill. The amended bill cuts out that feature entirely, the suggestion of the Secretary of Agriculture being that it was the duty of Congress to provide enforcement personnel to police the Migratory Bird Treaty regulations. That would mean that the Biological Survey, for instance, would have no Federal enforcement agents within the State interfering with the State jurisdiction.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that we pass over Calendar No. 170, being Senate bill 1658, and when the other bill is reached on the calendar, the matter which the Senator has just now presented may be discussed. May I say that the bill to which the Senator has just called attention is not in my file.

Mr. WALCOTT. If the Senator from Utah objects, I will have to yield; but I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I inquire what is the calendar number now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Calendar No. 170.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I did not hear any objection to Calendar No. 169, being Senate bill 583. I assume objection was made, but I did not hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has been informed that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] asked that no. 169 be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the request of the Senator from Connecticut is in order, Order of Business 170 having been reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that Calendar No. 288, being Senate bill 2633, be substituted for Calendar No. 170, being Senate bill 1658. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. I ask that this bill be passed over for the present. The Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], as my friend knows, is very much interested in the bill, and I should also like to have an opportunity to examine it before I consent to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement Senate bill 1658 will be indefinitely postponed, and Senate bill 2633 will be passed over.

RELIEF OF CAPT. GUY M. KINMAN

The bill (S. 163) for the relief of Capt. Guy M. Kinman was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Guy M. Kinman, captain, United States Army, Washington, D.C., the sum of $1,582.70, in full satisfaction of his loss on account of damage by water to his household goods on August 18, 1931, while temporarily in authorized storage in a Government warehouse at Fort Myer, Va., in connection with authorized change of station.

FIRST CAMDEN NATIONAL BANK & TRUST CO., OF CAMDEN, N.J.

The bill (S. 172) for the relief of the First Camden National Bank & Trust Co., of Camden, N.J., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] make an explanation? I have read the report which was submitted by Mr. Secretary Mills, and the report would indicate that this case is similar to many others, and that a large number of other claims will be urged if we open the door now and make an appropriation for this claimant, who insists, as I understand, that through mistake of fact—there was no misrepresentation, as Mr. Mills states in his report—an overpayment was made. If we open up this case I see no reason why other cases may not be presented, and the Senate, acting upon this precedent, will be required to make very large appropriations for other claimants.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the difference is that they accepted the report of an official examiner of the Government, they took his statement, and when he said, "Sign on the dotted line", they signed on the dotted line. The difference between this case and other cases is that the claimants in this case did not make up their own statement; the statement was made up by an official of the Government. I hope that under the circumstances, inasmuch as it was a mistake of the United States Government, the Senator will not object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not quite clear that the Senator from New Jersey has followed the record—and I am sure if he did not, he failed to do so through inadvertence. I find nothing in the report made by Secretary Mills indicating that the representative of the Government prepared the report.

Mr. KEAN. That is my advice, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. Mr. Mills states:

Later it appears that the taxpayer had its accounts audited, the result indicating that the tax had been overpaid. Thereupon the taxpayer filed a claim. * * * The Commissioner of Internal Revenue then caused a careful investigation to be made, and while it was found that the tax liability had been overstated in the return and overpaid.

Then he added:

Provision for final closing agreements has been an administrative feature of the internal revenue laws for a number of years, it being first adopted by section 1312 of the Revenue Act of 1921 and reenacted—

And so on.

The law providing for closing agreements, like statutes of limitations, is not based upon equitable considerations, and the taxpayer in this case is in no different position from other taxpayers similarly situated, and indeed in no different position from that in which the Government finds itself at times in not being able to assess and collect taxes barred by closing agreements.

The Treasury Department, therefore, is opposed to the enactment of the bill.

It would seem to me, Mr. President, in view of the statement made by Secretary Mills, and his attitude, that his opposition should receive consideration.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that perhaps a brief explanation will help the Senator from Utah. The bank in question made its tax report, checked up on it, and paid its taxes. It paid $10,000 or $11,000 more than was due. No one disputes that fact; it is admitted by the Treasury Department. Some time later the Treasury Department, in trying to close out accounts, to get the agreements signed, presented one at the bank in question, and the officials of the bank formally signed what is called a "closing agreement." A little while after that, in making an examination, it was discovered that in taking over another bank during the previous year this bank had become confused and had submitted reports which showed that it owed about $11,000 more in taxes than it really did owe.

The bank then made application to the Treasury Department for a return of the money, which it clearly did not owe. The Treasury Department based its objection solely upon the ground that the bank had signed this formal agreement, the closing agreement, which the taxpayers have a right to sign, and that ended the matter. But the Committee on Claims, considering the case and finding that there was no question that the Government had collected from the bank money to which the Government was not entitled, and that it was a clear mistake on the part of everyone, reported that the money ought to be refunded.

Mr. KEAN. I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill. I felt it my duty, having read the report, to call the attention of the Senate to the situation. Undoubtedly, as suggested by Mr. Mills, we will have similar cases presented here. It seems to me that it is rather an unwise way of dealing with these tax problems. I shall not object to consideration of the bill, but under all the circumstances I do feel constrained to vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALTER J. BRYSON PAVING CO.

The bill (S. 1504) for the relief of Walter J. Bryson Paving Co., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Walter J. Bryson Paving Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,500.50, in full and final settlement of all claims against the Government for certain dredging work performed by said company in the improvement of the channel in the Anclote River, Fla.

STANDARD DREDGING CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1683) for the relief of the Standard Dredging Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$3,362.50" and to insert "$2,531.25", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Standard Dredging Co., owner of the dredge Long Beach and pipe line thereto attached, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,531.25, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to fully reimburse said owner of said dredge and pipe line for damages suffered for loss of earnings or fair rental value of its said dredging plant for the period operation of same was stopped as a result of collision with its pipe line by the United States dredge Chinook, at Astoria, Oreg., May 1, 1916, under circumstances which were held after due investigation to have been such that the Government was responsible.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILBURN KNAPP

The bill (S. 256) for the relief of Milburn Knapp was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation from the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, this bill, in the same form, and I think in the same amount, was passed by the Senate in the Seventy-second Congress, and was reported again favorably by the Committee on Claims, the report having been made by the chairman of the committee.

The basis for the relief is a contract made in 1913 by Mr. Knapp and the Interior Department, with respect to the removal of certain Indian stumpage and the construction of a sawmill upon Indian property. In the contract no provision was made for the transportation of logs from the mill down to the railroad, but it is disclosed by the correspondence had between Mr. Knapp and the Interior Department that it was assumed by everyone that he would use the Williamson River. He built the mill, he proceeded in good faith, he incurred heavy obligations, and after he had done so, upon the complaint of certain sportsmen from San Francisco that the use of the river would destroy their trout fishing, the Secretary of the Interior took away from Mr. Knapp the right to use the river for the transportation of the logs. Subsequently the right to use the river for transportation of logs was recognized by the Interior Department, and other users were permitted to employ the stream for the transportation of their logs.

The Department in a review of the case recognized the equitable claim of Mr. Knapp, and in their report to the committee suggested that there were two ways of figuring his equitable claim. One brought the result to $22,600; the other to $16,000. The committee in its consideration of the matter amended the bill by inserting the smaller sum in lieu of the larger sum and recommends that the bill pass with the smaller sum.

Does that answer the question which the Senator from Utah has in his mind?

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$22,960" and to insert "$16,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Milburn Knapp, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $16,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for losses sustained by him as the result of the revocation by the Department of the Interior, on November 12, 1913, of a permit granted for the use of the Williamson River in connection with a contract for the cutting and removal of certain timberlands in the Klamath Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, entered into on January 24, 1913, by Milburn Knapp and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on behalf of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF GEORGE B. SPEARIN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1680) for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this bill is identical with bills which were passed in the Sixty-ninth, Seventieth, and Seventy-first Congresses.

The facts involved relate to one Spearin, who successfully prosecuted a claim against the Government before the Court of Claims, where he secured a judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, but about 3 years passed before final action was taken. In the meantime Spearin collected interest on the judgment for a part of the period, but there was a longer period for which no interest was collected. Spearin died, and his executor appealed to Congress, claiming that the neglect was by reason of Spearin's attorney's failure to comply technically with the statute, that the claimant was not a resident of Washington, and therefore not in a position to become acquainted with the facts; that it was his counsel who failed to take action within the proper time, and the War Department has advised that it is a proper claim. I therefore hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. I do not understand, Mr. President, why, when the judgment which the Senator says was obtained from the Court of Claims was paid, the interest was not also paid, because the interest would, doubtless, be a part of the judgment.

Mr. COPELAND. It appears that in this case the transcript of judgment was not filed with the Treasury Department until April 11, 1917, and when the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the judgment of the Court of Claims in December 1918, the mandate of affirmance issuing January 14, 1919, the amount of interest allowed was $9,948.42, being at the rate of 4 percent from April 11, 1917, to January 14, 1919, whereas, had the transcript of judgment of the Court of Claims been filed with the Treasury on April 13, 1916—and it was not done because of the death of the attorney—the interest which would have been included in the judgment, after affirmance thereof by the Supreme Court of the United States, would have amounted to the sum of $5,616.29 more than was actually received by Mr. Spearin.

The record in this case is, I think, quite conclusive. I am merely touching the high points of it as I understand the case; but a similar bill was previously passed by the Senate three times and passed by the House twice and the pending bill has now been recommended by the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is a case which it seems to me is not appealing, but I shall not object to its consideration. It is stated that the lawyer failed to file a proper certificate of judgment with the Treasury Department, and now, after years have gone by, it is contended that by reason of that failure interest which might have been collected was not collected. If that be true, there is no finality to any judgment for or against the Government of the United States. Of course, it is a maxim of the law that the negligence, if there be negligence, of the lawyer is attributable to the client—a sort of vicarious atonement, so to speak.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely want to state to the Senator that as I recall the record in this case Mr. Spearin lived far away from the city of Washington. He had an attorney here who became incapacitated in some way or other, probably mentally unbalanced, and because of that fact did not comply with the simple technicality of filing the judgment as he should have done. Spearin did not know anything about that until long afterward when he discovered that, because of the mental aberrations of his attorney, the necessary steps had not been taken. As I recall, that is what the facts in the record disclose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANKLIN SURETY CO.

The bill (S. 1076) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Franklin Surety Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Franklin Surety Co. for extra work performed in connection with the completion of contract of April 10, 1929, between the United States and the Wiglan Building Co., Inc., for remodeling the Government warehouse at New York, N.Y., and to allow thereon not to exceed $11,725.71 in full and final settlement of all claims by the said Franklin Surety Co. against the United States arising out of said contract. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $11,725.71, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of said claim.

MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, by unanimous consent, when Calendar No. 170, being Senate bill 1658, was called up by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], it was passed over in the absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL]. I should like now to recur to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Nevada that by unanimous consent Calendar No. 288, being Senate bill 2633, was substituted for Calendar No. 170. Now, as the Chair understands, the Senator from Nevada desires unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 288?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senate should return to Calendar No. 170 if Calendar No. 288 were substituted for that order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is to return to Calendar No. 170 for which Calendar No. 288 has been substituted by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2633) to supplement and support the Migratory Bird Conservation Act by providing funds for the acquisition of areas for use as migratory-bird sanctuaries, refuges, and breeding grounds, for developing and administering such areas, for the protection of certain migratory birds, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut explain the amendments which have been suggested and the general terms of the bill? It is a very important measure.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, the substitute bill makes three changes as follows:

First, the original bill, Senate bill 1658, provided for the the purchase of sanctuaries. The new bill adds the word "inviolate" before the word "sanctuaries", making the sanctuaries inviolate so that no shooting at any time may be permitted on such sanctuaries. The second change is that, while the original bill provided that 75 percent of the fund raised should be used for the purchase of sanctuaries, the new bill provides that 90 percent shall be so used. It is proposed to use practically all the money, instead of three fourths of it, for the purchase of resting, breeding, and feeding grounds for migratory waterfowl under the provisions of the treaty with Canada.

The third change is that the original bill provided that 20 percent of the amount raised should be for enforcement.

Mr. KING. That is too much.

Mr. WALCOTT. We have stricken out the enforcement feature altogether, so that under the bill no Federal wardens may go in and enforce this law within a State. It is, in other words, up to the State to enforce it, and 90 percent of the fund is going to be used for the purchase of sanctuaries, leaving only 10 percent for maintenance. The word "enforcement" is specifically eliminated from the bill.

The duck stamp bill seeks to provide revenues for the purchase, maintenance, and operation of migratory-bird sanctuaries and refuges. Every migratory-waterfowl hunter must purchase, at a convenient post office, a $1 waterfowl stamp, which he must attach to his State hunting license.

The waterfowl shooter thus bears the cost of this restoration program. This bill has been endorsed by all of the State conservation agencies, all of the great national groups engaged in conservation, including the American Game Association, the Izaak Walton League, More Game Birds in America, and the National Audubon Societies. More recently it was endorsed by a conference held by this committee, at which representatives of practically every conservation agency in the country appeared. It also has the approval of the President of the United States.

I shall be glad to answer other questions regarding the bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, let me call attention particularly to another amendment to the original bill. I refer to the proviso on page 4, line 17, which reads:

Provided, That the protection of said inviolate migratory-bird sanctuaries shall be, so far as possible, under section 17 of the Migratory Bird Conservation Act, passed February 18, 1929.

The section referred to provides that, so far as possible, the act shall be administered through State game wardens and State officials, and thereby avoid the appointment and use of Federal game wardens within the various States. I understand, however, that there might be some instances where the States could not provide for wardens, and, for that reason, the words "so far as possible" are used.

Mr. WALCOTT. I may add, Mr. President, in reply to the Senator's suggestion, that the use of Federal officers would be upon the advice of the Secretary of Agriculture and only upon his advice and recommendation and with the consent of the State authorities.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. And none of the funds accruing could be used for that purpose.

Mr. WALCOTT. None of these funds could be used for that purpose. Whatever was available previously remains after the passage of this bill; but none of these funds can be used for the purpose of enforcing this measure.

Mr. DILL. I objected to this bill previously; in fact, I have had much to say about legislation of this kind in the years I have been in the Senate. As a matter of principle I am strongly opposed to any Federal tax for hunting purposes. I recognize, however, that it is a condition which confronts us; we have been unable since the passage of the migratory bird act of some years ago to secure money from the Treasury for the purchase of migratory bird sanctuaries, and this measure seems to provide probably the least objectionable kind of Federal tax that can be laid upon hunters. With the amendments which have been placed in the bill and which I hope and believe will prevent these sanctuaries from ever being used for slaughtering purposes, as was the original plan under the old legislation on this subject, and that it will also prevent the use of Federal game wardens in large numbers throughout the country, I am not going to object to the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut a question?

Mr. WALCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator estimated the approximate amount that may be received annually for the purchase of land for sanctuary purposes?

Mr. WALCOTT. The amount which may be received can, of course, be merely estimated, but the best guesses range from $750,000 to $1,250,000. In the report we have stated that possibly $1,000,000 might be derived under the bill. There are about six and one half million licensed hunters in the United States. Just how many may want to continue shooting migratory water fowl—and they are the only ones who will have to pay the dollar tax—is a question, of course; but we believe that it will provide a revenue of approximately a million dollars a year, which, of course, is a very substantial sum and one which will put this whole program on its feet again.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether any portion of the fund to be obtained will be available to pay the expenses of operation—the overhead?

Mr. WALCOTT. Yes; 10 percent would be available for maintenance, to provide against the possible wearing out of the marsh areas or for whatever may be needed in the marsh areas to keep them as inviolate sanctuaries.

Mr. KING. Would any part of the compensation of the personnel come out of this fund?

Mr. WALCOTT. That might come under the head of maintenance.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator another question. Do the States have any voice in the selection of the bird sanctuaries?

Mr. WALCOTT. There has been made a preliminary survey by the Biological Survey with reference to the program which it is proposed to arrange. The program has not been definitely decided upon by the President, but the President is enthusiastically for this bill, he believes in its provisions, and says that it will supplement his larger program admirably. That, of course, provides only a temporary fund for the purchase of sanctuaries. He has appointed a committee of three to suggest a plan for the purchase of large areas for this same purpose. Under this bill there will be an annual contribution for the same purpose. This bill fits in admirably with the proposal of the so-called "Beck committee."

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe that the States should have some voice when large areas of land are being segregated from the public domain or are being acquired by the Federal Government and withdrawn from taxation under the policy which is being pursued, and also some voice in ratifying or approving the purchase of these lands?

Mr. WALCOTT. We have had very elaborate hearings on this measure, and all the organizations interested in any way in this matter have been here or have been represented. They have raised every conceivable point with reference to this measure, including the point which the Senator now raises, which has been thoroughly discussed. It is believed that the Federal Government will never act without the advice, at any rate, of the States. All the surveys that have been made up to date have been carried on largely with the advice and consent and aid of the States, and every single State commissioner of fish and game and every commissioner of conservation has approved the provisions of this bill and is satisfied with the various hearings which we have had on the bill.

Mr. KING. The Senator has greater faith in, shall I say the virtue of the Federal Government and its officials, than I have. The Senator knows that we had to pass laws to prohibit the Federal Government—that is, the Executive—from withdrawing large areas of land from entry and locking them up indefinitely.

Mr. WALCOTT. I am familiar with that, and I will not yield even to the Senator from Utah in my allegiance to State rights.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I merely wish to say, in view of what has already been stated, and the questions which have been raised that, in my judgment, this bill represents a substantial and important part of a well-considered program for the conservation of migratory bird life, and I hope it will pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC SERVICE COORDINATED TRANSPORT OF NEWARK, N.J.

The bill (S. 1084) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Public Service Coordinated Transport of Newark, N.J., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the Public Service Coordinated Transport of Newark, N.J., arising out of the removal by the War Department during the late war of certain tracks, car house, storage tracks, etc., belonging to said company or its predecessor, from their original locations to new locations, and the War Department's failure to restore same to their original location in accordance with an informal arrangement respecting the matter, and to allow in full and final settlement of any and all claims arising out of said transactions an amount not exceeding $122,442.43. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $122,442.43, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of said claim.

UNION SHIPPING & TRADING CO., LTD.

The bill (S. 1192) for the relief of the Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd., against the United States of America for damages alleged to have been caused by a collision on April 25, 1918, near Pauillac, in the Gironde River, France, between the Spanish steamship Consuelo (at the time of the collision the British steamship Reims) and the American steamship Berwind, then in the transport service of the United States War Department, may be sued for by the said Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd., in the District Court of the United States for the southern district of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit (in accordance with the principles of libels in rem and/or in personam), and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages (including interest) and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the said Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd., or against the said Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd., in favor of the United States upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That at the trial of said suit the written report or reports concerning said collision made by the pilot, master, any officer or member of the crew of the steamship Berwind, who is not available to testify because he is dead or cannot be found, may be admitted in evidence: Provided further, That such notice of the said suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within 4 months of the date of the passage of this act.

ADJUSTMENT OF CLAIM OF THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD CO.

The bill (S. 1082) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. for the cost of repairing the damages to freight car no. 89713 (owned by the Central Railroad of New Jersey) which were caused by an accident due to condition of Government-owned rails or roadbed while such car was in the Government's care and custody, and to allow in full and final settlement of said claim not to exceed the sum of $468.82. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $468.82, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay said claim.

FAIRMONT CREAMERY CO., OF OMAHA, NEBR.

The bill (S. 749) for the relief of the Fairmont Creamery Co., of Omaha, Nebr., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized and directed to receive, consider, and determine, in accordance with law, but without regard to any statute of limitations, any claim filed not later than 6 months after the passage of this act by the Fairmont Creamery Co., Omaha, Nebr., for the refund of Federal income and profits taxes collected from the said Fairmont Creamery Co. for 1918 in excess of the amount properly due: Provided, That in the settlement of said claim there shall be no allowance of interest.

WALTER THOMAS FOREMAN

The bill (S. 1075) for the relief of Walter Thomas Foreman was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Walter Thomas Foreman, former employee of the United States Shipping Board, who now resides at Albermarle, N.C.: Provided, That compensation, if any, shall commence from and after the date of the passage of this act.

GREAT AMERICAN INDEMNITY CO., OF NEW YORK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 356) for the relief of the Great American Indemnity Co., of New York, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$18,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Great American Indemnity Co., of New York, the sum of $18,000, representing the amount paid by such company as surety on the forfeited bail bonds of four defendants in criminal proceedings brought by the United States, who surrendered the day after the entry of the judgments upon such bonds and were subsequently tried, convicted, and sentenced.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there is a very clear description of the facts involved in this bill in the report. It seems that the claimant, the indemnity company, as surety became responsible for four bail bonds in the sum of $5,000 each. The condition of the bonds was that the defendants should appear in certain criminal proceedings which were pending in the District Court of Virginia. The trial of the defendants was set for the early part of December 1927. They failed to appear on December 20, 1927, and their bonds were declared forfeited. On May 31, 1928, judgment was entered against the surety on the bonds and on the following day, June 1, 1928, the defendants appeared in court and entered a plea of guilty to the indictments, and were sentenced.

Under the circumstances the committee feels that it is not conscionable for the United States to retain the amount, and recommends that the bill, which would refund the amount of $18,000, be passed. Upon this basis the Government will have received the sum of $3,634, covering the expenses and costs to which the Government was put for the purposes for which the bonds were given, and this amount of money would then be returned to the company.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUXILIARY BARK "QUEVILLY"

The bill (S. 1934) conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the four-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly against the United States, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Compagnie Maritime Normande, formerly known as "Société Anonyme du Quevilly", owner of the four-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said four-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly and the United States destroyer Sampson on January 26, 1917, may be determined in a suit to be brought by said claimant against the United States in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court in admiralty cases, and that said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages, and costs, if any, as shall be found due against the United States in favor of the said Compagnie Maritime Normande, formerly known as "Société Anonyme du Quevilly", or against the said Compagnie Maritime Normande, formerly known as "Société Anonyme du Quevilly", in favor of the United States, by reason of said collision, upon the same principles and under the same measures of liability as in like cases between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be begun within 4 months of the date of the approval of this act.

STEAMSHIP "W. I. RADCLIFFE"

The bill (S. 1935) to amend the act of March 2, 1929, conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the steamship W. I. Radcliffe against the United States, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress (H.R. 11698), approved March 2, 1929 (Private, No. 480, 70th Cong.), entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the steamship W. I. Radcliffe against the United States, and for other purposes", be, and the same hereby is, amended by deleting therefrom the words "Wynstay Steamship Co., Ltd., a British corporation, owner", and substituting in the place and stead thereof the words "Wynnstay Steamship Co., Ltd., and W. I. Radcliffe Steamship Co., Ltd., British corporations, owners", and that said act be further amended by deleting therefrom wherever they may appear the words "Wynstay Steamship Co., Ltd., and substituting in the place and stead thereof the words "Wynnstay Steamship Co., Ltd., and W. I. Radcliffe Steamship Co., Ltd."; and that the suit heretofore commenced in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, under the said act of March 2, 1929, may be continued in the names of Wynnstay Steamship Co., Ltd., and W. I. Radcliffe Steamship Co., Ltd., as parties libelant.

JOHN Z. LOWE

The bill (S. 1405) for the relief of John Z. Lowe was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of John Z. Lowe, former collector of internal revenue for the second district of New York, in the sum of $3,500, said sum representing the amount of an alleged shortage in the count of stamps charged as having been sent to and received by him during the fiscal year 1916.

CHERAW INDIANS, NORTH CAROLINA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1632) providing for the recognition and enrollment as Cheraw Indians of certain Indians in the State of North Carolina, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "designated" to strike out: "Cheraw Indians and shall be recognized and enrolled as such; but such designation, recognition, and enrollment shall not in any manner affect the present status or property rights of any of such Indians or prohibit the attendance of children of such Indians at Government Indian Schools. The provisions of this act shall not be construed to give to such Indians any rights in or to the tribal lands or moneys of other bands of Indians in the United States" and to insert in lieu thereof the following: "Siouan Indians of Lumber River and shall be so recognized by the United States Government: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed as conferring Federal wardship or any other governmental rights or benefits upon such Indians", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That those Indians in Robeson and adjoining Counties, N.C., who were formerly known as "Croatan Indians", shall hereafter be designated Siouan Indians of Lumber River and shall be so recognized by the United States Government: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed as conferring Federal wardship or any other governmental rights or benefits upon such Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this is rather an important bill. I should like to have an explanation of it. I do not object to its consideration if any Senator is prepared to explain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was introduced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and reported by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], neither of whom is present at the moment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let it be passed over for the present then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over for the present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 229, Senate bill 1632, which a few moments ago I asked to have passed over temporarily. It appears that the bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs and also of the Department of the Interior. Therefore I ask that the bill may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the bill was agreed to. The question is on the passage of the bill as amended.

The bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the recognition as Siouan Indians of Lumber River of certain Indians in the State of North Carolina."

FRED G. CLARK CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 377) for the relief of the Fred G. Clark Co., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Fred G. Clark Co. the sum of $7,586.61, being the amount agreed upon in accordance with the decision of the Board of Contract Adjustment, War Department, in full settlement for losses suffered by reason of forced compliance by said company with orders of the War Industries Board preventing said company from disposing of its stock of wool grease during the late war with Germany.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the bill provides payment to the Fred G. Clark Co. of an amount determined many years ago by the Board of Contract Adjustment of the War Department to be due on account of losses sustained by refusal of the War Industries Board to permit the sale by the claimant of certain qualities of wool grease during war time. It has been considered by the Committee on Claims of the Senate and also by the Committee on War Claims of the House, and favorably reported in both instances.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. C. MESSLER CO.

The bill (S. 503) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of A. C. Messler Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and hereby is, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of the A. C. Messler Co., of Providence, R.I., notwithstanding lapse of time or any statute of limitations, and to award said company compensation for additional material furnished the Government under contract dated April 17, 1918, for the manufacture and delivery of cartridge clips.

REMISSION OF CERTAIN COAL-LEASE RENTALS

The bill (S. 606) to authorize the waiver or remission of certain coal-lease rentals, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to waive and remit all rentals due the United States and charged against the Alaska Matanuska Coal Co., holder of Anchorage, Alaska, coal-land lease no. 04794–05236, between April 3, 1926, and May 3, 1929, during which period the lessee company was out of possession and prevented from operating said mine because same was in the hands of a receiver appointed by the United States Court for the District of Alaska; also between July 10, 1931, and August 10, 1932, during which period the Alaska Railroad was in possession of said mine and operating same, reimbursing itself therefor by mining, removing, and using coal.

PAYMENT OF LOST AND MATURED GOVERNMENT BONDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1528) to amend section 3702, Revised Statutes, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, to strike out the word "maturity" and insert in lieu thereof "it has matured or has become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3702 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(2) Whenever it appears to the Secretary of the Treasury by clear and unequivocal proof that any interest-bearing bond of the United States, fully identified by number and description, has, without bad faith on the part of the owner, been lost to such owner under such circumstances and for such period of time after it has matured or has become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption as in the judgment of the Secretary would indicate that it had been destroyed or irretrievably lost, is not held by any person as his own property and will not be presented by a bona fide holder for value, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make payment of the amount which would have been due on such bond had it been presented at the time it became due and payable. But no payment shall be made on account of interest represented by coupons claimed to have been attached to a missing coupon bond at the time of its loss or destruction, unless the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that such coupons have not been paid and are in fact destroyed or can never be made the basis of a claim against the United States: Provided, That where relief is authorized under the provision of this paragraph the bond of indemnity required by section 3703 of the Revised Statutes shall be in a penal sum of double the amount to be paid and shall be executed by an approved corporate surety. The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to make from time to time such regulations and restrictions as he may prescribe with respect to the administration of this paragraph.

"(3) The term 'bond' wherever used in this section and in sections 3703, 3704, and 3705 of the Revised Statutes shall be deemed, for the purposes of these sections, to include any interest-bearing obligation of the United States or those issued on a discount basis."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this seems to be a matter in which the Treasury would be vitally interested. However, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE BROS. & CO.

The bill (S. 1088) authorizing adjustment of the claim of White Bros. & Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the White Bros. & Co., a partnership composed of John W. White, Jr., Will J. White, A. P. White, and Madison White, for a refund of an advance payment of rent for the property known as the "Little Rock Air Depot", Little Rock, Ark., under their War Department lease no. W–766–qm–291, dated May 23, 1930, rent having been paid in advance for the period ending February 22, 1932, and the War Department having exercised its option to terminate the lease effective December 31, 1931, and to allow in full and final settlement of said claim not to exceed the sum of $341.92. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $341.92, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay said claim.

RIO GRANDE SOUTHERN R.R. CO.

The bill (S. 1859) authorizing adjustment of the claim of of the Rio Grande Southern Railroad Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Rio Grande Southern R.R. Co. for reimbursement of its expenditures for labor and expenses in repairing the damages to the Western Union telegraph line on its right-of-way at milepost no. 85 (between Dolores and Rico, Colo.) and between mileposts nos. 94 and 96 (near Stapleton, Colo.), which line was damaged in 1931 by the blasting during the Government's construction of the Dolores-Rico Forest highway project in Colorado, and to allow in full and final settlement of said claim not to exceed the sum of $23.01. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $23.01, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay said claim.

C. J. MAST

The bill (S. 1949) for the relief of C. J. Mast was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. J. Mast, of Charlo, Mont., the sum of $255 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages on account of injury to his crops in the years 1924 to 1928, both inclusive, by reason of breaks in a lateral dike in connection with the Flathead irrigation project.

PETROLIA-FORT WORTH GAS-PIPE LINE

The bill (S. 2315) to provide for the settlement of damage claims arising from the construction of the Petrolia-Fort Worth gas-pipe line was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to transmit to the General Accounting Office for payment, in accordance with the approved findings contained in the report rendered by Lt. Ira P. Griffin, Civil Engineer Corps, United States Navy, to the Navy Department under date of July 29, 1921, all unpaid claims for rights of way and damages to private property sustained in connection with the construction on behalf of the United States during the years 1918 and 1919 of a gas-pipe line extending from Petrolia to Fort Worth, Tex.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is also authorized to transmit to the General Accounting Office for payment the claim of W. S. Wakeman in the sum of $65 in addition to the sum for said claimant approved in the above-mentioned report.

SEC. 3. That acceptance by any claimant of an amount offered for settlement pursuant to this act shall be deemed to be in full settlement of his claim against the United States.

SEC. 4. No payment shall be made to any claimant under the provisions of this act who has received satisfaction from any other source for the damages sustained due to the laying of said gas-pipe line.

SEC. 5. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this act, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,356.75.

R. B. MILLER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2278) for the relief of R. B. Miller, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$9,407.54, said amount representing the principal sum of $6,336.38 overpayments in freight on" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500, in full and final settlement of all claims or demands of whatsoever nature, kind, or character against the Government, on account of shipments of", and on page 2, line 6, after the word "law", to strike out "and the interest on said sum from the respective dates of shipment to April 1, 1926", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to R. B. Miller, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500, in full and final settlement of all claims or demands of whatsoever nature, kind, or character against the Government, on account of the shipment of 75 carloads of manganese ore shipped over the Norfolk & Western Railroad from Suter, Va., Rocky Gap, Va., and Graham, Va., to Reading, Pa., Harrisburg, Pa., and Birmingham, Ala., during the period that said railroad was operated by the Director General of Railroads, and which said amount was in excess of the regular freight rates published and allowed by law.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KARIM JOSEPH MERY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2317) for the relief of Karim Joseph Mery, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$5,000 as compensation for" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000, in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Karim Joseph Mery, of San Antonio, Tex., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000, in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of the death of his son, Joseph Karim Mery, a minor, who was killed at San Antonio, Tex., on July 10, 1923, by the negligent driving of a United States Army truck.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK SPECTOR

The bill (S. 1086) authorizing adjustment of the claim of Frank Spector, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust a claim of Frank Spector for refund of a deposit of $1,700 made in connection with the purchase of certain surplus property at an auction sale held February 9, 1922, at the Philadelphia quartermaster depot, and to allow in full and final settlement of all claims arising out of the transaction the sum of not to exceed $1,700. There is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,700, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay said claim.

HARRY HARSIN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 176) for the relief of Harry Harsin, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "Postmaster General" and insert in lieu thereof "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to credit Harry Harsin, postmaster at Asbury Park, N.J., in his accounts with the sum of $28,022, the amount of money and postage stamps lost in the burglary of the post office at Asbury Park, N.J., on July 6, 1929.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the postmaster at Asbury Park suffered a loss by burglary, the post office having been robbed. The post office being in his charge, he was charged by the Post Office Department with $28,022 because of the robbery. He had nothing to do with the robbery. Burglars broke into the post office and robbed it of stamps and cash and whatever else of value there was in the post office.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Jersey if the postmaster was under bond?

Mr. KEAN. He had a bond which partially covered the loss.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does this include what the bonding company paid, too?

Mr. KEAN. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Unless we collect these amounts from the bonding companies, it would seem to me of no benefit to the Government to put the postmasters under bond.

Mr. KEAN. I think they are all under bond.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amount of the bond should not be included in the bill, I believe.

Mr. KEAN. I think the committee looked into that matter. The robbery occurred on the 6th of July 1929, and this man has been suffering ever since trying to get reimbursement. The Postmaster General under date of December 10, but I do not know of what year, urged the Congress to no longer delay in making the award. I have a clipping from a newspaper stating that fact. The poor man went out of office on the 28th day of January and is very anxious that the claim should be settled.

Mr. KING. Unfortunately the report does not state, or at least if it does I have not found it, whether or not any part of the loss had been paid by the bonding company. I think the measure ought to be amended so that that loss should not be reimbursed.

Mr. KEAN. I assume the amount provided in the bill is above the amount of the bond.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think the amount of the bond ought to be deducted. If the Senator is willing to deduct the amount of the bond which the bonding company paid, then if the postmaster himself has sustained a loss of money without fault of his own, it would be all right to reimburse him; but if the postmaster's bond covers the amount of the loss and the bonding company has paid it, of course, then, the postmaster has already paid the bonding company a fee or premium to cover that liability and the bonding company ought to pay it without appealing to the Government for reimbursement. The bonding company ought not to be reimbursed these funds where such losses occur.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, as a matter of fact if the bond was collected it would be payable to the Government and would go back into the Treasury, and, therefore, no deduction should be made from the amount of the claim here.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not appear what the bond was.

Mr. KEAN. I assume the $20,000 is above the amount of the bond. That is the amount the Government has held the postmaster liable for and I suppose the poor fellow has mortgaged his house and everything else to pay it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me suggest, as a matter of fact, what would happen if the bonding company would pay the amount of the bond to the Government, is that the postmaster would be compelled to pay any balance over and above that. This is for the relief of the postmaster only.

Mr. KEAN. That is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over today until the Senator from New Jersey can get the facts about the bond.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WALLACE E. ORDWAY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 258) for the relief of Wallace E. Ordway, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$4,000", and in line 10, after the word "Oregon", to insert the following:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000 to Wallace E. Ordway, of Klamath Falls, Oreg., as administrator. Such sum represents compensation to Wallace E. Ordway in his personal right and as administrator for the death of his son, Harry Ordway, who was drowned September 1, 1927, in the United States Irrigation Canal at Klamath Falls, Oreg.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELSIE SEGAR, ADMINISTRATRIX

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1331) for the relief of Elsie Segar, administratrix of C. M. A. Sorensen and of Holger E. Sorensen, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$4,700" and insert "$1,200"; on page 2, line 5, to strike out "$1,955" and insert "$800"; and in line 8, after the word "destruction", to insert the following:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Payment to Elsie Segar, administratrix of C. M. A. Sorensen, the sum of $1,200 for loss on September 1, 1924, of a boathouse, engine parts, tools, electric fittings, marine supplies, and clothing belonging to C. M. A. Sorensen, at Bayou St. John, city of New Orleans, La., while said boathouse was being used by and in the sole occupancy of Government prohibition agents, pursuant to rental privileges granted by C. M. A. Sorensen to prohibition agents of the United States Government, at New Orleans, La.; and payment to Holger E. Sorensen, the son of C. M. A. Sorensen, the sum of $800 for loss to Holger E. Sorensen of personal property and belongings in the said boathouse at the time of said boathouse destruction: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH BUXTON HOSPITAL

The bill (S. 1531) for the relief of Elizabeth Buxton Hospital was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Elizabeth Buxton Hospital, of Newport News, Va., the sum of $224.80 for services rendered to late Pvt. Frederick Loyal Kerl, United States Marine Corps, from February 9 to February 15, 1930, while on furlough.

S. G. MORTIMER

The bill (S. 1600) for the relief of S. G. Mortimer was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of S. G. Mortimer, postmaster at Belle Fourche, S.Dak., in the amount of $178.92, such sum representing certain amounts charged against the said S. G. Mortimer by reason of his deposit of funds of the United States in the First National Bank of Belle Fourche, S.Dak., and the subsequent closing of such bank.

MANUEL MERRITT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 552) for the relief of Manuel Merritt, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$40.30" and insert "$40.20", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $40.20 to Manuel Merritt in payment of amount of loss sustained in postal funds by the failure and closing of the First National Bank of Roff, Okla.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask someone familiar with it how the Government of the United States is responsible for losses by reason of the failure of a bank.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, there are several bills of the same tenor. The Government in substance says to the postmaster, "Deposit your funds for safekeeping in some institution that is safe." There are seven or eight bills of the same character involving cases where the postmasters deposited money taken in at their post offices. Then the banks closed. Some of those banks have repaid only a portion of the deposits to their depositors. The small amount authorized in the bill is the difference between that which was paid to the postmaster as a depositor and the amount the postmaster deposited. The postmaster, I think, should be reimbursed and should be held immune because of the fact that he had been instructed and told he must put his funds in some safe depository.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator for information whether the Government directs the postmasters where to make deposits of postal savings and, if they do make them accordingly, whether the evidence shows that the Government was derelict or those in authority were derelict in indicating the depositories which failed instead of indicating solvent banks. It seems to me the Government of course in inviting postal deposits, is really a guarantor or insurer, and for that reason it ought to make ample provision for the safekeeping of the funds of its depositors. Was there anything before the committee to indicate whether the Government was derelict in this respect?

Mr. COOLIDGE. I know in a general way that the Government does say where postal deposits shall go, and I think in a general way they do say where the daily receipts from business shall go. These were all small towns and the postmasters had to go in some cases quite a distance to deposit the money so it would be fairly safe. But this all came about during the bank holiday when very many of the small banks simply suspended business and many of them never reopened. Some of the depositors were paid 60 or 70 percent in the way of dividends and the Government came in the same category. I hope that all of the bills of this nature, which have the unanimous report of the Committee on Claims, may be passed.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator whether provision is made in these bills—and I have not read them—that the Government may be subrogated to any rights that the depositors may have in any funds hereafter to be paid by the defaulting banks.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me, I may say to the Senator from Utah that the situation is this:

The postmaster is required to deposit the funds temporarily in a bank, but it is at the risk of the postmaster; and if the bank fails, and the money is lost, it is charged up to the postmaster by the Government.

These bills are to relieve the postmasters of that charge which has been made against them. The Post Office Department says that is correct and as it should be. I do not know myself. I suppose the Government makes good the postal deposits that are lost.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me there ought to be a wiser and a safer and a better method of handling these postal funds than that indicated by these bills. Of course the Government is responsible unless the postmasters were negligent, and violated instructions which were given to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE J. BLOXHAM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1118) for the relief of George J. Bloxham, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "the", to strike out "Postmaster General" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of George J. Bloxham, postmaster at Sheldon, Iowa, in the sum of $53.90, due the United States on account of the loss resulting from the closing of the First National Bank of Sheldon, Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED A. ROBINSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1119) for the relief of Fred A. Robinson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "the", to strike out "Postmaster General" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Fred A. Robinson, postmaster at Estherville, Iowa, in the sum of $65.05, due the United States on account of the loss resulting from the closing of the First National Bank of Estherville, Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN BONDING CO., OF BALTIMORE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 252) for the relief of the American Bonding Co., of Baltimore, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$750"; and in line 7, after the word "bail", to strike out "bonds of Dan Shea, the case against whom was dismissed, and" and to insert "bond of", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the American Bonding Co., of Baltimore, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $750, representing the amount paid by the said company as surety on the forfeited bail bond of John Madden, the forfeiture of whose bail was ordered by the court to be set aside.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDGAR STIVERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1460) for the relief of Edgar Stivers, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "the", to strike out "Postmaster General" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States", and in line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$444.69" and insert "$240.45", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Edgar Stivers, postmaster at Dodge Center, Minn., in the sum of $240.45, due the United States on account of loss of postal funds resulting from the failure of the Farmers National Bank of Dodge Center, Minn.: Provided, That the said postmaster shall assign to the United States any and all claims he may have to dividends arising from the liquidation of said bank.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. W. HOLLAND

The bill (S. 551) for the relief of A. W. Holland was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $900 to A. W. Holland in payment of extra services as postmaster at Drumright, Okla., a post office of the fourth class.

SULTZBACH CLOTHING CO.

The bill (S. 1191) for the relief of the Sultzbach Clothing Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Sultzbach Clothing Co. the sum of $6,000. Such sum represents the amount of a fine paid by Sultzbach Clothing Co. pursuant to a conviction for violating certain provisions of the Lever Act of August 10, 1917, as amended, prior to the declaration by the Supreme Court of the United States of the unconstitutionality of such provisions.

COMPAGNIE GENERALE TRANSATLANTIQUE

The bill (S. 1692) for the relief of the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, to reimburse said company for penalties which were assessed and collected but not actually incurred under the immigration laws of the United States, and so found by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit on July 7, 1931 (51 Fed. (2d) 1053), the failure of said company to file suit within the statutory period of limitation for the recovery of said sum being hereby waived.

INTERNATIONAL MERCANTILE MARINE CO.

The bill (S. 1693) for the relief of the International Mercantile Marine Co. was considered by the Senate and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,400 to the International Mercantile Marine Co., to reimburse said company for penalties which were assessed and collected, but not actually incurred, under the immigration laws of the United States; and so found by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit on July 7, 1931 (51 Fed. (2d) 1053), the failure of said company to file suit within the statutory period of limitations for the recovery of said sum being hereby waived.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I see a number of these measures introduced by my friend from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. Apparently, the Government is called upon to waive the statute of limitations.

It seems to me there are too many cases in which the statute of limitations has run in behalf of the Government where claims are presented, perhaps, after the evidence is beyond the reach of the Government. Between individuals the statute of limitations is not waived in their behalf by the Government. Of course, the defendant who is sued, if he fails to plead the statute of limitations, and answers, is held to respond if he is liable; but the statute of limitations is one of repose, and the Government certainly ought not to be called upon constantly to waive the statute unless there is some pressing and highly moral ground which would demand it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the answer to the very just criticism of my friend is found on the second page of the second bill—the one which is now immediately before the Senate—because the two bills are practically identical.

There were some controversies here which were delayed until there was a judgment rendered by the United States District Court. The matter has been pending along; and it was not until February 8, 1930, that the United States District Court entered judgment in accordance with the provisions of these two bills. The statute of limitations did run as regards the time of collection; that is conceded; but it was not until this decision was rendered that the claims of these two companies were justified.

That is the reason for the delay. It was not due to any lack of diligence or alertness on the part of the company.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1184) for the relief of Amos D. Carver et al. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this bill appears to have the disapproval of the Shipping Board. In the absence of the author of the bill, I suggest that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan objects, and the bill will be passed over.

R. S. HOWARD CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2002) for the relief of R. S. Howard Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$32,827.51" and insert "$20,827.51", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,827.51 to R. S. Howard Co., Inc., of New York City, as just compensation and in full settlement and satisfaction of the damages and/or losses incurred and suffered by it in complying with United States Navy order no. N-3255, dated June 18, 1918.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the facts are as follows:

At the onset of the war it was found necessary to commandeer buildings in New York City. I was embarrassed myself, as commissioner of health, by certain demands made upon us. In this case, however, under order of Mr. Roosevelt—who was then Assistant Secretary of the Navy—certain properties in connection with the Bush Terminal were taken away from the R. S. Howard Co., who had a lease until May 1921. The property was taken over in 1918, as I recall.

On May 3, 1921, a bill was introduced to make an appropriation to pay this account. Then, by Senate resolution, the Court of Claims was requested to hear the case, and you will find the conclusions on page 4 of the report:

Upon the facts found, the court concludes and reports that the plaintiff has no claim, either legal or equitable, in a juridical sense, against the United States, and that any compensation to it because of the facts recited rests in the discretion of Congress.

That subsequent to the report of the Court of Claims, wherein the court held as a conclusion of law that R. S. Howard Co. had no claim, legal or equitable, growing out of the commandeering of the Bush Terminal loft buildings, the Supreme Court of the United States decided the case of A. W. Duckett & Co. v. United States (266 U.S. 149, 45 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38), appealed from the Court of Claims, wherein the Supreme Court held, reversing the Court of Claims, that a tenant of property commandeered was entitled to compensation for his leasehold interest.

And it is because of that decision of the Court that this company is here asking for relief.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this was away back in 1917, 1918, or 1919, probably. At this late date the claim is presented. Why the long delay?

Mr. COPELAND. Because of the fact that in order to get the matter into the court it had to come here, and the matter was delayed here to give permission to bring this case in the Court of Claims. That was the reason. They were pressing the claim all the time; and, as it afterward developed, it was a just claim. Of course it was pending in the court for some time.

Mr. KING. If the case was brought in the Court of Claims, and a judgment there was rendered adverse to the plaintiff, which was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States, obviously the matter would be remitted to the lower court. Why should it not go back to the court to have judgment entered upon the facts presented, or, if all the facts were there, to enter such a judgment as was indicated in the mandate of the Supreme Court?

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, I am not competent to discuss that question with the Senator. He is too well versed in the law; but one of our most conservative Senators, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], made this report from the Committee on Claims, after going very thoroughly into the matter. He took the position that with certain amendments, striking out "$32,000" and inserting "$20,000", the bill should pass; and, of course, I know that so careful a lawyer as the Senator from Alabama would have gone thoroughly into the claim.

Mr. KING. With the understanding and agreement with my friend that if, upon examination, it should be found that the Supreme Court remitted the matter to the lower court for consideration, and that the lower court ought to have acted in the matter, the Senator will consent to setting aside the action today, and that notice of the passage of the bill shall not be transmitted to the House until we get this information, I shall not oppose the passage of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. That is entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOXUBEE RIVER, MISS.

The bill (S. 2337) to declare Noxubee River in Noxubee County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That that portion of the Noxubee River in Noxubee County, in the State of Mississippi, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be a nonnavigable stream within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 254) for the relief of Fred H. Cotter was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over. I desire to look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EDITH N. LINDQUIST

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 413) for the relief of Edith N. Lindquist, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$936.75" and insert "$600", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise approprated, to Edith N. Lindquist, chief nurse, United States Navy, the sum of $600 in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for reimbursement for the loss of certain clothing and other personal effects during the earthquake and fire at Yokohama, Japan, on September 1, 1923.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUECO R. GOOCH

The bill (S. 1077) for the relief of Lueco R. Gooch was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Lueco R. Gooch, of Henderson, N.C., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $516.28, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States on account of expenditures made by him in the medical treatment of his son, Lueco R. Gooch, Jr., private, Company C, One Hundred and Twentieth Infantry, North Carolina National Guard, who was injured in the line of duty on July 16, 1929, at Camp Glenn, N.C., during the field-training period July 7 to July 21, 1929.

FIRST GRANITE NATIONAL BANK, AUGUSTA, MAINE

The bill (S. 1853) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to execute an agreement of indemnity to the First Granite National Bank, Augusta, Maine, was considered by the Senate and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to execute, in the name of the United States, and deliver to the First Granite National Bank, Augusta, Maine, upon receipt from such bank of $8,547.83, an agreement of indemnity binding the United States to make reimbursement to such bank upon condition that such bank is required to make payment to bona fide holders upon presentation of check no. 21874, and dated July 1, 1926, in the amount of $8,547.83, drawn by the First Granite National Bank, Augusta, Maine, on the New York Trust Co., of New York, payable to George W. Wood, president of the board of managers (post fund) at the request of the eastern branch, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, Augusta, Maine: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon receipt of $8,547.83, as hereinbefore provided, credit the general post fund of the Veterans' Administration in that amount.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, referring to the preceding bill, I should like to ask if it is conceded that there is any liability upon the part of the Government for damages caused by persons in the National Guard or injuries to persons in the National Guard.

Mr. COPELAND. There is. I happen to know that. This is not my bill; but we have discussed that matter time and time again in the Appropriations Committee, and I find that there is such liability.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, has any objection been raised to Senate bill 1853?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has not been yet.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to say anything, then. The bill is recommended by the Treasury Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONCRETE ENGINEERING CO.

The bill (S. 1540) for the relief of the Concrete Engineering Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Concrete Engineering Co., of Houston, Tex., the sum of $4,304.61, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to fully refund to said company the difference between the rate of customs duties erroneously assessed and collected from it on steel building forms at Houston, Tex., between February 23, 1926, and September 30, 1927, under paragraph 304 of the act of 1922, and the rate of duty assessed and collected on the same class of merchandise in the same customs district, at Houston, Tex., during the same period, under paragraph 312 of said act, without the knowledge of said company, and which latter rate subsequently was decided to be according to law.

WILLIAM W. DANENHOWER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2496) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of William W. Danenhower, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, after the word "session", to insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William W. Danenhower, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $34,260 for damages caused by the depreciation in value of his property situate in square 737 in the city of Washington, D.C., which said damages were caused by the elimination of the grade crossings of railroads in pursuance to the act of Congress approved February 12, 1901 (31 Stat.L. 774), and acts supplemental thereto, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 2, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ASA CASWELL HAWKINS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1078) for the relief of Mrs. Asa Caswell Hawkins, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, after the word "act", to insert "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Asa Caswell Hawkins, widow of Asa C. Hawkins, of the county of Lenoir and the State of North Carolina, the sum of $5,000 in full compensation for the death of said Asa C. Hawkins, who was killed while employed by and assisting Federal prohibition agents in the enforcement of the National Prohibition Act: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES F. LITTLEPAGE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1258) for the relief of Charles F. Littlepage, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$50 per month from December 14, 1931, in an amount not to exceed $3,000"; and in line 11, after "1931", to insert "Provided, That before any payment is made to the claimant, Charles F. Littlepage, a trustee be appointed, and that reimbursement be made to the Mountain State Hospital, Inc., Charleston, W.Va., in full satisfaction of all hospital and medical expenses incurred by Charles F. Littlepage", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles F. Littlepage, of Charleston, W.Va., the sum of $50 per month from December 14, 1931, in an amount not to exceed $3,000, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for injuries suffered when struck by a United States mail truck at Charleston, W.Va., on December 14, 1931: Provided, That before any payment is made to the claimant, Charles F. Littlepage, a trustee be appointed, and that reimbursement be made to the Mountain State Hospital, Inc., Charleston, W.Va., in full satisfaction of all hospital and medical expenses incurred by Charles F. Littlepage.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH AND GAME SANCTUARIES IN NATIONAL FORESTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2277) to establish fish and game sanctuaries in the national forests, which had been reported from the special committee on conservation of wild-life resources with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the words "breeding places for", to strike out "game animals" and insert "game birds, game animals"; and on page 2, line 2, after the words "increase of", to strike out "game animals" and insert "game birds, game animals", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of providing breeding places for game birds, game animals, and fish on lands and waters in the national forests not chiefly suitable for agriculture, the President of the United States is hereby authorized, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce and with the approval of the State legislatures of the respective States in which said national forests are situated, to establish by public proclamation certain specified and limited areas within said forests as fish and game sanctuaries or refuges which shall be devoted to the increase of game birds, game animals, and fish of all kinds naturally adapted thereto, but it is not intended that the lands included in such fish and game sanctuaries or refuges shall cease to be parts of the national forests wherein they are located, and the establishment of such fish and game sanctuaries or refuges shall not prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from permitting other uses of the national forests under and in conformity with the laws and the rules and regulations applicable thereto so far as such uses may be consistent with the purposes for which such fish and game sanctuaries or refuges are authorized to be established.

SEC. 2. That when such fish and game sanctuaries or refuges have been established as provided in section 1 of this act, hunting, pursuing, poisoning, angling for, killing, or capturing by trapping, netting, or any other means or attempting to hunt, pursue, angle for, kill, or capture any wild animals or fish for any purpose whatever upon the lands of the United States within the limits of said fish and game sanctuaries or refuges shall be unlawful except as hereinafter provided, and any person violating any provision of this act or any of the rules and regulations made under the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall upon conviction in any United States court be fined in a sum of not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

SEC. 3. That the Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce shall execute the provisions of this act, and they are hereby jointly authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the administration of such fish and game sanctuaries or refuges in accordance with the purpose of this act, including regulations not in contravention of State laws for hunting, capturing, or killing predatory animals, such as wolves, coyotes, foxes, pumas, and other species destructive to livestock or wild life or agriculture within the limits of said fish and game sanctuaries or refuges: Provided, That the present jurisdiction of the States shall not be altered or changed without the legislative approval of such States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSERVATION OF WILD LIFE, FISH, AND GAME

The bill (S. 2529) to promote the conservation of wild life, fish, and game, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is not this the bill that was passed a short time ago?

Mr. WALCOTT. No; that was the duck stamp bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Utah that that was Senate bill 2633, which was substituted for Senate bill 1658.

Mr. KING. Yes; but does not this bill cover the same ground, in part?

Mr. WALCOTT. No; this bill does not authorize the expenditure of any money. It merely insists upon a reasonable coordination and cooperation between the various departments in considering new projects, so that the interests of our wild-life resources may be taken into account to some extent. This bill passed the Senate without objection last spring, but was held up at the last moment by the jam in the House.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator just how far this bill goes in authorizing activities by the departments of the Government, and what the cost is going to be to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. WALCOTT. It is not going to cost a cent; and it only urges reasonable cooperation. For instance, suppose the Chief of Engineers were trying to work out a plan for deepening the channel of the upper Mississippi, as was the case some years ago.

Under the terms of this bill, when he works out the type of dam which he thinks is necessary, or, instead of one dam, several wing dams, he takes the matter up with the Secretary of Agriculture, in this case to see whether that would conflict in any way with the wild-life refuge up there, which extends some 300 miles down the Mississippi. If it does, he tries to make his plants fit in with the saving of the native wild life that is there. If he cannot, well and good; there is nothing compulsory about it. It is merely a spirit of cooperation that is urged upon the various departments with reference to the saving of our natural resources.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kentucky will pardon me, I invite his attention to section 5, wherein

> The Bureau of Biological Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries are hereby authorized to make surveys of the wild-life resources of the public domain, or of any lands owned or leased by the Government, to conduct such investigations as may be necessary for the development of a program for the maintenance of an adequate supply of wild life in various areas. That is a sort of an unlimited authority to make surveys in any part of the United States.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, let me state the purpose of the surveys in question. The Biological Survey now has the authority to make such surveys as it may deem wise, but these particular surveys would be made in the event of some other department attempting in any way to encroach. In such case the Biological Survey is asked to make a study of the situation and see to what extent it interferes with our wild-life resources. There is nothing but a spirit of cooperation which is insisted upon by this bill. There is nothing mandatory about the bill.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that when there is an authorization so general in terms, giving unlimited authority to make surveys anywhere and everywhere in the United States, there will be activities, great expense will be incurred, and demands will be made for huge appropriations.

Mr. WALCOTT. I quite agree with the Senator, provided there is any money involved; but in this case they get no other appropriations, and the bill does not authorize anything except the establishment of certain principles with reference to the cooperation of various governmental bodies. I am quite sure that on further study the Senator will be satisfied with this part of the bill. There is a universal call for the enactment of a measure of this sort. We have reviewed this matter before the President, and he is heartily in sympathy with all three bills relating to this subject we are attempting to pass today. I hope the bill may prevail.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I make a statement to the Senator from Utah? Several years ago, when I was chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry we had occasion to investigate matters of this kind, and I will say that the Biological Survey has the same power vested in it now that is attempted to be vested in the two agencies in question. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that it broadens the power, makes it more accurate in its administration, and in every way is an improvement over the existing statute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2529) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce are authorized to provide expert assistance to and to cooperate with Federal, State, and other agencies in the rearing, stocking, and increasing the supply of game and fur-bearing animals and fish, in combating diseases, and in developing a Nation-wide program of wild-life conservation and rehabilitation.
>
> SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce are authorized to make such investigations as they may deem necessary to determine the effects of domestic sewage, trade wastes, and other polluting substances on wild life, with special reference to birds, mammals, fish, and shellfish, and to make reports to the Congress of their investigations with recommendations for remedial measures. Such investigations shall include studies of methods for the recovery of wastes and the collation of data on the progress being made in these fields for the use of Federal, State, municipal, and private agencies.
>
> SEC. 3. (a) Whenever the Federal Government, through the Bureau of Reclamation or otherwise, impounds water for any use, opportunity shall be given to the Bureau of Fisheries and/or the Bureau of Biological Survey to make such uses of the impounded waters for fish-culture stations and migratory-bird resting and nesting areas as are not inconsistent with the primary use of the waters and/or the constitutional rights of the States. In the case of any waters heretofore impounded by the United States, through the Bureau of Reclamation or otherwise, the Bureau of Fisheries and/or the Bureau of Biological Survey may consult with the Bureau of Reclamation or other governmental agency controlling the impounded waters, with a view to securing a greater biological use of the waters not inconsistent with their primary use and/or the constitutional rights of the States and make such proper uses thereof as are not inconsistent with the primary use of the waters and/or the constitutional rights of the States.
>
> (b) Hereafter, whenever any dam is authorized to be constructed, either by the Federal Government itself or by any private agency under Government permit, the Bureau of Fisheries shall be consulted, and before such construction is begun or permit granted, when deemed necessary, due and adequate provision, if economically practicable, shall be made for the migration of fish life from the upper to the lower and from the lower to the upper waters of said dam by means of fish lifts, ladders, or other devices.
>
> SEC. 4. The Office of Indian Affairs, the Bureau of Fisheries, and the Bureau of Biological Survey are authorized, jointly, to prepare plans for the better protection of the wild-life resources, including fish, migratory waterfowl and upland game birds, game animals and fur-bearing animals, upon all the Indian reservations and unallotted Indian lands coming under the supervision of the Federal Government. When such plans have been prepared they shall be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture, who are authorized to make the necessary regulations for enforcement thereof and from time to time to change, alter, or amend such regulations.
>
> SEC. 5. The Bureau of Biological Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries are hereby authorized to make surveys of the wild-life resources of the public domain, or of any lands owned or leased by the Government, to conduct such investigations as may be necessary for the development of a program for the maintenance of an adequate supply of wild life in these areas, to establish thereon game farms and fish-cultural stations commensurate with the need for replenishing the supply of game and fur-bearing animals and fish, and, in cooperation with the National Park Service, the Forest Service, or other Federal agencies, the State agencies, to coordinate and establish adequate measures for wild-life control on such game farms and fish-cultural stations: Provided, That no such game farm shall hereafter be established in any State without the consent of the legislature of that State.
> SEC. 6. In carrying out the provisions of this act the Federal agencies charged with its enforcement may cooperate with other Federal agencies and with States, counties, municipalities, individuals, and public and private agencies, organizations, and institutions, and may accept donations of lands, funds, and other aids to the development of the program authorized in this act: Provided, however, That no such donations of land shall be accepted without consent of the legislature of the State in which such land may be situated: Provided, That no authority is given in this act for setting up any additional bureau or division in any department or commission, and shall not authorize any additional appropriation for carrying out its purposes.

NAVAL CATEGORIES UNDER THE LONDON TREATY

The bill (S. 2493) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington February 6, 1922, and at London April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, this is a very important measure, and more consideration should be given to it than is possible under the 5-minute rule. I suggest that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PAUL J. SISK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 85) for the relief of Paul J. Sisk, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to settle and certify for payment to Paul J. Sisk, a clerk in the post office at Spokane, Wash., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount of $60, on account of an erroneous payment by him on money order no. 234886, for that amount, issued at Payette, Idaho, on September 5, 1931.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. L. P. WORRALL, FINANCE DEPARTMENT, UNITED STATES ARMY

The bill (S. 2053) for the relief of Capt. L. P. Worrall, Finance Department, United States Army, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of L. P. Worrall, captain, Finance Department, United States Army, the sum of $956.40, said amount being public funds for which he is accountable and which were lost when a safe in the Finance Office at Fort Douglas, Utah, was dynamited and robbed at approximately 11 p.m., October 28, 1932.

C. F. COLVIN

The bill (S. 1804) to authorize the transfer of certain real estate by the Secretary of the Treasury to C. F. Colvin in settlement of the Northfield (Minn.) post-office site litigation, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States district attorney representing the United States in the condemnation proceedings for the procurement of a site (including the Colvin tract of 22 feet by 66 feet) for the post office at Northfield, Minn., is authorized to enter into a written stipulation with C. F. Colvin, and his wife and other persons, if any, having any interest whatever in such tract, providing for the acceptance by the said C. F. Colvin of $1,540 in full payment for the north portion of the Colvin tract such portion being the north 12 feet of the west 66 feet of lot 2, block 34, of the town, now city, of Northfield, Rice County, Minn. and in full satisfaction of all claims, and any judgment in favor of the said C. F. Colvin, his wife, and such other persons, or any of them, arising out of the condemnation of such tract, and providing for the transfer to the said C. F. Colvin by the United States of all right, title, and interest of the United States in the south portion of the Colvin tract, such portion being the south 10 feet of the west 66 feet of the north 22 feet of such lot 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, upon the filing of such stipulation in the court in such proceedings, to transfer to the said C. F. Colvin all the right, title, and interest of the United States in the south portion of the Colvin tract described in this act.

NAVAL CATEGORIES UNDER THE LONDON TREATY

The bill (H.R. 6604) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CHANGE OF NAME OF B STREET SW.

The bill (S. 194) to change the name of B Street SW., in the District of Columbia, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in honor of the Declaration of Independence of the United States of America, the thoroughfare now known as "B Street SW.", running west from South Capitol Street in the District of Columbia, and as it may at any time be extended, widened, or otherwise changed, shall hereafter bear the name "Independence Avenue."

DEGREE-CONFERRING INSTITUTIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 193) to amend sec. 586c of the act entitled "An act to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions", approved March 2, 1929, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 586c of the act entitled "An act to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions", approved March 2, 1929, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end of such section the following: "Provided, That no institution heretofore incorporated under the provisions of this act, and carrying on its work exclusively in any foreign country with the consent and approval of the Government thereof, shall if otherwise entitled to be licensed by the Board of Education, be denied the same solely because of the inclusion in its name and as descriptive of its origin of any of the specific words the use of which is by this section forbidden to incorporations under the provisions of this act."

DELLA D. LEDENDECKER

The bill (S. 2006) for the relief of Della D. Ledendecker was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to license Della D. Ledendecker to practice chiropractic in said District under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", approved February 27, 1929, notwithstanding the provision therein requiring applications from candidates for licenses to practice chiropractic to be filed within 90 days from the date of the approval of said act, and on condition that said Della D. Ledendecker shall otherwise be found by said Commission to be qualified to practice under the provisions of said act.

RECORDING OF DEEDS OF TRUST AND MORTGAGES

The bill (S. 866) to provide for recording of deeds of trust and mortgages secured on real estate in the District of Columbia, and for the releasing thereof, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. When used in this act the following terms shall, unless the text otherwise indicates, have the following respective meanings:

"Recorder" shall mean the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia or anyone authorized by law to act for him.

"Court" shall mean the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or one of the justices thereof.

"Deed of trust" means a deed of trust, a mortgage, or any other instrument conveying or pledging real estate in the District of Columbia as security for a debt.

"Note" shall include any note or notes, bond or bonds, or other evidence or evidences of debt secured by a deed of trust.

"Release" shall mean a deed of release or other instrument which releases real estate from the effects of a deed of trust.

"Trustee" shall include trustees under a deed of trust, a mortgagee or mortgagees, or anyone having power of sale under a mortgage pledging or conveying real estate in the District of Columbia as security for a debt.

ADDITIONAL DUTIES OF RECORDER

SEC. 2. That the recorder, except upon order of the court, shall not accept for record nor record any deed of trust nor any release thereof except in accordance with the provisions of this act.

IDENTIFYING NOTES

SEC. 3. (a) No deed of trust, except as otherwise provided herein, shall be accepted for record or recorded by the recorder unless the note secured thereby shall have been identified by him by stamping or imprinting thereon over his signature the words:

"This is (one of) the promissory note(s) described in a deed of trust to the trustee(s) named hereon, said deed of trust being recorded _____ as instrument no. ___.

"Recorder of Deeds, District of Columbia."

(b) All notes presented to the recorder for identification as provided herein shall be identified by him in the manner prescribed in this section, and said notes shall be identified and available for return on the same day they are presented.

(c) The fee to be charged for said identification shall be $1 for the first note secured under any one instrument with an additional charge of 10 cents for each additional note secured thereunder: Provided, however, That the fee herein provided for shall be in addition to the established fee now charged for recording deeds of trust.

PRESENTATION OF CANCELED NOTES

SEC. 4. (a) No release, except as otherwise provided herein, shall be accepted for record or recorded by the recorder unless the note secured by the instrument being released shall be presented to the recorder marked "Paid" and duly canceled: Provided, however, That where any note is lost, destroyed, or otherwise unavailable for presentation to the recorder upon affidavit as to the facts in reference thereto filed with the recorder and the posting with said recorder of a bond, approved by the court, assuring the payment of such note in full, or upon evidence that a sufficient amount of money to assure the payment of such note in full has been deposited in the registry of the court as hereinafter provided, the recorder shall accept for record and record said release.

(b) Partial releases may be accepted for record and recorded by the recorder upon presentation to him of evidence satisfactory to him that the amount required by the terms of the deed of trust authorizing such release in part has been paid and that such payment has been endorsed upon the note secured by said deed of trust: Provided, however, That if the recorder shall refuse to record any such release, such refusal shall be subject to review by the court by bill in equity: And provided further, That where any note is lost, destroyed, or otherwise unavailable for the endorsement of said payment thereon, upon affidavit as to the facts in reference thereto filed with the recorder and the posting with said recorder of a bond, approved by the court, assuring the payment of the amount required by the terms of the deed of trust authorizing such release in part, or upon evidence that a sufficient amount of money to assure the payment of the amount required by the terms of the deed of trust authorizing such release in part has been deposited in the registry of the court as hereinafter provided, the recorder shall accept for record and record said partial release.

(c) In accordance with the provisions of this section the clerk of the court shall accept and deposit in the registry of the court any moneys presented to him for such deposit to assure the payment of any note unavailable for presentation to the recorder as provided for in this section; and upon request said clerk of the court shall certify to the recorder the fact that such moneys have been so deposited for said note.

(d) Upon petition to the court by any party or parties claiming any money deposited in the registry of the court as provided for in this section, the court upon satisfactory proof shall order the payment of said funds so deposited to the party or parties entitled thereto, without poundage or commission.

(e) The fee to be charged for examining any paid and canceled note or notes or evidence of payment presented in connection with recording any release as herein provided, shall be 50 cents for the first note or evidence of payment examined in connection with any release, with an additional fee of 5 cents for each additional note or evidence of payment examined in connection with such release: Provided, however, That the fee herein provided for shall be in addition to the established fee now charged for recording any release.

(f) In any case where the owner and holder of a note shall consent to the release, in whole or in part, of real estate from the effect of a deed of trust, under conditions not provided by the terms of said deed of trust, the owner of said real estate may file a bill in equity in the court setting forth such facts, and if said court finds that the owner and holder of said note did so consent to the recording of said release, said court shall enter an order directing said recorder to accept and record said release.

(g) In any case where the owner of real estate is entitled to have the same released, in whole or in part, from the effect of a deed of trust, in accordance with the terms thereof, which said terms involve the doing of any act or thing or the performance of any condition other than the payment of money, said owner may file a bill in equity in said court setting forth that he has complied with the terms of said deed of trust, and if said court finds that said owner has so complied, said court shall enter an order directing said recorder to accept and record said release.

PUBLIC UTILITIES EXEMPT

SEC. 5. Deeds of trust executed by any corporation operating under the supervision, control, or regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission or any public-utilities commission or like body of any State or possession of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or any release thereof, shall be exempt from the provisions of this act.

CORPORATE TRUSTEES EXEMPT

SEC. 6. (a) The provisions of this act, except as to section 7 hereof, shall not apply to any deed of trust or release in which the trustee, or one of the trustees, named is a banking institution authorized by its charter or by law to act as trustee and doing business under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency: Provided, That said banking institution has signified its willingness to act as such trustee by its signature and seal to the deed of trust before the same is recorded.

(b) If an individual shall be named as cotrustee with such banking institution and the individual trustee shall die before all the terms and provisions of the deed of trust have been executed, all the powers, estate, and duties conferred and granted by the deed of trust shall, upon the death of said individual trustee, vest in such banking institution with like force and effect as if such institution had been originally named as sole trustee.

(c) In the event such banking institution is named in a deed of trust as sole trustee or as cotrustee with an individual trustee, the recorder, upon request, shall identify the note secured by said deed of trust in the manner provided and for the fees prescribed in section 3 of this act.

BANKING DEPOSITORY

SEC. 7. No clause or provision contained in any deed of trust hereafter executed providing for the payment or redemption in part or in whole of the indebtedness secured thereby, by deposit of funds for that purpose, shall be valid unless the depository so named shall be a banking institution doing business under supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency and the banking institution so named shall have signified its willingness to act as such depository by its signature and seal to the deed of trust before same is recorded, and if such payment or redemption by deposit shall be made pursuant to a privilege of anticipation reserved in the deed of trust, 30 days' previous notice of the time of such payment or redemption shall be given, which notice shall be published twice a week in a newspaper having general circulation in the District of Columbia for 3 successive weeks during said 30-day period, and such notice shall specify the serial number or numbers of the note or notes to be redeemed or paid and the date at which it is intended to redeem or pay the same. When such banking institution shall certify to the recorder that it holds on deposit the sum required by the deed of trust to be paid for the release in whole or in part of said deed of trust, the recorder shall accept for record and record such release.

SEC. 8. The duties of the recorder as now defined by law are hereby enlarged to embrace and include all the duties imposed by this act. The recorder is authorized to employ such additional personnel as may be necessary to carry out the duties imposed upon him by this act within appropriations authorized for his office, the salaries of such personnel to be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

SEC. 9. The provisions of this act shall become effective 90 days after its passage: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply either to deeds of trust recorded prior to the date this act shall become effective or to any subsequent release thereof.

SAVING CLAUSE

SEC. 10. If any section, subsection, sentence, clause, phrase, or requirement of this act be for any reason held to be unconstitutional or invalid, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions thereof. The Congress of the United States hereby declares that it would have passed this act, and each section, subsection, sentence, clause, phrase, and requirement thereof, irrespective of the fact that any one or more of the sections, subsections, sentences, clauses, phrases, or requirements thereof may hereafter be declared unconstitutional or invalid.

SALE OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 2057) authorizing the sale of certain property no longer required for public purposes in the District of Columbia was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to sell and convey to the highest bidder, at public or private sale and at such time as in their opinion may be most advantageous to the District of Columbia, the old Potomac School property, known as "lot 802 in square 327", containing 5,837 square feet of land, more or less, and the proceeds from such sale shall be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia.

MARCELLA LEAHY M'NERNEY

The bill (S. 1753) for the relief of Marcella Leahy McNerney, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Marcella Leahy McNerney, widow of Gerald Francis McNerney, late Foreign Service officer, State Department, the sum of $2,500, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

CHARLES C. BENNETT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2552) for the relief of Charles C. Bennett, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after "$5,000", to insert the words "in full settlement of all claims against the Government", and on page 2, line 2, to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles C. Bennett, of the city of Candor, N.C., the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for bodily injuries sustained by him on December 16, 1927, when an automobile in which he was riding was in collision with a reconnaissance truck of the United States Army, the said truck being one of a fleet of trucks traveling toward Fort Bragg, N.C., driven by Pvt. Thomas C. Robertson, of Fort Bragg, N.C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RULES OF PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE IN CRIMINAL CASES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2461) to amend an act entitled "An act to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of practice and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases after verdict", which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 2, after line 12, to insert a proviso as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to give the Supreme Court the power to abridge the right of the accused to apply for withdrawal of a plea of guilty, if such application be made within 10 days after entry of such plea, and before sentence is imposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 22, to strike out the quotation marks after the word "allowed".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert a new section at the end of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 3. The Supreme Court may fix the dates when such rules shall take effect and the extent to which they shall apply to proceedings then pending, and after they become effective all laws in conflict therewith shall be of no further force.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of February 24, 1933 (ch. 119), entitled "An act to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of practice and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases after verdict" (U.S.C., title 28, sec. 723a), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have the power to prescribe, from time to time, rules of practice and procedure with respect to any or all proceedings after verdict, or finding of guilt by the court if a jury has been waived, or plea of guilty, in criminal cases in district courts of the United States, including the District Courts of Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Canal Zone, and Virgin Islands, in the Supreme Courts of the District of Columbia, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, in the United States Court for China, in the United States Circuit Courts of Appeals, in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and in the Supreme Court of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to give the Supreme Court the power to abridge the right of the accused to apply for withdrawal of a plea of guilty, if such application be made within 10 days after entry of such plea, and before sentence is imposed.

"SEC. 2. The right of appeal shall continue in those cases in which appeals are now authorized by law, but the rules made as herein authorized may prescribe the times for and manner of taking appeals and applying for writs of certiorari and preparing records and bills of exceptions and the conditions on which supersedeas or bail may be allowed.

"SEC. 3. The Supreme Court may fix the dates when such rules shall take effect and the extent to which they shall apply to proceedings then pending, and after they become effective all laws in conflict therewith shall be of no further force."

STOCK OWNERSHIP BY DIRECTORS OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

The bill (S. 2601) to amend section 31 of the Banking Act of 1933 with respect to stock ownership by directors of member banks of the Federal Reserve System was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 31 of the Banking Act of 1933 as relates to stock ownership by directors of member banks of the Federal Reserve System is hereby repealed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, MISSOURI

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2308) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after "1932", to insert the words "and January 19, 1933", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo., authorized to be built by the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, by the act of Congress approved May 24, 1928, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved March 1, 1929, May 14, 1930, February 6, 1931, and May 6, 1932, and January 19, 1933, are hereby further extended 2 and 4 years, respectively, from May 24, 1934.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YOUNGS BAY BRIDGE, OREGON

The bill (S. 2372) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to maintain a bridge already constructed across Youngs Bay near the city of Astoria, Oreg., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of Oregon, and its successors and assigns, to maintain and operate, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable water", approved March 23, 1906, a bridge and approaches thereto already constructed across Youngs Bay near the city of Astoria, Oreg., which bridge is hereby declared to be a lawful structure to the same extent and in the same manner as if it had been constructed in accordance with the provisions of said act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

MARION K. GRIGGS

The resolution (S.Res. 153) to pay a gratuity to Marion K. Griggs was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Marion K. Griggs, widow of Walter H. Griggs, late a member of the Capitol Police under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

CONTINUATION OF CIVIL WORKS PROGRAM

The bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire whether that is the bill which carries an appropriation of nearly a billion dollars.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill carries an appropriation of $950,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. I think we should have a quorum before we proceed to consider that bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think this bill will have to be considered independently of the procedure under the 5-minute rule. I think the Senator from Tennessee agrees to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Therefore I suggest that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. That completes the calendar.

LIMITATION OF JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Black	Byrnes	Copeland
Ashurst	Bone	Capper	Costigan
Austin	Borah	Caraway	Couzens
Bachman	Brown	Carey	Cutting
Bankhead	Bulkley	Clark	Davis

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

I regret to announce that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

[Mr. AUSTIN resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. His speech entire is as follows:]

Monday, February 5, 1934

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am opposing the pending bill because it abridges human rights. If it should be enacted into law, it would deprive the American people of some of those simple common rights of which their ancestors had been deprived by tyrants before the Magna Carta. As a matter of fact, America rose as a champion of liberty out of that very experience.

Those rights were so commonplace that they were omitted from the Constitution of the United States by the descendants of those very patriots who had given their lifeblood to have them firmly established. These rights were so precious, however, that the people of the several States insisted upon having them written down in the Bill of Rights and added to the Constitution of the United States. They are therefore expressed in the fundamental law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONERGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator a question for information? The Congress has the power to create such inferior Federal tribunals as it seems fit and it has the power to limit and define the jurisdiction of the tribunals which it creates. Why does the Senator say then that to limit or restrict the jurisdiction of the Federal district courts is a deprivation of a right, since it is discretionary with Congress, first, whether such courts shall exist and, second, what shall be their jurisdiction.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the question assumes a decision upon the very matter that I intend to discuss here. I could not accept the assumption that Congress has the right to change the powers that are inherent in the district courts of the United States by virtue of the first clause of the second section of the third article of the Constitution, and I shall debate that question as I reach it in the presentation of the subject.

I am undertaking to present what I have to say to bring out the human side of the question, to attract notice through the fact that when one lays his finger upon one of these fundamental rights, he is touching the very heart of humanity, he is touching the very heart of the society of the United States of America.

It will not do to pass upon this question as if it concerned only corporations and corporate property. One must look through the bill and see the real significance of it. One of the most important considerations of the measure is the fact that it comes at a time when there has already developed in the country a philosophy absolutely inimical to those human rights. Strong men and women, people of equal morality and virtue, people of equal intelligence and thoughtfulness hold directly opposing views of American government today and American ideals.

The pending bill tends to promote one of those philosophies. The pending bill abridges in the particular class mentioned, first, the right of private ownership of property; second, the right to due process of law; third, the right to compensation when private property is taken for public use; and, fourth, equal protection of the law without discrimination. These rights—and there can be no debate about their being human rights—could no longer be enforced or secured if this bill should be enacted into law save in those States alone which have provided for a stay of a confiscatory order pending appeal. Why, the assertion that the bill deprives no one of rights is answered by a mere glance at the terms of the bill itself. When a bill in so many words deprives every individual within the class affected by it of the right to bring to a Federal court the decision of a Federal question, one of the most vital rights of society, in the United States at any rate, has been taken away.

It is fair to point out in terms how these rights are expressed. The fifth amendment to the Constitution relates to rights of persons. In that regard it is distinguished from the fourteenth amendment, because that refers to rights of citizens. Rights of persons are human rights. They are rights which the Congress by the very organs of government should hold sacred and defend in letter and in spirit.

Article V declares that—

> No person—

I omit a part of it to get to the pertinent portion of the fifth amendment—

> No person * * * shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

This is a prohibition upon the United States of America. It is a prohibition upon the Congress. These rights are so necessary to a free people that they are also expressed in two places as rights of citizens—one in the Constitution itself and one in the fourteenth amendment. Article IV, section 2, of the Constitution provides:

> The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

The fourteenth amendment, after providing for other things, provides that—

> No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

This prohibition in the fourteenth amendment is a prohibition on the State, but it is applicable here under the terms of the pending bill because it includes the word "enforce." The prohibition is, "no State shall enforce", and the pending bill prevents the Federal courts saying to a State tribunal, "You cannot enforce." That is a direct result and effect of the bill, and therefore the bill takes away that right which is guaranteed under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

The bill would expressly deprive a class—understand, Mr. President, the class named in the bill, and no other person, citizen, or corporation—of that great bulwark of liberty, the injunction of Federal courts against confiscatory orders in violation of the Constitution of the United States. It is, therefore, discriminatory. Any man who has practiced in the courts of the country knows that there is no other remedy to prevent confiscation in those cases where it becomes necessary or expedient to apply to the Federal court for an injunction to stay the enforcement of an order pending the decision of the question whether it is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States.

The bill specifically undertakes to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code. That section, which is referred to also as section 41, chapter 2, title 28, volume 44, of the United States Code, part 1, page 866, also supplement 6, page 601, confers and defines the original jurisdiction of the United States district courts. The first paragraph of section 24 which is supposed to be amended gives this jurisdiction:

Where the matter in controversy exceeds, exclusive of interest and cost, the sum or value of $300 and (a) arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States or treaties made or which shall be made under their authority, or (b) is between citizens of different States, or (c) is between citizens of a State and citizens of a foreign State or subject.

Subject to certain limitations expressed in the paragraph, what I have quoted represents the largest part of the grant of authority contained in that section which is supposed to be amended here. Indeed, all that is left of the jurisdiction conferred by that paragraph is the following:

First, of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, brought by the United States, or by any officer thereof authorized by law to sue, or between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants from different States.

Senate bill 752, which is the pending bill, picks out a narrow class of citizens and deprives them of privileges and immunities to which all citizens in the several States are now entitled, notwithstanding section 2 of article IV of the Constitution, providing, as I have called attention to the fact, that "The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States."

Public utilities and other citizens affected by an order of an administrative board or commission of a State, fixing rates, would be deprived of the right, enjoyed by other citizens, to action by district courts of the United States "to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of an order of an administrative board or commission of a State, or to enjoin, suspend, or restrain any action in compliance with any such order", though such orders may be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States.

You will observe that the report of the majority filed in this matter, and here on your desks, does not deal with that ground of jurisdiction; and the debate thus far has not considered that ground of jurisdiction. I shall undertake to discuss that more fully later.

The sole question in this connection, then, becomes whether the Congress of the United States should discriminate against those millions of investors in public-utility securities who have made their investments in reliance on rights which have been theirs since public-utility regulation began.

If there is any one thing that has been a traditional policy of the American Government throughout its history, regardless of which party has been in control, it is that all persons should be given equal protection under the law and have equal rights to resort to the courts duly established.

Parenthetically, let me comment that the learned Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was in error in omitting to include a distinguished Democrat in the report of the minority which is filed here. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] joined with the Senator from Vermont in making the minority report.

Whether this policy should now be abandoned is a fundamental issue presented in connection with this bill. In the absence of controlling reasons, I submit that the fact that the bill is highly discriminatory alone demands the conclusion that the bill is not in the public interest.

Now, is it not worth while to present some picture of the effect of this measure if passed?

A brief has been filed here by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., prepared by Harvey Hoshour and Roscoe T. Holt, attorneys for that corporation. Of course, I cannot quote at length from that brief, but I should like the consent of the Senate to file it and perhaps have it printed in the RECORD. I call the attention of the Senate to the following quotation from it, which is brief:

Millions of people in this country have invested their savings in public-utilities securities. The following quotation from the report for 1932 of the directors to the stockholders of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. shows in detail the investment in the stock of that company and its distribution among the stockholders:

"For the 18,662,000 shares of stock which are outstanding the company has received $2,135,000,000, or an average of $114 per share. Thus the company has received $268,000,000 more than the par of $100 per share, the opposite of 'watered' stock. * * * No stockholder owns as much as 1 percent of the stock outstanding, the average holding per stockholder being 27 shares. The number of stockholders was 700,851 at the end of the year, a net increase of 55,948 during the year.

"The stock investment in the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. is, of course, only a part of the total investment in the securities of the Bell system companies, but it illustrates both the type of investment that has been made in utility securities as well as the wide distribution of such securities. The fact that investors in this stock paid 14 percent above par for their shares indicates their confidence that they would not be discriminated against by legislation. The distribution of ths stock among so many stockholders, no one of whom owns so much as 1 percent of the stock outstanding, shows how wide-spread this confidence has been."

Twenty-five years ago the United States Supreme Court said, in the case of Ex parte Young (209 U.S. 123), at page 165:

"Over eleven thousand millions of dollars, it is estimated, are invested in railroad property, owned by many thousands of people who are scattered over the whole country from ocean to ocean, and they are entitled to equal protection from the laws and from the courts, with the owners of all other kinds of property, no more, no less. The courts having jurisdiction, Federal or State, should at all times be open to them as well as to others, for the purpose of protecting their property and their legal rights.

"It is now proposed by this bill to abandon this policy, and to place the 700,000 stockholders in American Telephone stock, together with millions of investors in the securities of other utilities, in a class by themselves, and to deny them rights granted to all others. We submit that there ought to be very compelling reasons for any such move on the part of the Congress of the United States."

Of course, the picture is not complete without consideration of all other public utilities and their stockholders, but sufficient is shown to emphasize the gravity of the pending question.

The right to protection from discrimination is one of the most valuable of human rights. The business woman with a mother to support—many of whom we know, all of us—and no other assistance, depending solely upon herself, providing the necessities of life and building up a little safety fund against the unhappy accident of misfortune or depression, as we all know may be the case, is entitled to the same rights of protection against confiscation of her modest property as any other citizen. If she is fortunate enough to own a little block of public-utility stock—and how many of them we know who have bought this wonderful stock of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., for example—but whether it be a telephone stock or whether it be railroad, express, hydroelectric, or gas stock, that person is guaranteed by the Constitution the equal protection of the laws with the person who owns a small block of industrial stock, Government bonds, or any similar property.

This is a human right. This is a right upon which liberty depends. This is a right upon which depends peace and good order and harmony among the people of this country. Let this proposed discrimination once be set up and what other discrimination can we not expect?

The proposed measure would destroy this right, for it directly deprives that vast number of modest people who are the holders of the preferred stock of public utilities of the right to apply to the Federal courts of their country for an injunction against a confiscatory order.

It appeared that there were only four States in the Union that by statute expressly provide for a stay in the case of an order of this character by a public utility commission. In 44 of the States the only remedy that is provided by statute is the remedy which this bill is designed to destroy, namely, application to the Federal courts in cases where human rights that are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States are in jeopardy. This is not a mere case of removing jurisdiction in diversity of citizenship, as is asserted by the majority. If there were no other cause for defeating this bill, this attack upon human rights, this attack upon equal rights by all citizens, would be adequate cause for refusing to enact it.

The whole text of the bill is narrow in its application, not only to a class of cases but also to a class of people, a class of citizens.

As this legislation bears upon recovery from depression, it must be realized in all candor that it does not breed confidence and does breed fear. It would deter those having money to lend or invest in private enterprise and employment of labor from investing it at all in utilities if the Federal courts were deprived of this jurisdiction without any other protection of law being substituted for it.

Another ground of objection to the bill is that it impairs the sovereignty of the Federal Government, which is necessarily exclusive and absolute.

From the brief of Hon. Edmund F. Trabue, of Louisville, Ky., member of the Commission of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, to revise the Federal equity rules in 1911, I take the following very brief quotation:

The spirit of the Constitution, and of our institutions, is nowhere better expounded than in The Exchange (7 Cranch, 116, etc.), where the Court—

The great Chief Justice Marshall speaking, said:

The jurisdiction of courts is a branch of that which is possessed by the Nation as an independent, sovereign power. The jurisdiction of the Nation, within its own territory, is necessarily exclusive and absolute. It is susceptible of no limitation not imposed by itself. Any restriction upon it, deriving validity from an external source, would imply a diminution of its sovereignty to the extent of the restriction and an investment of that sovereignty to the same extent in that power which could impose such restriction.

Not strictly—

Judge Trabue said, speaking of a grandfather bill to this bill, which was S. 4357, but he could have said it of this bill, S. 752—

but in spirit, the proposal of the bill S. 4357 is to do exactly what the Supreme Court so well said would impair the sovereignty of the Federal Government and correspondingly invest the States with that sovereignty. Also, it would diminish the jurisdiction of the Nation, which was said by the Court, speaking through the great Chief Justice, to be "necessarily exclusive and absolute."

I quote from 13 Cornell L.Q. No. 4, page 500:

Like all courts, the Federal courts are instruments for securing justice through law. But unlike most courts, they also serve a far-reaching political function. They are a means, and an essential one, for achieving the adjustments upon which the life of a federated Nation rests. The happy relation of States to Nation—our abiding political problem—is in no small measure dependent on the wisdom with which the scope and limits of the Federal courts are determined.

It is a fundamental principle that the jurisdiction of the Federal courts is commensurate with every right and duty created, declared, or necessarily implied by and under the Federal Constitution and laws.

The pending bill is not limited to diversity of citizenship. It extends to "repugnance of such orders to the Constitution."

The express language of the bill respecting jurisdiction is this:

No district court shall have jurisdiction * * * where jurisdiction is based solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship, or the repugnance of such order to the Constitution of the United States.

Of course it has been stated that this subject matter has been before the Senate for years. I submit, that is not so, The amendments made in prior texts of bills created a distinction which identifies this bill as different from any of its predecessors. There have been many of them, but never before has the Senate of the United States been confronted with a proposition to take away from the Federal courts jurisdiction based solely on the repugnance of orders to the Constitution of the United States. That is what the pending bill proposes to do.

The people ordained this Constitution to form a more perfect union. The sovereignty which they vested in a Federal Government was intended to be employed for the protection of their rights as citizens of an indissoluble union. They foresaw and guarded against diverse and different schools of thought which might be concentrated sporadically in diverse and widely separated regions of this great continent. They prevented the dissolution of the Union which might result from different constructions of the Constitution by the different States.

To be sure, a war occurred in which this protection from dissolution was insured and by which the vitality of the Constitution was galvanized into life.

The specific machinery devised for this protection was the Federal court. One of its most important tools was the injunction for the purpose of preventive justice, which is just as essential—indeed, more essential than any other kind of justice. All the judicial power of the Union was vested in the Federal courts.

I now come to the answer to the question proposed by the Senator from Arkansas. I quote from article III, section 1, of the Constitution:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold office during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Section 2, paragraph 1:

The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction—

And now we come to a change in the language—to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States; and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens, or subjects.

The origin of this machinery establishes the lack of validity of the pending bill. It proves the inability of Congress to essentially impair the judicial department.

The Judiciary Act of 1789, that great statute designed to develop and put into operation the judicial power confided by the Constitution to the United States, created the framework of this coordinate branch of government which we are asked to emasculate. The few changes which have been made are not in the structure, except as made by the eleventh amendment of the Constitution, and have been made along the lines and in the directions drawn and pointed out in this remarkable statute.

The act of 1789 was drawn by Oliver Ellsworth, afterwards Chief Justice, and has all the authority of a contemporaneous exposition of that part of the Constitution with which it is concerned.

The memorandum of the American Bar Association filed in opposition to Senate bills 939, 937, and 3243, lineal ancestors of this bill, prepared by Paul Howland, chairman of the Committee on Jurisprudence and Law Reform, points out, referring to the case of Levin v. United States (128 Fed. 826);

Mr. Justice Sanborn, at page 829, says:

"With respect to the judicial power granted by section 1, and defined by section 2 of article 3, the better opinion now is that the judicial power granted by the former section, which may be vested in the national courts only, is defined in the latter section and that it necessarily extends only to the trial of all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution and to the trial of the other nine classes of cases named in that section. The sections neither expressly or impliedly prohibit the Congress from conferring judicial power upon other courts, territorial courts, legislative courts, and even devolved judicial powers—"

Notice the word—

"devolved judicial powers upon executive or other officers where necessary."

We also in this connection cite Myers v. United States (272 U.S., 52, 71 L.ed., p. 160, par. 10) of the syllabus where the following language is used:

"A contemporaneous legislative exposition of the Constitution when the founders of our Government and the framers of our Constitution were actively participating in public affairs, acquiesced in for a long term of years, fixes the construction to be given its provisions.

"This brings me to the very particular application of the principle of construction enunciated by Mr. Justice Sanborn and approved in the Myers case. The act of Congress, passed September 24, 1789, creating the Federal judiciary in full compliance with the commands of the Constitution and in full recognition of every order or direction therein contained, recognizing diverse citizenship as one ground of Federal jurisdiction, is, in the language of Mr. Justice Sanborn, a contemporaneous construction of a provision of the Constitution by the men who framed it, and the concurrence of the statesmen, legislators, and judges of that day in that construction, demonstrates that in their opinion and in the opinion of Congress, article 3, sections 1, 2, and 3, were mandatory and imperative, and Congress in full recognition of a public duty obeyed the constitutional command at the earliest possible moment. This construction has been continuously followed by the legislative branch in the various acts of Congress relating to the judiciary down to the present time and in the entire history of this subject the only limitation that has been put upon section 2 of article 3 with reference to the extent of judicial power has been by the eleventh amendment to the Constitution."

No attempt by Congress has ever been successful to put a limitation on that power.

The comment in R. Company v. Whitton (13 Wall. 270) shows the importance of this jurisdiction:

Such a jurisdiction is necessary for the preservation of the acknowledged powers of the Government. It is essential, also, to an uniform and consistent administration of national laws. It is required for the preservation of that supremacy which the Constitution gives to the General Government by declaring that the Constitution and laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, * * * shall be the supreme laws of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

The pending bill is in conflict with that principle; it is in conflict with the express provision of the Constitution which I have read.

Two classes of cases which are included in the judicial power of the Federal courts by the Constitution would be excluded from their jurisdiction by the pending bill. First, those of which the jurisdiction arises from the character of the parties; that is, citizens of different States. Second, those of which the jurisdiction arises from the subject matter of the cases, that is, some right, claim, or authority arising under the Constitution of the United States. In the former the court is called upon to administer the local law; in the latter—and that is the interesting fact in this debate—the Federal court is called upon to prevent confiscation, to administer the supreme law of the land, and to safeguard those human rights which are expressed in the Bill of Rights and to which I have alluded.

I refer to a brief filed by Alfred P. Thom, general counsel of the Association of Railway Executives, sometime ago in connection with a very remote ancestor of this bill, and particularly to that part of the brief, page 29, where he refers to these two classes of cases, these two differing classes of cases, which have not been recognized in the report of the majority on the pending bill and have not been recognized during the debate on it. He says:

In Martin v. Hunter (1 Wheat. 327) attention is drawn to the difference in the language of the Constitution between that class of cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States, etc., where the language of the Constitution is that "the judicial power shall extend to all such cases", and the class illustrated by controversies between parties of different citizenship, where the word "all" is dropped and the judicial authority is expressed to extend to "controversies between citizens of different States", etc., and not to "all controversies."

This difference of wording in the Constitution is also adverted to by Chief Justice Fuller in the case of Stevenson v. Fain (195 U.S. 167), as follows:

"The use of the word 'controversies', as in contradistinction to the word 'cases', and the omission of the word 'all' in respect to controversies, left it to Congress to define the controversies over which the courts it was empowered to ordain and establish might exercise jurisdiction and the manner in which it was to be done."

The distinction, therefore, must be borne carefully in mind between that class of cases where the Constitution made it imperative on Congress to vest the judicial power in courts of the United States, such as all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States and that class of cases in which it might confer jurisdiction or in which it might withhold it, such as controversies between citizens of different States.

If the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] were here now, I should ask him to pay particular attention to that distinction coming from such high authority. This is not a novel distinction. It is historically recognized; and when the proponents of this bill struck out the conjunctive "and" between these two grounds of jurisdiction and left the disjunctive "or", they probably knew that they were trying to do away with two grounds of jurisdiction instead of one, and they should have known that one of them they might tinker with but the other one they could not touch and do so constitutionally.

I call attention to the statement in the Constitutional History of the United States, published in 1889—just 100 years after the adoption of that great statute of 1789 which created the structure which this bill now tries to emasculate. I refer to the Constitutional History of the United States as Seen in the Development of American Law, by Judge T. M. Cooley, of Ann Arbor, Mich.; Hon. Henry Hitchcock, of St. Louis; Hon. George W. Biddle, of Philadelphia; Prof. Charles A. Kent, of Detroit; and Hon. Daniel H. Chamberlain, of New York. The part to which I refer was edited by the last-named distinguished man, and on page 259 reads as follows:

The jurisdiction conferred on the United States by the Constitution embraces two classes of cases—those of which the jurisdiction arises from the subject matter of the cases; that is, some right, claim, or authority arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States; and those of which the jurisdiction arises from the character of the parties as aliens or as citizens of different States.

Before laying down this estimable work, I call attention to something here which should be considered, and that is this author's view of the supremacy of the Constitution, for in this day and time the supremacy of the Constitution is merely smiled at, if I properly estimate the current trend of a certain political philosophy. I quote:

In other words, our political system, in its nature and true intent, looks to the supremacy of the Constitution and statutes of the United States as interpreted by the courts of the United States, and to the supremacy of the State constitutions as interpreted by the State courts, wherever the Constitution and statutes of the United States do not apply; while within the domain of law not covered either by the Federal Constitution or statutes, or by the State constitutions or statutes, the two courts shall exercise independently the judicial power belonging to each.

In a summary of the business that has heretofore been given to the Federal courts a sharp line must be drawn between (1) cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States, and (2) controversies deriving significance solely from the citizenship of the parties.

Different considerations led to the deposit of power in the Constitution over these two broad groups of litigants. Different considerations have evoked its exercise by Congress from time to time in varying degrees and under varying circumstances.

I omit many authorities which I have collected for the purpose of emphasizing what I regard as an absolutely unanswerable reason why the pending bill should not pass, namely, that it undertakes to reduce the inherent power of the Federal courts, absolutely and expressly granted by the Constitution in that part of the Constitution which gives jurisdiction of all cases arising under the Constitution, but I call attention to the fact that, regardless of parties a case arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, is cognizable in courts of the Union whoever may be the parties to that case and an exception does not exist in those cases in which a State may be a party.

The authority on that doctrine is Cohen against Virginia, a Kentucky case of 1821, reported in Sixth Wheaton 383, Fifth Lawyers' Edition 225. Of course it must be recognized that the ground of equitable intervention with this preventive remedy is always inadequacy of a legal remedy anywhere else or in any other way.

The Federal courts have been compelled to entertain jurisdiction in suits of this character because the States do not provide adequate legal remedies through their own courts. The legal procedure of the States has not sufficiently accommodated itself to the consequences of their regulatory legislation. We have already held out an invitation to the States to reserve unto themselves all of this litigation if they desire to do it. We have already enacted a statute preventing the issuing of an injunction by Federal courts where a State court issues such an injunction. As we have seen under the proviso of section 266 of the Judicial Code, Federal suits to restrain State laws or orders can be set up before final hearing and appropriate action is brought in the State court to enforce such statute or order accompanied by a stay in such State court of the proceedings under such statute or order pending the determination of such suit by such State court.

From 1913 through the 1926 term 108 cases only came to the Supreme Court from the district courts in suits praying for preliminary injunction against the enforcement of State legislation and State administrative orders. If the States had had a State procedure sufficiently effective to require jurisdiction and State officers alert enough to exercise it, those cases could and should have first been considered by the State courts. The States' failure to put into operation their power to subject State legislation to the sifting process of State courts has needlessly swollen the business of Federal courts and cast upon the Supreme Court some of its most burdensome labors.

In the hearings dated March 18 and 19, 1932, at page 59, there appears a tabulation of court appeals from decisions of commissions showing the number of such appeals is so low that only about 1 percent of all the cases were taken into the Federal court.

Section 24, which the bill undertakes to amend, so far as the subject matter involved in it goes, is the representative of that great statute of 1789. The circumstances expressed in the bill in the nature of a condition upon which district courts shall be deprived of this jurisdiction are as follows, and I am quoting from the pending bill:

> Where such order (1) affects rates chargeable by a public utility, (2) does not interfere with interstate commerce, and (3) has been made after reasonable notice and hearing and where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy may be had at law or in equity in the courts of such State.

Now, of course, that last sentence was written there in good faith, and my challenge of its meaning does not impugn the good faith of the gentlemen who put it in there. But I say that seeds of all kinds of litigation are sown in that last paragraph, some of which have been disclosed by interrogatories addressed to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] during his discussion of the measure. I invite attention to the fact that it does not expressly provide for an adequate remedy, which is the customary expression in the law as it has come to us through Anglo-Saxon jurisdiction. That was called to the attention of the proponents of the bill, and the fact that an adequate remedy included preventive justice was brought to their attention, and I now bring it to the attention of the Senate. An amendment was offered in the committee as follows:

> Page 2, line 10, change the period after the word "States" to a comma, strike out the quotation marks, and insert the following: "which remedy shall include the right of such public utility to a stay of such order pending final adjudication as to the repugnance of such order to the Constitution of the United States."

What became of it? It was disagreed to. Obviously if it was intended that adequate remedy should be provided in the bill, the amendment should have been unanimously, freely, and immediately adopted. What is the significance of the refusal to accept the amendment? I claim that it was not intended to have that provision read as meaning an adequate remedy, and it is not intended to have the measure have any other effect than to destroy those human rights to which I have called attention. The ultimate tendency of the bill is to tear down and destroy ownership of property by individuals and to support and increase and advance and promote and make flourish the policy of public ownership of utilities.

The bill is designed as cunningly and effectively as it can be in the scheme for confiscation of private property. What will occur if a railroad tomorrow is ordered to transport passengers or freight a thousand miles for 1 cent? Anyone knows that is a confiscatory order, does he not? And yet if the bill passes without such an amendment to it, in forty-odd States of the Union that order cannot be stayed and must be carried out during all the time of an appeal and consideration clear through all of the State courts and up to the Supreme Court of the United States on the question whether that order is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. Yet it is said that this bill deprives no one of any rights. There is no remedy in the appeal that is effective to stop this destruction of private ownership of property if we take away this sole protection against a confiscatory order.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, since the Senator pauses, let me ask him whether that does not rather indicate that there is a deplorable condition existing in the courts of the State?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. LONG. I mean, if there is to be no remedy for these patently arbitrary and unconstitutional orders unless the Federal courts should intervene, that has to be based, I take it, upon the assumption that the courts of the State are rather in a deplorable condition, because evidently we would assume that there is process in the courts of the State for granting the relief. I know that in my State—and I think our code is fashioned after the codes of some of the other States—where an injunction is not granted by the lower court, the plaintiff has a right to a speedy writ from the supreme court where the showing is sufficient to compel the granting of writs in certain cases. It is rather speedy in our State.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am glad to have that contribution. It does not touch the outer rim of the point I am making, which is that this inherent power of Federal courts to interpret the Constitution and pass upon Federal law, and administer Federal law in Louisiana uniformly as it is administered in Vermont, and give a uniform interpretation of the laws of the United States in every section of this country, is affected by such a deprivation of the courts of the United States of their exclusive Federal jurisdiction, and turning it over to a State court, even assuming that such as the State of Louisiana, as asserted by the Senator from Louisiana, have power to administer the Federal law to interpret the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. As an example to illustrate the Senator's point he has stated that if a State through a court should provide that a ton of freight must be carried a thousand miles for a cent, there is no remedy until the matter gets to the Supreme Court.

If our State courts are so unreasonable that they cannot be trusted, if they go as far wrong as the Senator has intimated they might, what is to be said about the same courts in the States having jurisdiction over which the Federal courts cannot trespass to try a man for murder, where human life is at stake? Does the Senator think it is more sacred to save that cent than it is to save a human life? Ought we not to amend the Constitution and let a man who has been tried for murder or some other alleged crime have a right to be heard by the Federal courts, and see that he gets justice?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I will answer that question by asking one. Assuming either an affirmative or a negative answer—it matters not which—to that particular question, what is wrong with providing in this measure that if an injunction is granted, and a stay pending appeal is allowed, then and thereupon the Federal court shall not step in and grant that stay?

Mr. NORRIS. I shall be glad to answer the question as I understand it. One of the very objects of this bill is to prevent the very thing that the Senator wants; that is, to enable men or corporations to delay litigation, wear out their opponents by expense, or wear out the public by time, until we have a real Jarndyce against Jarndyce; and when we get to the end of it everybody realizes, perhaps, that the judgment then rendered does not apply to the case as it originated.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

Mr. AUSTIN. I will yield to the Senator in a moment.

I wish time would allow me to read a brief by Hon. Edward W. Everett, of the firm of Winston, Strong & Shaw, which was filed with the committee on this bill, relating to the procedural aspects of the bill, because that brief—which I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD—undertakes to show that the procedure in the Federal court is much more expeditious than the procedure in the State court, primarily because there are less divisions of the court to go through. You go straight to a district court and apply for your injunction without any intermediate loss of time.

Speaking of the case to which allusion has been made—the Montana case—of course, that is a horrid example of the law's delays, and I do not criticize the characterization of it that has been made, Jarndyce against Jarndyce; but on examination of that record, as I have made it, I discover that that is a very unusual case, and, like all unusual cases, it had an unusual experience up and down the ladder of both courts.

In that case the company had reduced its rates so low, as a competitive measure, that the public-utility commission was trying to make it lift them up. The occasion for an injunction was never asserted in the lower courts; and in the State courts the question of repugnance to the Constitution of the order was not raised or passed upon at all. That case does not apply to this situation. It does not afford any reason whatever for supporting this bill. If anything, I think the inference to draw from that case is the need of a more effective State statute, and more expeditious handling of State business.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield first to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who first asked to interrupt me.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I simply wanted to recall the discussion to what was suggested by the Senator from Nebraska and what was said by the Senator from Vermont a moment ago. As I understood the Senator from Vermont, he made the flat-footed statement that if a public-utility corporation had its rate fixed at a cent for hauling a thousand miles, it was utterly remediless if we took away the peculiar jurisdiction that we seek to take away from the Federal court. I think either I misunderstood the Senator or the Senator was indulging in a statement a little at variance with his own thought.

Mr. AUSTIN. Perhaps I made such a statement. I thought I had limited it to those States in which there is no statute granting a stay pending appeal.

I have here a reference, in the brief of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., to four such statutes:

Chapter 84, section 2, Arizona Laws of 1931.

Chapter 79, Nebraska Laws of 1929.

Chapter 773, New York Laws of 1930.

Chapter 280, Wisconsin Laws of 1931.

Since this particular bill came up for consideration, Mr. President, and while it was being considered by the committee, the District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin, on December 28, 1932, made a decision based upon that remedy which the State of Wisconsin provided, to stay the effect of one of these orders pending the decision of the repugnancy of the order to the Constitution. This is important new evidence to be considered by the Senate on the question of diversity of citizenship. Of course, I think that it matters not what other considerations the Senators may choose to look into; that the absolute vesting of jurisdiction and power in the Federal courts of all cases arising under the Constitution itself needs nothing to support it, and no experience in any State, and that it cannot be changed save by an amendment of the Constitution similar to the eleventh amendment.

The order made by the court in Wisconsin was this:

It is hereby ordered that all proceedings in this court to restrain the execution of the order of the Public Service Commission of Wisconsin dated November 10, 1932, be, and the same are hereby, stayed pending the final determination in the courts of the State of Wisconsin of the suit begun in the circuit court of Dane County, State of Wisconsin, on December 27, 1932, by the defendants herein against the plaintiffs herein, to enforce said order of said Public Service Commission of Wisconsin. This stay may be vacated upon proof made after hearing and notice of 10 days served upon defendants herein that the suit in the said court is not being prosecuted with diligence and good faith.

In other words, here was a district court of the United States of America for the Western District of Wisconsin which refused to interfere in the process and procedure of the Wisconsin courts dealing with such an order as is included in the class of the pending bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, is the Senator complaining about that order of the Federal courts?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not at all. I claim——

Mr. NORRIS. Then, I wonder why the Senator is opposing the enactment of the pending bill? There is a court, to use the Senator's language, whose action was unusual, which refused to restrain, under the circumstances. The proposed law makes that refusal law by taking away some of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, Mr. President; the pending bill does, and it does it when there is no other remedy. It does it, although there is no stay in the State court. That is the trouble with it.

Since that time the New York courts have acted under their statute to which I have referred, and they acted in a way similar to the State of Wisconsin. This is in Consolidated Water Co. of Utica against Maltby and others, Supreme Court, Albany County, special term, July 1933.

Stay granted pending review by Appellate Division on certiorari proceedings against enforcement of committee order requiring water company to put into effect revised schedule of rates so as to produce annual revenue of at least $120,000 less than an average for the years 1930 and 1931. Because less than 6-percent return may be confiscatory, it does not follow that return in excess thereof is unfair and unreasonable. Company held to have made prima facie case of irreparable loss in event of reversal of order by Appellate Division.

That ruling, Mr. President, went up to the Appellate Division, and there it was sustained, showing that in a State where it is desired to enforce the State's statutes and to treat litigants in the courts of that State with fairness and not confiscate their property pending the decision of the issues in the case, that one can have ample and adequate justice, and also pointing out that the proponents of the pending measure could well afford to have accepted, and could well afford now to accept the amendment proposed in the committee, that when such procedure as occurred in Wisconsin and New York takes place, when a State by its own procedure saves human rights guaranteed by the Constitution, that then and only then are the courts of the United States deprived of jurisdiction to step in and say, "Here, we will not allow you to destroy this property pending the decision of the constitutionality of these acts."

When a stay order issues out of a State court the rate payers are protected as they are when the Federal courts enjoin the order by the State regulatory body, because the excess rates collected are impounded and held for refund if the order of the State regulatory body is finally approved.

On the other hand, if the bill S. 752, should be passed, the utility could never recover the difference between fair rates and the rates fixed by the regulatory body which are finally adjudged to be confiscatory. Under these circumstances the investors in public-utility securities stand to lose their property while the case is going through the State courts unless a stay of the order is made mandatory.

To be sure, if the bill as it is proposed contained the amendment I referred to, then the complaint which we make about it would not have the same force that it now has, for if in every case where the question of whether the supposed or alleged confiscatory order shall be so held by the Supreme Court of the United States, a stay is granted, then it would not be necessary for the Federal court to step in and grant this extraordinary power which rests solely upon the supposition that the remedies afforded by the States are inadequate. That is the very foundation of this right.

Mr. President, it is obvious that it is not intended by the bill to include a restraining order as one of the remedies that are described as "effective." It is obvious that clause 3 was not intended to include adequate remedy. If it were so intended, and if it might be asserted now that that can be interpreted to include adequate remedy, including a stay of orders, then the pending bill is wholly unnecessary, because the Judicial Code, section 266, as amended, provides:

No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of a State by restraining the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute, or in the enforcement or execution of an order made by an administrative board or commission acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State, shall be issued or granted by any Justice of the Supreme Court, or by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge—

In other words, when there is an adequate remedy they do not need this bill, because section 266 of the Code already provides that this Federal court shall not intervene in such circumstances unless it finds that the State courts are not proceeding and that their dilatory practices are such that they amount to confiscatory tactics.

And I call attention to the following pertinent provision of section 266 of the Judicial Code:

> It is provided that if before the final hearing of such application a suit shall have been brought in a court of the State having jurisdiction thereof under the laws of such State, to enforce such statute or order, accompanied by a stay in such State court of proceedings under such statute or order pending the determination of such suit by such State court, all proceedings in any court of the United States to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed pending the final determination of such suit in the courts of the State.

I have already called attention to the fact that the report of the majority deals largely with one class only—diversity of citizenship. It does allude to the other class, but it merely alludes to it. There is no discussion to fortify it or support it. There is not a single case cited. There is not a distinguished man's opinion employed in the report that supports the doctrine that the Congress of the United States, by the simple passage of a bill, can deprive the Federal courts of their inherent jurisdiction granted by article II, to which I have alluded, namely, vesting all jurisdiction of cases in which repugnancy to the Constitution is an issue.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it the contention of the Senator that Congress has no right under the Constitution to take away jurisdiction of the Federal courts on account of diversity of citizenship?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; that is not what I said. That illustrates the difficulty. I am shooting at one thing, and the learned Senator from Nebraska is shooting at another. We are not at issue here.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Vermont is objecting at least to taking away jurisdiction of Federal courts because of diversity of citizenship. I am very much in favor of it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, that is true; but the point I am making is that the taking away of jurisdiction or attempting to do it is on the other ground. The distinction is very great. The other grounds are the ground of unconstitutionality, the ground that an order is repugnant to one of the guaranties found in the Bill of Rights, namely, that it deprives a man of the right to hold property, the ground that it takes his property for public use without just compensation, the ground that it discriminates against him and puts him in a position much to his disadvantage as he is set up against his neighbor. Whenever one of those claims is made between two parties, then the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States is inherent, and no act of Congress can diminish it or remove it. It is another question, I admit, when we are debating the other ground of diversity of citizenship. I have discussed that ground before. I should like to refer to the record on that if I may. I have called attention to cases, particularly the case of Hunters Lessees, showing that the Supreme Court has recognized this great distinction between those two classes of jurisdiction always. That has obtained ever since that splendid statute of 1789 was put into effect and has continued unchanged to this date.

The case of Kline and others against Construction Co., cited in the report of the majority, never touches human rights, never touches the ground I have been insisting upon so strenuously. Indeed, when it refers to diversity of citizenship, it is doing something that is obiter and was not required to be done by the court. But it does not undertake to say, and in no case has the Supreme Court ever undertaken to say, that Congress may deprive the courts of the United States of their inherent jurisdiction under that clause of the Constitution vesting jurisdiction and power over all cases that come under the Constitution of the United States.

In other words, what has been argued, what has been reported, all that goes before, relates to but one ground, and that the most insignificant ground of jurisdiction contained in the bill. When the word "and" was struck out between the two grounds and the word "or" left there, so the bill could be read and must be read that when the jurisdiction is based solely upon repugnance of such order to the Constitution, the bill was made so plainly unconstitutional that no man can support it with success. Possibly it can be done in the Senate. It remains to be seen whether it can be done.

But the important class is that very class where jurisdiction arises over subject matter rather than over character of the party, where some right or claim of authority arising under the Constitution of the United States is involved. This class is merely mentioned and not debated in anything that I have seen relating to the bill. Yet repugnance to the Constitution is the most important class to which the judicial power is expressly extended by the Constitution. Their silence upon this class must mean something. Either it means the bill is not understood or there is nothing that can be said to support it.

It is a very popular pastime of professors and "brain trusters" to sneer at those who have regard to the preservation of the Bill of Rights and for the Constitution. It is popular today for careless men and complacent men to say that we who stand in defense of the Constitution treat it as a museum freak. I say, however, that when the Senate is confronted with a bill which boldly, frankly steps right out to deprive one of the coordinate branches of government of its chief function, it is time that somebody should raise a trumpet and try to awaken the conscience and the patriotism of the people of this country.

I do not regard the Constitution as a museum piece. I have always taken notice of the fact that it bends and yields to adapt itself to extraordinary conditions. This has been proven so many times that I only need to allude to the decision of January 8, 1934, in the Minnesota moratorium case, to show that the Constitution may be so interpreted by the courts of this country that it will fit an emergency and yet come out the sacred fount of the liberty of these people. We cannot afford, as a free people, to allow that instrument, which is the covenant between us and our Government, to be torn down piece by piece, a little here and a little there, especially when we see the trend of all of these different modifications attempted to be made by Congress in this fundamental instrument.

The vitality and the necessity of the Constitution has ever been safeguarded as the indispensable covenant of the people with their Government to protect their liberties and to protect the Government from the brain storms of "brain trusters" and from the mad surges of emotional mobs in times of temptation.

On the one hand its sanctity and power as a fundamental law has been always, and will be ever, a repression upon government against the temptation to extricate itself from political and economic embarrassment by sudden and whimsical usurpation of power to manage business, control credit, abrogate contracts, curtail freedom, and, on the other hand, against the temptation of the people to make violent alterations in the form of government suddenly and by direct action by an act of the Congress.

This power to grant injunctions in the cases excluded by the proposed bill is an essential part of the judicial power now possessed by the courts, and yet we undertake to take it away by a mere act of Congress!

The sole method of enforcing the Bill of Rights authorized by law and adopted by the Federal courts in most cases is by way of injunction; and yet that is the instrument that we are trying to take away from these courts, not in general, not with respect to all men, but with respect to a certain class of men, discriminating against them to their very great damage.

It is obvious that if these courts are deprived of this power, and they cannot intervene in those States where such a remedy is not mandatory by the State law or granted by its courts, irreparable damage would be suffered, and the number of those States is very, very great.

The freedom expressed by the Bill of Rights and secured by the Constitution, as interpreted by the Federal courts, has been the most creative force in our social and economic life since our separation from Great Britain.

The relief of all men from a selfish ruler, whose tyrannical levies of taxes and whose confiscatory and repressive commercial measure discouraged enterprise, set free that incentive, initiative, and purposeful work which lifted the American people out of a condition of the gravest depression and bankruptcy as well as social demoralization to become the leading nation of the earth, to do that very rapidly, and to hold that position until the present time. Other factors entered into it, of course; but one of the most effective of all stimuli of this progress was the unity and harmony of interpretation of the Constitution obtained by having constitutional questions decided by Federal courts. The delicate balance in the relations between the Federal and State Governments necessary to avoid conflicts between the various sovereignties never could have been maintained if the power now sought to be destroyed had not been in force throughout our history. Various interpretations of the Constitution would have been made by the various courts of the several States with reference to their peculiar and specific domestic problems, and with little regard for the maintenance of an indissoluble Union.

High authority for this view is found in the lives of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, whose leadership in the creation of this Federal system of government emphasizes the need for strength in the Federal sovereignty so far as it was created by the people, as well as preservation of the vigor of State sovereignty so far as it was retained by them.

Of course, the most emphatic evidence of the soundness of this doctrine was the War between the States, and the subsequent firm adherence to the powers which were Federal on the one hand, and to the jealous retention of the authority which was State on the other hand.

The right of a widow and her children to the insurance of the deceased husband and father, paid for by the sweat of the brow and brought together through a lifetime of self-sacrifice, should not be taken from them today by legislation which tends to destroy the insurance company whose promise to pay is the sole representative of all that toil and sacrifice.

The right of the laboring man to the humble deposit in his savings bank should not be damaged by legislation passed today which has a tendency to destroy the solvency of the bank in which he has deposited his money. Yet it is perfectly obvious that the passage of this bill, depriving public utilities of the right to appeal to the jurisdiction of Federal courts for protection from confiscatory orders, will directly injure insurance companies and the banks of this country, whose securities consist largely of the stocks and bonds of utility companies.

Human rights include the right to own property without confiscation by a ruling class or by a despotic government. Human rights include the right to faith that industrious, law-abiding, orderly living in our communities will be awarded sufficient property on which to live decently, to maintain churches, schools, hospitals, comfortable homes, sanitary public works, efficient lighting companies, rapid and comfortable transportation systems, means of speedy communication, and all that contributes to the remarkably fine environment in which an individual may have the opportunity for the greatest exercise of his powers and highest development of the spirit and intelligence.

Human rights cannot be narrowed down to rates alone. Legislation of this character should be viewed with reference to the general welfare, because the general welfare consists of the well-being of all individuals in society.

(At this point Mr. AUSTIN yielded the floor for the day.)

Tuesday, February 6, 1934

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, before proceeding with my remarks begun on yesterday, with reference to S. 752, I desire to correct a statement to which my attention was very courteously called, and very appropriately called, at the time by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. I appreciate their very great courtesy to me on yesterday in their endeavor to get me on the track, which I supposed I was was following all the time, and I now hasten to acknowledge that courtesy and to correct the statement which provoked the interrogatories.

I read that statement so it can be understood.

> What will occur if a railroad tomorrow is ordered to transport passengers or freight a thousand miles for 1 cent? Anyone knows that is a confiscatory order, does he not? And yet if the bill passes without such an amendment to it—

That is to say, the amendment that I offered in the committee and that I intend to offer at the close of the debate on the Senate floor—

> And yet if the bill passes without such an amendment to it in forty-odd States of the Union that order cannot be stayed and must be carried out during all the time of an appeal and consideration, clear through all of the State courts and up to the Supreme Court of the United States on the question whether that order is repugnant of the Constitution of the United States

I should have included in that statement what I think I have included in every other one throughout the argument, this condition—

> In States where injunctive relief should not be granted.

Of course, that is the intent of that statement; and although I was reminded and should have remembered what I had said, I did not do so. I think I made it clear that my meaning was such, for later, in response to the Senator from Louisiana, I said that the claim I was making was—

> That this inherent power of the Federal courts to interpret the Constitution and pass upon Federal law and administer Federal law in Louisiana uniformly as it is administered in Vermont, and give a uniform interpretation to the laws of the United States in every section of this country is affected by such a deprivation of the courts of the United States of their exclusive Federal jurisdiction and turning it over to a State court.

Today I reiterate that statement as corrected, namely, that where it is discretionary only in a given State, where there is no statute making it mandatory in that State, and where the statutes of that State prohibit a stay, but, on the contrary, expressly provide for the execution of the order, the deprivation of the rights of citizens of the class limited in this bill is unconstitutional, for the reason that their property is taken without due process of law, and for the further reason that it discriminates against them and does not provide an equal protection of the law with other citizens who are similarly situated.

I wish to state that the background of the statutes may be readily obtained from the report of the hearings held in 1932, March 18 and 19, and which are set forth at page 127 and following, showing what a vast diversity there is of statutes in the several States relating to the matter of preventive remedy pending an appeal.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I do not want to distract the Senator from his argument or line of thought, but I desire to say that in many, if not most, of the States when a man is indicted for murder in the district court, he is incarcerated and held without the right of bail pending trial. In other words, that is one of the things that is in the hands of those charged with the administration of justice. A man accused of murder is arrested and indicted. He may be held in jail for several months awaiting trial. That is a matter of human rights and human liberty. There can, of course, be some miscarriage; but I ask, Is that any worse than the miscarriage in the matter of property rights ad interim, we might say, or pendente lite?

Mr. AUSTIN. If I were to answer the Senator's question in the affirmative or in the negative, it would not furnish a logical reason for undertaking, by a simple act of Congress, to remove from the jurisdiction of courts of the United States a power vested in them by the Constitution of the United States for the very purpose mentioned by the Senator from Louisiana, namely, to protect life, liberty, and property from being taken away from the people and citizens of this country without due process of law.

I want to say that in no sense can the remarks which I have made here be interpreted as a reflection upon the dignity and ability of the courts of the several States. If the time has arrived when a Senator of the United States may not stand on the floor of this great deliberative body and present his views with respect to a bill which he thinks proposes to deprive a department of the Government of one of its most essential functions without being accused of casting reflections upon the courts of his own State or any other department of his own State government or that of other States, then it is a sad situation.

On the other hand, I desire to say that I have the highest regard for the judges whom I know who preside over the courts certainly in my own State and of those of other States about whom I have the honor to know something. I cannot imagine my remarks being interpreted here as reflection upon Chief Justice George M. Powers, of the Supreme Court of the State of Vermont, or any other of the justices of that court, for whom I hold the very highest regard and for whose sense of justice and learning I have profound respect. Indeed, I have such respect and regard for our great chief justice that I was one of a delegation that recommended him to the President of the United States for appointment as a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States on a recent occasion when there was a vacancy.

No; my own State has a statute under which an appeal from the decision of a regulatory body automatically stays the execution of the order and protects the person and citizen from the confiscation of his property pending decision on the appeal and until the question of repugnance to the Constitution of the United States has been decided unless the courts order otherwise. So the statutes of other States provide in a similar way, but some of them provide directly opposite. For example, at page 132 of the hearings, I find that Nevada has provided that—

> All rates fixed by the commission shall be deemed reasonable and just and shall remain in full force and effect until final determination by the courts having jurisdiction.

Let me ask what possible protection, what possible stay, what possible assertion of that sovereign power which the Constitution has vested in the courts of the United States for the purpose of saving of the rights of its citizens and its people could intervene if we, by an act of Congress, undertake to change the present system in such a way that no petition may be taken to any court of the United States for preventive relief?

Viewing the statutory situation of the several States generally, I think it may be said that in most States discretionary power of a court to order or not to order a stay in the case of an appeal from such a board as a public utility commission obtains under the rule of equity that a man who seeks equity must do equity, and if he comes into the court of equity and calls for the enforcement or the prevention of the enforcement of an order of a public utility, the court can so adjust affairs under that order as that property shall be saved and life shall be saved and liberty shall be saved if such are in danger. But, as I have pointed out, there need not be any confusion about the interpretation of this law; there need not be any question about the words "effective remedy"; there need not be anything left to the discretion of the court that has to consider this matter, as to whether what has gone before amounts to an adequate remedy at law or whether the statutes of a given State afford an adequate remedy at law, if the proponents of this measure and the Senate should see fit to adopt an amendment which would definitely incorporate in the definition of jurisdiction the words "which remedy includes the right of such public utility to a stay of such order pending final adjudication as to the repugnance of such order to the Constitution of the United States."

Such an amendment in this bill might not save it, but it would make the measure greatly less obnoxious, because it would narrow the class upon which it would fall. Such an amendment adopted to this bill would make mandatory a stay to oust the Federal court of its jurisdiction, because the sole foundation upon which any citizen or any person appeals to the Federal court for injunctive relief would be absent, namely, no other adequate remedy at law or in equity being available. Such an amendment would afford that remedy.

Mr. President, I now proceed to conclude my remarks. The laboring man has the right to the protection of his job from the confiscatory orders which jeopardize the soundness of his employer's business and his ability to continue to operate. The number of laboring men is not a mere handful in this country; they are the people of this country as much as are the lawyers or any other class of people, however they may be engaged or in whatever way they may seek to earn their living. In this host are included the railroad employee, the shopman, the section man, the flagman, the engineman, the conductor, the lineman, the telephone mechanic, and the great number of office-staff workers in public utilities of all kinds. Do they not represent a worthy and important number of the people who ordained this Constitution and whose rights are supposed to be insured by it and to be enforced by the courts whose jurisdiction is sought to be taken away by this bill? Mr. President, the pending bill, if passed, would destroy this right so far as it relates to the subject matter of the bill and the class of citizens limited in it. This right of protection for a man's job is an important human right which we strive to save. Human rights include the right to contract and to have contracts sustained and enforced by their Government; human rights among American citizens include the right of deliberation and judgment upon any change in the fundamental contract which created their form of government.

The people are entitled to pass upon amendments to the Constitution. Amendments of the fundamental law in an irregular and informal manner deprive the people of their rights without due process of law. This particular right is of the greatest importance, because without this right we cannot have a government of the people.

Attempts to reform and remold our system of government without the people being aware of it should be blocked at every step. Reform of our system of government under the guise of recovery has an added danger in it of purchasing complacency with lavish expenditure of money. The proposed measure has the effect, if enacted into law and sustained, of amending the Constitution by a mere act of Congress. This type of amendment of the Constitution lacks two safeguards of liberty: First, the two-thirds vote of both Houses in proposing an amendment; and second, ratification by the people in three fourths of all the States of the Union.

Vigilance has always been the price of liberty. The encroachments upon the rights of the people have generally been made a step at a time, and it is historically true that once liberty is lost it is not regained by the same generation that lost it. The lesson of the struggle forward to constitutional government is that every attempt to deprive the people of their constitutional rights must be resisted. There is a grave danger in complacent inattention or lack of diligence.

Since the bill is discriminatory; since it is a step toward the abolition of Federal courts; since it is unnecessary if a stay of the order complained of is granted by State courts; since States which choose to surrender the protection of Federal jurisdiction may do so by passing a stay order in such cases; since other States ought not to be compelled by Congress to surrender this protection; since the bill could result in a denial of a review of the facts found by the State courts; since, pending litigation, a confiscatory order could destroy private property because of a lack of stay; since a stay should be provided for to do justice to all parties in interest; since the bill puts in hazard the workman's job; since it tends to destruction of private ownership and establishment of public ownership of utilities; since it reduces the sovereign power of the Federal Government to interpret and enforce the Federal Constitution and laws; since it abolishes an essential part of the judicial power now possessed by the Federal courts and therefore an essential part of the sovereignty of the Nation, I claim that the bill ought not to pass.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the measure in detail nor shall I attempt to do so. I shall content myself with simply mentioning the fact that I was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary that first considered the advisability of the enactment of a statute of this kind. I think perhaps it was as much as 2 years ago.

The subcommittee held hearings. Witnesses were invited to come before the subcommittee and testify and give evidence both for and against the measure. Many witnesses attended on both sides of the controversy. Those who were opposed to the bill were there in great force. The opponents were represented by some of the most eminent lawyers in the country. Brilliant counsel testified. But in not a single instance, as I remember now, was any witness able to suggest one case where any injustice could have been done in the past to those whom they represented if the bill then had been a law. Members of the subcommittee pressed witnesses to catalog cases that had been adjudicated in the past, instances where some harm might have come to their clients if there had been a statute in existence then such as is proposed in the pending measure. Notwithstanding the fact they were given every opportunity to mention any such case, not one single instance was brought to the attention of the subcommittee.

I think it was the unanimous opinion of those serving on the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of this body that it was a more or less one-sided question. There was every reason to believe that the bill, if enacted into law, would result in a greater degree of justice to the people of the country and there was no real good valid argument presented against it. Because of that fact, I was glad to vote in the subcommittee to report it favorably to the Committee on the Judiciary. In that committee I again voted to report it favorably to the Senate. Now that it is before the Senate I shall just as cordially support it here.

Mr. President, I have no more to say on this subject. I rose primarily to submit a very brief observation with reference to another matter.

PREPAREDNESS THE BEST INSURANCE FOR PEACE

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, with war clouds hovering over the earth today, so clearly indeed that they are unmistakable and within the vision of everybody, I thought it might be timely to invite the attention of the Senate to some of the horrors of war and to some of the methods of escaping those horrors. One need not go further than the first street corner to find evidences of the casualties of the last war: Disabled American veterans, some sightless, some armless, some mentally dark and blind. If there is any way to avoid war it seems to me that we should find that method and follow it, because God knows the American people, and, indeed, the world, are sick of war.

To reemphasize the ravages of war—to reemphasize the horrors of it all—the Hearst newspapers and others recently have been publishing a series of pictures of scenes in the last armed conflict in which this country engaged, graphically portraying the tragedy and the misery and the stark terror of the thing called war. I believe these graphic illustrations have convinced every thinking person in the land—if, indeed, they were not convinced theretofore—not only of the futility of war, but of the tragedy and the terror of the thing called war.

The question arises, How may we avoid it in the future? I have an opinion that has been voiced by distinguished Americans, by the founders of the country, and by those who have succeeded them in the most responsible official positions of the land, right up to the present time, to the effect that adequate preparedness is the best way to avoid armed conflict. If a nation is prepared for war, we shall find few if any aggressors undertaking to tempt that nation into conflict. In human relations if one is endowed with fistic and pugilistic powers, the average passer-by on the street is prepared to let him alone. One never attempts to pick a fight with one who is able to defend himself. In the broader world scale it works the same way among nations.

If America is prepared to defend herself, then indeed may we escape the ravages of war; but if we are hopelessly unprepared, there are aggressor nations envious of us and our possessions who would not hesitate for a moment to attack us.

Because of that fact, it seems to me that ever since the Washington Conference we have pursued a very foolish policy—to such an extent, indeed, that we have allowed our Navy, for instance, to deteriorate so that now undoubtedly both Great Britain and Japan surpass us enormously in naval strength and efficiency.

We do not desire anything that any other country possesses. We want war with no land. All we ask is that we may be left alone with our own institutions, to conduct our own affairs as we may see fit; but, unfortunately in this connection, we are unable to direct the thought of other nations. It is impossible for us to know what they may do, or to anticipate attack; and in case war should break out in Europe or in the Far East we have our neutrality to safeguard. Not necessarily do we care to take sides with either party to a controversy; but we must be prepared to safeguard our shipping and American interests. That is the safe and sane policy. Accordingly, we must be prepared at all times with a Navy second to none in the world; an Army, as it has ever been, man for man the equal of any on the face of the globe; and keep abreast of the times in the air and under the sea.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If the Senator will wait just 1 second, I will gladly yield.

Because of the necessity for preparedness, I thought it timely to make these observations here today, and to invite the attention of the Senate to the words of illustrious Americans of the past bearing on this subject.

Now I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator if he did not think we ought to make some preparation against another naval conference sinking our ships about the time we got well along in building them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I am in entire accord with the Senator's position. I think the Washington Conference was a grievous mistake. We yielded our supremacy then—and we had supremacy over all other nations on the sea—and while they were destroying blueprints we scrapped the finest navy any nation ever had.

The conference at Geneva in 1927 was disastrous from every standpoint. We were willing over there to agree on a limitation of tonnage with reference to cruisers, for instance, say, an aggregate of 300,000 tons. We were willing to take 300,000 tons and give Great Britain 300,000 tons and let Japan have the same tonnage on a basis of 5 to 3. The trouble was that other nations then insisted on telling us the kind of cruisers we should build. We insisted on the largest cruisers permitted by the Washington Conference, namely, 10,000 tons as the extreme upward limit, with 8-inch guns. But Great Britain especially insisted that we join her in building light cruisers, which are utterly useless to us, since we have few naval bases. We have only one, for instance, in the Pacific, at Pearl Harbor, while Britain has at least 36, one on every trade route in the world. So the conference broke up and the then Chief Executive directed our representatives to come home.

The last naval conference, in London, was a complete failure from the American standpoint. I know there are those here—those who are good friends of mine and in whose judgment I frequently concur—who take an opposite view; but, in the light of what has transpired since, it seems to me everyone must agree that the London Conference was utterly disastrous from the standpoint of American defense.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. Does not the Senator think it is significant that the London Treaty was so regarded in Japan that it led to the assassination of two of her prime ministers and the most bitter opposition to its ratification? Does he not think it is significant that its ratification was bitterly opposed by the British Navy and all the big navy men in Great Britain? Does not the Senator think perhaps that would justify a more tolerant view of it through American eyes?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I know that my esteemed friend was an American representative at that conference. I have the highest regard for my friend from Pennsylvania. I did not agree with him then, and I do not agree with him now, on that question. If I remember rightly, there were only nine of us in the Senate who voted to oppose ratification of the treaty. The difficulty is to know how much of what the Senator has just suggested is fact and how much of it is propaganda. Propagandized as we are by other nations throughout the world, I am inclined to think that much of the alleged dissatisfaction of the British Navy and of the Japanese Navy with the London Treaty was propaganda. I am inclined to believe that they were very well pleased with the outcome of that conference.

Mr. REED. The Senator does not think the assassination of two Prime Ministers is propaganda?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; but that has nothing to do with the major issue. They have local problems in Japan, as the Senator knows if he has visited that country.

Mr. REED. I have; but the assassination of those two men——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There are local questions that have to do entirely with matters outside of the London Naval Conference; and the assasination of the two officials to whom the Senator refers, in my judgment, had little to do directly with what transpired at the Naval Conference. That is my own opinion.

Mr. REED. And yet the men who committed the assassinations stated that that was their reason—that Japanese rights had been given away at London.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. So far as the Japanese are concerned they would like to have a navy three or four times as large as ours, and today, largely as a result of the London Conference, their navy is superior to ours.

Mr. REED. The Senator does not really believe that, does he?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I believe that is true, Mr. President. I know, or at any rate I learn from sources of authority that I think are reliable, that they have fortified the Caroline Islands. They have undoubtedly fortified Rota, of the Marianne Group, and others which they hold by mandate of the League of Nations, though they have left the League of Nations itself and now refuse to surrender these mandates. In other words, I am of the opinion—the Senator may not agree with me—that we can place utterly no confidence in anything the Japanese say or do. That is my notion.

Mr. REED. I readily admit that there is a very strong jingo party in Japan, and that they have built up to the limits permitted them under these treaties. The great fault I find is that we have not exercised our rights under the treaty. If we had, the question of the relative strength of the two Nations would be beyond any question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, let us see about that. Suppose we had built up to the London Treaty. Then we should have on our hands now many light cruisers which the best counsel of the United States Navy say are practically useless to us, I think with one exception—Admiral Pratt, Chief of Operations. All of the other naval authorities testified before the Committee on Foreign Relations that these light cruisers were utterly useless to us, and this is the reason:

Take the Pacific Ocean, for instance. We have only one naval base on that vast sea. That is at Pearl Harbor, in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. REED. The Senator does not mean to say that we have nothing on the Pacific coast of this country.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, well, on the Pacific coast what have we outside of Seattle?

Mr. REED. We have a very fine base at San Diego, another one at Bremerton, and a fairly good one at San Francisco.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. We have a base at Bremerton, Mr. President. That is an excellent base, but it is away up in the northwestern extremity of continental United States.

Mr. REED. And that much closer to Japan.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But so far as Japan is concerned, the Senator does not think it is anywhere near Japan. Let me suggest to the Senator that Japanese liners constantly ply between Seattle and Yokohama, and use the great northern track, going through the Aleutian Islands, perhaps some 4,000 miles. They are thoroughly familiar with all of the Alaskan waters up there—waters which have not been adequately charted by our Navy—and the westernmost island of the Aleutian group is only some 700 miles from Japan, and it is 2,800 miles from Seattle. So the relative distance is of no advantage to us.

But let me pursue the other thought for a moment.

Bremerton is a naval base——

Mr. REED. Let me interrupt the Senator to say that the northern Pacific has been thoroughly charted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I deny that statement; and I have it from excellent authority and from those who are in a position to know. As a matter of fact, much of the charting there is what remains of the work done by the Russians, from whom we purchased Alaska in 1867. But let me pursue the other thought.

Bremerton is in the northwest corner of continental United States. That is a splendid base, though difficult of access. It is more or less landlocked. It is a day's trip into Bremerton. That is all we have.

Mare Island, at San Francisco, is 19 miles up the bay. The water there is shallow. A fleet could easily be bottled up in there, as a matter of fact; and it is difficult to use that as a base in any sense of the word, because it is utterly unfitted for such use. It has been there for years. There is a great deal of local pride out there in its retention; but I think most of those in authority in the Navy would readily concede that it is practically useless to us.

Reference is made to San Diego. The Senator may call that a base; but, in my judgment, it is anything but an effective naval base against attack from the sea.

What else have we on the Pacific coast? Bremerton, Seattle, Mare Island, San Francisco, San Diego.

Mr. REED. Pearl Harbor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is the one I am talking about. That is the only base we have in the Pacific, 2,100 miles west of San Francisco, and some 5,000 miles from Japan.

Mr. REED. That is a pretty good base.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; but it requires an expenditure of $40,000,000 in order to make it effective.

Mr. REED. That is a pretty good base right now; is it not?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is an excellent base; yes; and if we should spend $40,000,000 additional we could make a thorough base out of it by straightening the channel into the harbor and by submerging the oil tanks, which stand out like sore thumbs.

Mr. REED. That is only about 1 day's deficit these days.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am not talking about the amount of the deficit. I agree with the Senator that in these days we might as well spend $40,000,000 and call it an hour's work; but it ought to be done. That is the important thing. Then we would have at least one real base in the Pacific. But if we use a 7,500-ton cruiser with 6-inch guns, having little fuel-carrying capacity and no gun superiority over other ships of either the British Navy or the Japanese Navy, we are at a terrific disadvantage, for in going west Pearl Harbor is its only friendly haven, with the Philippines an additional 5,000 miles away. So what good is a light cruiser of that kind to our national defense?

Mr. REED. Does the Senator mind interruptions? If he would rather I should not interrupt him, I will not do so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; I am very glad to be interrupted.

Mr. REED. There is nothing in the treaty that limits our 6-inch gun cruisers to 7,500 tons. On the contrary, we are building a lot of them of 10,000 tons.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But they are limited to 6-inch guns.

Mr. REED. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is the whole story, Mr. President. We have 6-inch guns when, with no bases to which we may go back and forth, as the British have and as the Japanese have now in the Pacific, we should have the largest guns we are permitted to carry under the Washington Treaty.

Mr. REED. The matter of tonnage is important in view of the absence of bases. The caliber of the guns has nothing to do with the presence or absence of naval bases.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, if our Navy, those charged with the responsibility of defending our country in an emergency, insisted that 8-inch guns are necessary for our defense, and we were permitted under the Washington Conference Treaty to carry 8-inch guns, why should our representatives at the conference have given way to the British view and accepted 6-inch guns, when, as a matter of fact, our experts all insist they are inadequate for our defense?

Mr. REED. There are two answers to that. In the first place, the experts did not all insist. They disagreed, as experts usually do. In the next place, we did not give way to either British or Japanese, but we have the right to build eighteen 8-inch-gun cruisers, against the British limit of 15, and the Japanese limit of 12.

We have 180,000 tons allowed us in the 8-inch-gun cruisers against 108,000 tons for the Japanese and 150,000 tons for the British. We have more of that kind of cruisers than any nation on earth.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, the point is, why should we not have held out for our viewpoint, to build all of our cruiser strength in 10,000-ton-capacity ships with 8-inch guns, if they are essential to our proper defense, and if the smaller cruisers, the lighter cruisers, and the smaller guns, are inadequate for our defense? It is on that point that the Senator from Pennsylvania and I are unable to see the question in the same light.

Mr. REED. Very well, we can hold out for the American viewpoint. We received a larger allowance of that kind of cruisers than any other nation, and if we had demanded any more we would not have had a treaty.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is just the point, Mr. President. We got no treaty in Geneva, either, because we insisted on our demands, and Mr. Coolidge told our representatives to come on home. If Great Britain and Japan are going to tell us the kind of cruisers we are to be allowed to build, when we have no naval base in the Pacific, except Pearl Harbor, we should say to our representatives, "Come on home and let the treaty fail." It would have been better if our representatives in London had come home and not become intoxicated with the British viewpoint. There were intimations as to the entertainment that was going on and all that sort of thing; but I shall not go into that. We would have been better off without a treaty, far better off, and then we could have built the kind of ships we need, as long as they are in accord with the Washington Treaty.

Mr. REED. I should like to assure the Senator, in the first place, that the treaty was not affected by the meals we were served in London. All of us who went over there were perfectly able to buy our own lunches, though I do not think that any entertainment that was offered affected the terms of the treaty.

In the next place, and seriously, if we had had no treaty, and if the three countries had remained in the frame of mind in which they have been for the last 4 years, Japan and Great Britain would have built so far beyond us that we probably never would catch up. Our country did not want to build any more ships. We have been willing, until the present time, to build up our Navy to less than our treaty allowance, whereas the other two countries have built up their navies, and have built right up to the limits of the treaty. They would have gone far beyond it if we had not restrained them by having the treaty in effect.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Surely the Senator from Pennsylvania does not think international relationships have improved any since the time of the London Conference, does he? I think Europe today is on the verge of another great war, and there is no question about the Far East.

Mr. REED. That is why we ought to have built our Navy up to the limit allowed us.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly; and we ought to have reserved the right to build the kind of ships that satisfy our needs, and not have surrendered to the Japanese and British viewpoint; and then, if we did not build the ships, it would have been our own fault. Today we have no right to build those ships. The treaty has strictly limited us so that we must build ships of a certain type which the best authorities, the authorities I choose to believe in most, say are useless to us, or practically so—the smaller type.

Mr. REED. I do not believe this is the place for a public discussion of the relative merits of the two types of ship. What little we may know about that we had better keep to ourselves.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Everybody else knows it. Every chancellory on earth knows about all the ships we have—perhaps even more than the Senator or I may know.

Mr. REED. I am not so sure. The fact is that without the treaty we would have had a naval race instead of a treaty limitation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. We have a naval race now.

Mr. REED. We have it only within the limits of the treaty. If we had had a naval race for the last 3 or 4 years, this country would have been hopelessly outdistanced.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I challenge that statement.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Why does the Senator say that? Does not the Senator believe that if Great Britain and Japan had started a great race for naval supremacy the people of this country would have also looked after their own interests?

Mr. REED. I doubt it, because they have not sanctioned the building of the ships we were allowed to build.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. They are doing it now.

Mr. REED. The bill has not yet been passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. We are not doing it because of the London Naval Treaty; we are doing it because of the danger that lurks on all sides, and that is the point to which I am addressing my remarks at this time. If we are to avoid war and have peace, it will be necessary for us to prepare to defend ourselves.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator has made any research to find out just how a Senator might be invited to England to one of these conferences. I would like to go to one.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have not gone into the question, I will say to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I just want to put my claim on record so that I will have proper preference.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Another conference is to be held in 1936, and I suggest to the Senator that he get his request in to the White House. The Senator is on good terms with the present occupant of the White House, and perhaps the President will invite him to go to the next conference. Some one must represent us; usually one or more Members of this body go, and I see no reason why the Senator from Louisiana should not be preferred for such a mission.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I might ask the able Senator whether he does not think the foreign countries, England and others, would be very glad to see the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am not so certain about the foreign countries, but I think the President would like to see him over there. [Laughter.] Yet I cannot forget that from all we were given to understand in the press a little more than a year ago, it was the able speech of the Senator from Louisiana on the floor of the Chicago convention in the first struggle which came, testing out the Roosevelt and anti-Roosevelt strength, which turned the tide in favor of the present Chief Executive and his nomination. So I should think he would grant any favor, in reason, the Senator from Louisiana might ask.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will not the Senate have a copy of the Senator's remarks transmitted to the White House? [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I have already taken more time than I had expected, but permit me to read from an editorial published in the Washington Herald of Saturday, February 3, the following words from General Washington, the first President of the United States:

To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace.

The safety of the United States, under divine protection, ought to rest on the basis of systematic and solid arrangements, exposed as little as possible to the hazards of fortuitous circumstances.

There is more along the same line. I shall ask to have it all incorporated in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. I shall not read more from that source at this time.

John Adams, when President, discussing our relations with France, used these words:

But in demonstrating by our conduct that we do not fear war in the necessary protection of our rights and honor, we should give no room to infer that we abandon the desire of peace. An efficient preparation for war can alone secure peace. We ought, without loss of time, to lay the foundations for that increase of our Navy to a size sufficient to guard our coasts and protect our trade.

Then I quote from Thomas Jefferson:

If war be forced upon us, in spite of our long and vain appeals to the justice of nations; rapid and vigorous movement at the outset will go far toward securing us in its course and issue and toward throwing its burdens on those who render necessary the resort from reason to force.

A very brief quotation from the late Gen. Leonard Wood, an American patriot of the first order:

It is better to be ready for war and not have it than to have war and not be ready for it!

Mr. President, I can sum up all I have attempted to say in these few words—that if we would avoid the horrors of war we ought to overlook no opportunity to prevent them. The best way to prevent war, in my judgment and, I think, in the judgment of the majority of the American people, is to be prepared for any emergency that might arise; to be prepared to defend ourselves against attack at all times.

I believe that the newspapers which are giving the country an opportunity to look at the war pictures—actual photographs of the tragedy, the misery, the horror of war—are performing a useful service and should receive the commendation of the American people.

I ask, Mr. President, that the editorial entitled "America's Greatest Patriots Warned of Dangers and Disasters of Unpreparedness", appearing in the Washington Herald of last Saturday, be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[The Washington Herald, Feb. 3, 1934]

AMERICA'S GREATEST PATRIOTS WARNED OF DANGERS AND DISASTERS OF UNPREPAREDNESS

Let us lift our eyes unto the hills from whence cometh our help.

In times of danger, of distracted counsels, of conflicting preoccupations, when our energies are wearied by exertions which abnormal conditions put upon them, it is well for us to emulate the wisdom of the psalmist—and lift up our eyes to the great men of the past—men of patriotism and foresight—to those human summits in which our history is so rich.

Their words are preserved to us. Let us pore over them, take to heart and keep them in mind as a call to duty—the vital, nay the primary, duty resting upon us of maintaining our country in a state of rational—and that means adequate—preparedness and defense.

The horrors of war—so graphically portrayed in the uncensored war photographs now appearing in the Hearst Sunday papers—war's carnage and waste, and its peril to our survival as a nation, have at all times been clearly envisaged by the Nation's founders and the great Americans who came after them.

They were lovers of peace, but they did not propose to brook injury. They were ready to meet force with force if necessary.

These were the words of Washington in his first message to Congress:

"To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace.

"The safety of the United States, under Divine protection, ought to rest on the basis of systematic and solid arrangements, exposed as little as possible to the hazards of fortuitous circumstances."

In a subsequent message to Congress, the warning is repeated:

"I cannot recommend to your notice measures for the fulfillment of our duties to the rest of the world without again pressing upon you the necessity of placing ourselves in a condition of complete defense and of exacting from them the fulfillment of their duties toward us.

"The United States ought not to indulge a persuasion that, contrary to the order of human events, they will forever keep at a distance those painful appeals to arms with which the history of every other nation abounds.

"There is a rank due to the United States among nations which will be withheld, if not absolutely lost, by the reputation of weakness. If we desire to avoid insult, we must be able to repel it; if we desire to secure peace, it must be known that we are at all times ready for war."

In a later message Washington returned to the subject, saying:

"Will it not then be advisable to begin without delay to provide and lay up materials for the building and equipping of ships of war, and to proceed in the work by degrees in proportion as our resources shall render it practicable without inconvenience, so that a future war in Europe may not find our commerce in the same unprotected state in which it was found during the present?"

John Adams, when President, discussing our relations with France, used these words:

"But in demonstrating by our conduct that we do not fear war in the necessary protection of our rights and honor, we should give no room to infer that we abandon the desire of peace. An efficient preparation for war can alone secure peace. We ought, without loss of time, to lay the foundations for that increase of our Navy to a size sufficient to guard our coasts and protect our trade."

Thomas Jefferson spoke to the same effect.

"If war be forced upon us", said he, "in spite of our long and vain appeals to the justice of nations, rapid and vigorous movement at the outset will go far toward securing us in its course and issue, and toward throwing its burdens on those who render necessary the resort from reason to force."

A modern soldier and patriot, the late Gen. Leonard Wood, expressed the philosophy of preparedness in a sentence which might well serve as a national slogan:

"It is better", said he, "to be ready for war and not have it than to have war and not be ready for it."

And he reminds us that war is with us today, as it was with us yesterday, and has been a part of man's lot through all the years since history began.

"Peace leagues struggle to prevent it", said he, "and great alliances attempt to abate it."

But it will disappear, he reminds us, only when absolutely unselfish justice marks international relations; when trade is equitably shared among competing peoples; and when competition, greed, selfishness, race interest, prejudice, and religious intolerance pass away.

These are stirring thoughts of great men. We must cherish them. We must act upon them.

They are a chart of national safety.

In tomorrow's Herald another 4-page installment of uncensored World War pictures will be published.

These pictures should bring home to every American who sees them the imperative necessity for heeding the advice and the warnings of our great leaders of the past.

We must do as they would have us do: Keep foreign wars out of America, and keep America out of foreign wars.

LIMITATION OF JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I desire to consider briefly the merits, or perhaps I might say the demerits, of the pending bill, Senate bill 752, to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code. Before I do so, I think I ought to suggest some corrections so as to keep the record straight, at least so far as I myself am concerned.

I observed in the very able argument of the distinguished Senator from California, published in the RECORD this morning, the statement that a minority report upon this measure had been filed by the Senator from Vermont and myself. The fact is that I did not join in that report. I was not a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary considering the measure. The minority report, it happens, was made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] who, I understand, were members of the subcommittee.

Again, notwithstanding that, in the argument of the Senator from California the statement appears that not one State has expressed its opposition to this measure, I find in the published hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of March 18 and 19, 1932, at page 110, in the course of the testimony of John E. Benton, general solicitor, National Association of Railroad and Utility Commissioners, this statement. The chairman of the committee asked the question of the witness:

What are those two commissions?

The witness having stated that two commissions had expressed opposition to the bill, and Mr. Benton is reported to have replied as follows:

However, the number of commissions which he had heard from was only a small part of the whole, being only those nearest to Wisconsin. The two which had expressed the view that action should not be taken were the commissions of Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

The fact that the public-utility commission of the State which I have the honor in part to represent has expressed its opposition to the provisions of this measure is, to my mind, sufficient justification to express at this time views which are not in accord with the views of the proponents of the bill. I shall not discuss the constitutional phases of the measure, contrary to the expectations of the distinguished Senator from the State of California.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator deprives me of a great pleasure.

Mr. HEBERT. I think that question has been covered so wonderfully well by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] that it would be a work of supererogation for me to repeat the arguments he has so well advanced on that point in its relation to the pending bill. I want, however, to say that I consider this measure discriminatory in the extreme as against one particular group of citizens of this country. I speak of the public utilities. Of course, under the decisions of our Supreme Court they, and, indeed, all corporate organizations of this country, are vested with citizenship, and so such utilities, in the eyes of the law, are citizens just as human beings are citizens.

Article IV, section 2, of the Constitution provides:

The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

That clause of the Constitution has often been quoted here, but I think it will bear repetition lest the importance of that provision be overlooked. A part of amendment XIV reads:

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Mr. President, if we are to single out one group of the citizens of this country and say that it alone may not have the protection of the law, may not have the right to present evidence in support of its contentions before the courts of the land, then, it seems to me, we might as well say to the American Bankers' Association, which, as we all know, comprises a very large number of the banking institutions of the United States, "You may not be privileged to appear before the Federal courts in your respective States in matters affecting your interests, and, although you are incorporated under Federal law, whatever affects your interests in the several States where you are domiciled shall be determined before the tribunals of that State and in no other way." We might as well say that the milk dealers of the United States, those farmers who are engaged in the production of milk, shall not have access to the Federal courts; that the farm cooperatives, made up of large numbers of agriculturists in many sections of our country, shall be denied the right to appear before the Federal courts.

We are apt to look upon public utilities as power trusts, and financial and other gigantic institutions as entities, comprising great aggregations of wealth, organized to injure the ordinary individual citizen. We do not stop to realize that the public utilities of this country are, after all, but the holders, as trustees, for the savings of millions of people of the United States. We do not stop to realize, for example, Mr. President, that the savings of 39,267,000 citizens of the United States as represented in our savings institutions are invested in the stocks and the bonds and other obligations of public-utility concerns.

We do not stop to realize that in one company alone there are as many as 2,000,000 stockholders, the average holding being less than 30 shares, and, on the basis of $100 a share, representing an investment per stockholder of somewhere in the neighborhood of $3,000. We do not stop to realize that the number of life-insurance policies in force on January 1, 1932, in American insurance companies was 121,761,000. Prudent, careful, far-seeing American citizens have placed their earnings in the custody of those institutions, in order that those who are dependent upon them may be protected in time of adversity. Those funds are invested in public utilities. Life-insurance companies, I dare say, are among the largest investors in the country in the securities of railroads. The savings banks have literally billions of dollars invested in public utilities. So, anything which will work to the disadvantage of the public utilities will work to the detriment of the millions of depositors in our savings banks and the millions of holders of policies in our life-insurance companies.

It is urged as a reason for the enactment of this bill that there has been an abuse of the injunctive process. I observe in reading the report of the hearings held before the Judiciary Committee a table of cases that have been collated, and I find that the cases which had been heard in the several States which reported to those who conducted the investigation numbered 142,704; at any rate, that number of cases was under observation. Of that vast number of 142,704 cases, 154 reached the Supreme Court of the United States. In 86 of them the contentions of the utilities were affirmed; in 59 the contentions of the utilities were not affirmed. Of the 154 cases that came before the Supreme Court 74 alone came from State courts. So, Mr. President, it does not seem to me, from this record, that there has been any abuse of the injunctive process up to this time.

It is further urged that those cases which are taken into the Federal courts are the important cases, the very cases which lead to the conclusion that there should be some legislation to remedy the existing evils in that respect. Well, Mr. President, as has been well said, should we, because a very small percentage of cases which are tried in the State and Federal courts every day in this country go to the Supreme Court of the United States, abolish the Supreme Court? Of course, those of us who have practiced law know that literally thousands of law cases are tried in the courts of this country every day. We also know that relatively few, in fact, a very small percentage, ever reach the Supreme Court of the United States. If we follow the logic of the argument advanced in support of this bill to the effect that the remedy which is now provided in the Federal courts is not needed because there is such a small number of cases going to the Supreme Court, it would be as logical to do away with appeals to the highest tribunal under the Government of our country because of the few cases that reach it. Those very difficult cases provide us with a reason why we should maintain the jurisdiction of the Federal courts over the questions affecting public utilities.

I observed in the public prints this morning an article which, I think, throws much light on the situation at this time, and what may happen in the event the pending bill shall be enacted into law. I have before me an article which I take from the Washington Post of this morning, entitled:

Georgia bars eight phone firms in State offices. Governor calls on public to oust judges who enjoin rate cuts.

The Associated Press despatch under that heading reads as follows:

ATLANTA, February 5.—Governor Talmadge, himself beyond the reach of State courts, today ordered all telephones removed from State institutions served by eight companies enjoining reduced rates.

The Governor also put other companies operating in Georgia on notice that if they enjoined the public service commission from forcing reductions, their business would be discontinued by the State.

Determined to bring about lower utility rates, the Governor several months ago ousted all five members of the public service commission and placed men of his own choosing in their places. Since then a number of orders have been handed down cutting rates.

The Governor has called on the people to defeat at the polls—

Mark this, Senators:

The Governor has called on the people to defeat at the polls all judges who grant injunctions against reductions in utility rates. The question has not come before State judges, but a three-judge Federal court at New Orleans last week granted temporary restraining orders to the eight independents against whom the Governor acted today. The Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., largest in the State, is unaffected.

Mr. President, it must be remembered that when the utility rate cases reach the State courts, those courts will not go back of the record as made by the public utilities commission. It must be remembered, too, that the making of the investigation by the public-utilities commission is not a judicial proceeding. It is true that in most cases the utilities affected are notified that hearings will be held and that they may submit evidence in support of their contention; but the fact is that the record is made up by the commission itself, and when that record is made up and presented to the court, then it is conclusive of the facts in the case. That is not so in the Federal courts. The Federal courts have gone beyond that record.

In the State of New York one may well conceive of a situation which would deny to a public utility the right of review in the Supreme Court of the United States. Under the law of the State of New York, where a public utility is aggrieved, its appeal is to that branch of the judiciary known as the "supreme court." An appeal from the decision of that court goes to what is known as the "appellate division." But under the laws of that State one cannot go from the appellate court to the supreme court of the State unless there is a unanimous decision of the appellate court. Assuming that a case of that kind should arise, then one cannot, unless the appellate court wills it, go to the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, and manifestly until one's case has been heard by the supreme court of the State—in the case of the State of New York by the court of appeals—he cannot go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The fundamental vice of the pending bill lies in the fact that it deprives a single class of citizens in a special kind of proceeding of normal recourse to the Federal courts in enforcing the rights reserved to all citizens under the Federal Constitution. In this respect the bill is discriminatory and unfair. Whether or not actually unconstitutional, it is repugnant to the American principle of equality for all citizens before the courts.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. Can one go to the Supreme Court of the United States from a State court without the consent of the Supreme Court?

Mr. HEBERT. Yes. Every man has the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SCHALL. Is it not necessary to first obtain the consent of the Supreme Court to take an appeal to that Court?

Mr. HEBERT. No. There is a right of appeal under the statute.

Mr. SCHALL. I understood it was necessary to get the consent of the Supreme Court to take a case of this kind to that Court.

Mr. HEBERT. They may refuse to review, but one can get into the Supreme Court of the United States from the supreme court of any State.

Mr. SCHALL. Can one get in there with the facts in the case, or does he merely get in there with a proposition of law?

Mr. HEBERT. I understand when the constitutionality of the law is involved.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has discussed at some length the provisions of section 380, or, in other words, section 266 of the Judicial Code providing that where a State affords a stay against orders of public-utility commissions, then the Federal courts do not have jurisdiction.

Section 380, Judicial Code, section 266 amended, reads as follows:

No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of a State by restraining the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute, or in the enforcement or execution of an order made by an administrative board or commission acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State, shall be issued or granted by any justice of the Supreme Court, or by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of such statute, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by 3 judges, of whom at least 1 shall be a justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit judge, and the other 2 may be either circuit or district judges, and unless a majority of said 3 judges shall concur in granting such application. Whenever such application as aforesaid is presented to a justice of the Supreme Court, or to a judge, he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application 2 other judges: Provided, however, That 1 of such 3 judges shall be a justice of the Supreme Court, or a circuit judge. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least 5 days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Governor and to the attorney general of the State, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That if of opinion that irreparable loss or damage would result to the complainant unless a temporary restraining order is granted, any justice of the Supreme Court, or any circuit or district judge, may grant such temporary restraining order at any time before such hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction, but such temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice as aforesaid. The hearing upon such application for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing, an interlocutory injunction in such case. It is further provided that if before the final hearing of such application a suit shall have been brought in a court of the State having jurisdiction thereof under the laws of such State, to enforce such statute or order, accompanied by a stay in such State court of proceedings under such statute or order pending the determination of such suit by such State court, all proceedings in any court of the United States to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed pending the final determination of such suit in the courts of the State. Such stay may be vacated upon proof made after hearing, and notice of 10 days served upon the attorney general of the State, that the suit in the State courts is not being prosecuted with diligence and good faith. The requirement respecting the presence of three judges shall also apply to the final hearing in such suit in the district court; and a direct appeal to the Supreme Court may be taken from a final decree granting or denying a permanent injunction in such suit. (June 18, 1910, c. 309, sec. 17, 36 Stat. 557; Mar. 3, 1911, c. 231, sec. 266, 36 Stat. 1162; Mar. 4, 1913, c. 160, 37 Stat. 1013; Feb. 13, 1925, c. 229, sec. 1, 43 Stat. 938.)

The italicized proviso applies only where an interlocutory injunction is sought, restraining the action of any officer of a State in the enforcement of a State statute or of an order made by an administrative board or commission acting under the statutes of the State. It does not apply where a permanent injunction alone is sought or where the State action which is attacked is manifested in some way other than by such a statute or order, i.e., as by local ordinance.

Where an application for such an interlocutory injunction has been made to a Federal court, all proceedings in any court of the United States to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed, provided that before the final hearing of such application a suit shall have been brought in a State court having jurisdiction, to enforce such statute or order, accompanied by a stay in such State court of proceedings under such statute or order, which apparently means a stay of all other proceedings, except those in the State suit in question.

The practice of going to the Federal courts in utility rate cases originated in the State of New York. The objection which was made by the representatives of the States was that it took away the rights of the State to consider its own internal affairs. In the case of Prendergast against New York Telephone Co. (262 U.S. 43), reported in 1923, Mr. Justice Sanford made this remark:

The application for the injunction was heard by the district court upon the pleadings and affidavits relating to the cost and value of the company's property, its revenues, and expenses. It was not necessary that the company offer in evidence the voluminous testimony that had been taken by the commission on the legislative question prior to making the orders in question. The bill did not challenge the orders of the commission on the ground that it had acted arbitrarily, without any evidence. * * * The sole issue presented was whether or not the orders were confiscatory; which was to be determined by the court upon the evidence submitted to it.

Again, after the principle of the right of the State to regulate public utilities was established by the eventful decision in Munn against Illinois, some of the progressive States saw the necessity of delegating the rate-making power to an expert body or commission. That gave rise to a further decision sustaining the right of the Federal court to entertain motions for restraining orders. I find, as a part of the record of the hearings before the subcommittee on this measure, in the appendix, that there are collected excerpts from the utility laws of practically all the States. An examination of these will reveal that in but two instances do public utilities have absolute stay in case they consider that a rate is confiscatory. As I recall, one of these States is the State of Nebraska, whose laws provide as follows:

(a) The review is obtained by an action in the Supreme Court.
(b) "The evidence presented before the railway commission, as reported by its official stenographer and reduced to writing, shall be duly certified to by the stenographer and the chairman of the railway commission as the true bill of exceptions, which, together with the pleadings and filings duly certified in the case under the seal of the railway commission, shall constitute the complete record and evidence upon which the case shall be presented to the appellate court."
(c, d) The procedure shall be governed by the same provisions now in force with reference to appeals and error proceedings from the district courts to the Supreme Court of Nebraska.
(e) The order of the commission may be stayed by the filing of a supersedeas bond pending the review.

So far as I know, that is the only absolute guaranty of a stay in any of the statutes of the several States affecting public utilities and the rates which they shall charge.

It will be noted that under that statute nothing need be done by the public utility, if it be aggrieved by a ruling of the commission having control over its affairs, except to file a supersedeas bond; and thereupon there is a stay automatically until the case is finally determined by a decision of the Supreme Court.

In most of the States there is a provision to the effect that the court may grant a stay, but not as a matter of right; only as a matter of discretion within the judgment of the court itself. I do not know of any other State that has an absolute right, as is the case in the State of Nebraska.

Mr. President, there is a way in which States may protect themselves against what is termed "the interference of the Federal courts" if they care to do so. The State of Virginia has availed itself of that means. The State of Virginia some years ago passed a statute requiring that all public utilities should be domiciled in the State of Virginia before they could do business there. The right to pass such a statute was questioned in the case of Railway Express Agency, Inc., against Virginia. That case was heard in the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia in 1929, and thereafter went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and is reported in Two Hundred and Eighty-second United States Reports, page 440. The decision was handed down on February 2, 1931.

I think it will be interesting to include in the body of my remarks the opinion in that case, written by Mr. Justice Holmes. It reads as follows:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia affirming an order of the corporation commission that denied to the appellant a certificate of authority to do an intrastate express business in Virginia (153 Va. 498). The appellant was incorporated in Delaware in December 1928 and was given by its charter not only power to engage in international, interstate, and intrastate express business but other most extensive ones to own personal and real property and to engage in other collateral undertakings. Its stock was to be owned by railroad corporations. It has bought the business and assumed the liabilities of the American Railway Express Co. and is an agency of railroads throughout the United States. The appellant's right to do interstate business is not questioned, but it was held by the supreme court of appeals that being a foreign corporation created since the constitution of the State went into effect in 1902, it was prohibited by that instrument from doing intrastate express business by the plain words of section 163. The appellant says that, so construed, the prohibition is a direct burden upon the interstate commerce, which is its principal business, and therefore is void. It also invokes the fourteenth amendment for some help.

The Court goes on to say:

There is not here, as there was in Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Kansas (216 U.S. 1), and Pullman Co. v. Kansas (216 U.S. 56), a deliberate attempt to use the State's powers as a means for attaining the unconstitutional result of taxing property outside the State. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Foster (247 U.S. 105), 114. Virginia is not attempting to go beyond its power by indirection or to take anything from anybody. It simply is refusing to grant a foreign corporation a permit to transact local business without taking out a charter from the jurisdiction within which that business must be done. There is no substantial evidence that the refusal would impose a burden on interstate commerce, and it is presumed to be constitutional. O'Gorman & Young, Inc., v. Hartford Fire Insurance Co., ante (p. 251). We may add that as suggested by the State court the difficulties created by the constitution of Virginia probably will not prove hard to overcome when it is found that they must be met.

The objection based on the fourteenth amendment is that the requirement of the Virginia Constitution deprives the appellant of its right to sue in the Federal courts and to remove suits to them on the ground of diversity of citizenship. This plainly is inaccurate. The appellant is not deprived of any rights. It can do all that it ever could. If it sees fit to acquire a new personality under the laws of Virginia, it cannot complain that the new person has not the same rights as itself. Of course, there can be no suggestion here that the clause in the State constitution was adopted for a sinister end. And, unless it was, the inability of the new State corporation to do all that the appellant could have done is only the legitimate incident of a legitimate act.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. President, for these reasons I have felt constrained to oppose the passage of this bill.

I listened with more than ordinary interest to the exposition of the constitutional questions involved in the consideration of this measure as it was made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] on yesterday, and again today. It seems to me that the bill violates the due-process clause of the Constitution; that it violates the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution; that it takes away from one group of citizens of this country, setting them apart from any other group, those rights which they have been accustomed to have, which have been recognized for all time since the question has ever arisen in the Federal courts.

I submit that to prevent the confiscation of the property of the millions of men and women of this country who have invested in those public utilities the bill should not pass.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram which I ask to have read. It bears upon the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The telegram will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

LANSING, MICH., February 6, 1934.

Hon. A. H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senator:

As chairman of the Michigan Public Utility Commission and also chairman of the Legislative Committee of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners I desire to let you know we whole-heartedly endorse the Johnson bill amending section 24, Judicial Code. I am authorized and directed by the national association representing all but one of the State commissions to urge you and all other Members of the Senate to favor this measure, because out of our experience we know that it is urgently needed for the speeding up and fair determination of important rate controversies. Our national association believes our experience and knowledge warrants our endorsement and our plea for its adoption.

K. F. CLARDY,
Chairman Michigan Public Utilities Commission and Chairman National Association Railroad and Utilities Commissioners.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if this bill should be enacted into law, the effect of it would be to take away the jurisdiction of the United States district court to issue an injunction against putting into effect any order of a State commission having charge of public-utility matters where the jurisdiction is claimed by reason of diverse citizenship. It will take away jurisdiction from the Federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship to issue an injunction restraining the enforcement of a rate or order made by a State public-utility commission. It will also take away the jurisdiction of the Federal court to issue an injunction on other grounds if the State, where the order is made by the State commission, has provided for a remedy of appeal by which any party to the suit can pass to the supreme court of the State, and from there to the Supreme Court of the United States.

All this talk about taking away the rights of individuals disappears. There is no one, not even a widow or orphan, who will be deprived of her or its day in court if this bill passes. The savings banks of the country which have invested their property in public-utility bonds or stocks will not be deprived of the right to go into court and eventually to reach the Supreme Court of the United States.

A great deal was said, particularly on yesterday, about denying corporations the right to go into the Federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship, so I am going to discuss that question first. Before I do it, however, I desire to give to the Senate very briefly the history of this litigation.

This bill was first introduced in the last Congress. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I happened to have the honor at that time of being the chairman of that committee. The Judiciary Committee referred the bill to a subcommittee to hold hearings. I happened to be the chairman of the subcommittee. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the present Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, was a member with me of the subcommittee and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] was the other member. We held hearings without limit, public hearings, where everybody and anybody had the right to be heard. After full hearings, the subcommittee were unanimous in their favorable recommendation of the bill to the full committee.

The full committee discussed the bill, and it was reported to the Senate by a very large majority of the committee and was on the calendar of the preceding Congress. When that Congress died, the bill not having been acted on by the Senate, it was reintroduced in the next Congress by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], again referred to the committee, and after a great deal of debate the committee reported it to the Senate, and it is here now. No snap judgment was taken of anybody. Every person interested and every corporation in the United States had a perfect right to be heard, and they were heard without any limitation.

I say that much in order that the Senate may understand that this bill from its inception has never been acted on with any idea of curtailing anybody's rights, or shutting off anybody or any corporation from his or its day in court.

Now let me take up the question of diverse citizenship as it applies to this bill.

At the present time most of the public utilities, in one way or another subsidiary to some corporation, sometimes in the fourth, fifth, or sixth degree, are organized in some State where they do not do business, where they have no property, where none of their officials live. That seems clear. There is but one object; it is in order to let them come into the Federal courts instead of the State courts in case they are sued or in case they sue anybody else. In other words, the corporation is always a resident of a State other than the State in which it does business. That is a suspicious circumstance to begin with. That on the face of it does not look right.

Let me tell the Senate of an instance that happened to come under my observation. It was in connection with the Nebraska Power Co. That company supplies Omaha and several surrounding cities in Nebraska with electric lights. It is incorporated in the State of Maine. It has no property in the State of Maine. It does not do any business in the State of Maine. The people who own the company and own its stock are not citizens of the State of Maine. Why is the company incorporated in the State of Maine? To give it an advantage under our law. When it is sued in the courts of Nebraska it can stay in the State courts, go clear through to the Supreme Court of the State of Nebraska, and if it is finally defeated in the Supreme Court of the State of Nebraska, before the edict or the order of the supreme court can be sent down to the lower court, because that court can take it up and render a judgment according to the decision of the supreme court, the company can dismiss the suit, absolutely dismiss it, and no final judgment has been rendered.

The next day or the same day the company can commence another suit in the Federal court, get an injunction on the allegation that the corporation is a citizen of the State of Maine, and consequently under the laws of Congress has a right to go into the Federal court. Having lost out all the way along through State courts, being dissatisfied, it commences at the very bottom of the ladder in the Federal district court, and from there it travels the weary way to the Supreme Court of the United States.

What kind of a proceeding is that? What justice is there in that? No citizen of the State is entitled to do that. The citizen of the State has to commence his action and maintain his rights in the courts of his State. But here is a concern doing business of, perhaps, the same nature as that of the citizen of the State—in the same State but incorporated in the State of Maine—and it has the choice of going into either the State court or the Federal court under our law.

If the pending bill is passed, that cannot be done. Will it be an injustice to such concerns?

If the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and I were engaged in the grocery business in the State of Arizona, with our businesses side by side on the same street, and I was incorporated under my name in the State of Maine and doing business in Arizona, and he was not incorporated in the State of Maine, I would have the choice when I commenced a suit of going into the State courts of Arizona or the Federal courts, and if anybody sued me in the State court, I could take the action out of the State court and go with it into the Federal court.

Is that justice? Is that fair? Is any right taken away from me in that case if the law says, "You cannot have such choice of courts, because you are engaged in business in Arizona. You selected your place. Your property is there. You live there. You are doing business there. Your customers are there. You have nothing up in Maine. You ought to be satisfied with the courts of Arizona, the same as your competitor across the street or next door who cannot go out of those courts. You did not have to go into business in Arizona. You could have gone to Maine if you liked Maine better than Arizona, where you are incorporated, and have done business there. You did not choose to do it. The reason you did not choose to do it is because under the laws of the United States you have a special privilege if you incorporate yourself in some State other than that in which you do business."

Is it an injustice to compel the Nebraska Power Co. to resort, if it has any difficulty, to the courts of Nebraska? They do not have to be in Nebraska. They voluntarily located there and they are doing business under a Nebraska law. Yet a Federal court is their haven of refuge—I will not say it is so considered because they get more favorable consideration there—I will say it is because when they have the Federal courts to go to they have the opportunity to go into either one of two courts to try one for a while, and if they do not like it, to stop there and commence in the other court, an advantage that the citizen of the State does not possess.

So when Senators talk about taking away a right from the sacred utility companies, that are afraid to be incorporated in the State where they do business, where they live, where they own their property, and that incorporate in some other State, I cannot agree. My contention is that if the pending bill is passed, we will merely take away a privilege which they now have.

I am assuming for the sake of my argument that there is justice both in the Federal courts and in the State courts; I am not condemning either one of them; but I am saying that a delay of justice is often a denial of justice. An expense that is unnecessary is occasioned by the present law; an expense by reason of which an ordinary man and many municipalities will be worn out before they get to the end of the litigation.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] yesterday referred to the Montana case, that is contained in the majority report, as an exceptional case. Mr. President, it is a typical case. It is not an exception. I can bring cases by the hundreds, so can anyone else, to show that it is the average case. It is the Jarndyce against Jarndyce, of former days, which has crept into our civilization, by reason of which justice is denied because of delay and expense. Let us see about that case.

When the majority report was written, I think about a year ago, the Montana case had not yet been disposed of. We had carried it through several years, and it was still undisposed of. I do not know whether it has been finished since or not. Perhaps it is still pending. At the time the report was written it had been 6 years since the beginning of the suit. It had been twice to the Supreme Court of the United States. It had been to the Supreme Court of Montana. It was reheard by the court of Montana, heard by the Federal district court, and the Montana district court. In that case the people were successful. Justice came.

But justice will not do any good if everybody is dead before it arrives. That is what happened in the Montana case there. There had been 6 years of delay. How much does the Senate suppose it cost the people? I do not know. But the State of Montana had a provision of law by which the State commission investigated, as most State boards do, the cost of public utilities, took evidence, went out in the field and examined conditions, and finally fixed a rate, and the last I heard of that case was when the Supreme Court of the United States sent it back to the district court and told them to try it over. They held that the amount fixed originally by the board was right, and I said at that time on the floor of the Senate, and I repeat it now, that it had been so long since the beginning of the case that I anticipated the first thing which would happen when it got back would be that the publicity utility would say, "So many years have passed since we commenced the action that the conditions existing then do not apply now, and we ought to have a new trial."

Six years, and still the litigation is not ended.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I do not wish to appear cynical, but I am sure the able Senator from Nebraska understands that the sort of business he has been discussing is simply now an integral part by a practice of the so-called "systems of State regulation" that have been impressed on the people of this country. That this delay which is as old, as the Senator said, as humanity——

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BONE. And that Hamlet referred to in his protest, is now simply a part of a technique of power companies. If they cannot whip the public and skin them out of their lives in high rates they go into the courts of the land, utilizing both the State and the Federal courts, and wear out the public in litigation. I am sure the Senator recognizes that legislatures have made it very difficult to get appropriations through to enable State regulatory boards to fight such cases in the courts.

In my own State of Washington it is almost impossible, with the power company control over the State legislature there, to get an appropriation which will permit the public-service commission of that State to make a definite investigation of power rates. We have one or two big power companies there who profess all the time to be regulated by the public—a statement wholly false. The companies claim that their rates are regulated, and yet there has never been a regulatory order enacted in that State, and the legislature will not even appropriate the money to make an investigation thereof.

With that condition being superimposed on the racket used and employed in preventing the disposition of cases in the courts, of course, the public remains helpless, and we have such things as the Insull abortion which occurred in this country not long ago. I have heard some of the discussion in the Senate, but I have not seen the shedding of tears here for the widows and orphans of those who lost $2,000,000,000 by the manipulations of Sam Insull and the gentlemen who like Mr. Insull have been guiding the power industries of the country in paths of glory by their transcendent genius; I have never seen any shedding of tears for those people. I should like to hear, by way of change, from some of the gentlemen who so ardently defend the power companies concerning the practices of men like Sam Insull. I will have something to say about that later in the course of the debate, if it shall continue, but I am sure the Senator from Nebraska agrees with me that they not only make it impossible to have a real investigation of the power companies, but saddled on to it is this practice which the Senator is discussing.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. He reminds me of one thing I had forgotten. Never let us forget for one moment that all these expenses are paid for by the public. The public pays the public-utility board, their salaries and the salaries of their clerks at an enormous expense. All that, when the case goes into a Federal court is thrown aside, and a Federal judge appoints a master to appraise the property. The master may be a good man, but he appraises it. He hires experts galore to do it; he fixes their salaries; he reports to the judge and the public pays every cent of that expense. It is paid in rates; in the other case the expense is paid in taxes; but it all comes out of the pockets of the public, just the same. The public utility does not pay taxes; it is merely a tax collector; that is all; and the only difference between that tax collector and the county or the State treasurer who collects the public taxes is that the citizen pays the public utility for the collection of the tax which it denominates its own and pays a fabulous price for the collection. So there are two collectors; one the treasurer of the county who is paid a nominal salary, a small commission; but the public utility hires lawyers of the most expensive kind; secures experts who are educated with one idea only; it gets them by the hundred, and scatters them all over the United States. There is scarcely a village under the dominion of the United States flag where practically all the attorneys are employed in one way or another by the public-utility corporations, not as lawyers—because they do not try lawsuits and the corporations have good lawyers to try their lawsuits—but they have been admitted to the bar; they have a political influence, and that is what the corporations buy. They occasionally send them to the Congress, even to the United States Senate.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator would not suggest that a man would be a Senator and an attorney for a power company at the same time, and attempt to speak for the power company?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

In the Montana case the people of Montana paid the cost of both sides of that litigation. One part of it, the smaller part, they paid in taxes to the State treasurer; the other part, the much larger part, they paid in increased rates, and some the revenue thus obtained was used by the power companies with which to pay their taxes.

It was stated today by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] in arguing this case, that when a public utility seeks an injunction or an order under the Federal law against the enforcement of a rate, it is necessary that three Federal judges sit. That is true. The law providing that requirement was passed with the idea that it was going to give relief. As a matter of fact, I think it has been harmful rather than beneficial. Let us take as evidence the Montana case, which, it is said, is exceptional. The counsel for the Public Service Commission of Montana, in his letter, which is in the report submitted with the bill, says that after this restraining order had been issued he undertook to have the case tried by three judges as the law provided. He called upon the senior judge, under the Federal statute, to hold court consisting of three judges. I do not know what happened except what he says:

> Counsel was informed by the senior district judge that because, in his opinion, the commission had prevented the case from being heard upon final hearing on the same day and upon the same record as the application for interlocutory injunction was heard (incidentally, an opinion not at all borne out by the transcript of the proceeding), it would be a "cold" day before the senior district judge would reconvene the special court to try this action.

Delay! That is what the corporation wanted. By delay in the hearing the injunction could be kept in force.

> It will be a cold day before I will call court under the law.

So this weapon given by Congress and cited by the Senator from Rhode Island as a benefit for municipalities where rates are in controversy, that very law, has been used in the case before us to delay action. I read further from this letter:

> When it was suggested to the senior district judge that the right to trial upon its merits was one accorded by the statute, the rejoinder was made that "probably"— > the case would be heard in "2 or 3 years."

That word "probably" is in quotation marks—

Delay! That is the object of having the right to go into the Federal courts and State courts at the same time or one after the other. Delay; wear your opponent out; spend your money; compel him to spend money until he has not any left. The utility companies can spend more money than anybody else, because, if they run short of money, all they have to do is to raise their rates and make the people pay a little more. It is not difficult. The people foot the bill; the people give them the right, under the laws of Congress, to go into the State courts or the Federal courts, and the people then pay the expenses—all of them, every cent of them. The utility corporation has no means of income except what the people pay for rates. If it is a gas company the people pay gas rates; if it is a water company they pay water rates; if it is an electric company they pay rates for light or power. So, unless the municipality or the individual has an abundance of money, there is not any hope for the municipality or an individual in ever going into court. The individual is going to be worn out sooner or later somewhere along the line; he is going to die of old age; and the corporation that is fighting him will still be young and go on and wear out his children and his children's children with litigation; and when it is over, the rate they have established is 10 years old. The utility corporation has been getting those rates all the time on account of the injunction and has made enough profit, by exorbitant rates in the meantime, so that it is profitable for it to litigate.

The Montana case, to recur to that, disclosed a remarkable condition. The Senator from Vermont said it was exceptional. The report shows up a good many other cases and I ask unanimous consent at this point to print as part of my remarks, at their conclusion, the majority report submitted on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Without objection, permission is granted.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. NORRIS. There will be found in that report, Mr. President, a great many instances—and I can give others—in connection with diverse citizenship. One of the cases referred to in the report came up from Kentucky. At Louisville, Ky., there was a taxicab company——

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to correct the Senator. It was not Louisville, Ky., it was Bowling Green, Ky. I do not want to take the honor away from my home.

Mr. NORRIS. I stand corrected; it was at Bowling Green, Ky.; at least, it was in Kentucky. As I understand—and if I get this wrong I wish the Senator would correct me—the taxicab company—I have forgotten its name—wanted the privilege of parking its taxicabs at the depot of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. The railroad had given the exclusive right to park taxicabs on their property to another taxicab company, the competitor of the company which wanted to use the space as a taxicab stand. It was well known what the public-utility commission would have done and what the Supreme Court of Kentucky would have done. They would have compelled the railroad company to give to the other taxicab company the right to park their cars at the depot; in other words, they would have held that the railroad company did not have the power to issue an exclusive contract to one taxicab company.

The taxicab company that held the right to the parking privilege was chartered under the laws of the State of Kentucky; it was incorporated under the laws of Kentucky; its property was in Kentucky; those who owned it lived in Kentucky; it had no business outside of Kentucky; but it wanted to be the resident of another State in order that it might go into the Federal court. So the company proceeded to incorporate itself in the State of Tennessee and to dissolve the corporation under the laws of the State of Kentucky.

The new corporation under the laws of Tennessee had the same name, the same property, the same officials; it was owned by the same men and was doing the same kind of business at the same place; but now it was a nonresident of the State of Kentucky under the law. So it went into the Federal court and it succeeded in getting what it wanted by going from the Federal district court on up through the Court of Appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court held differently from what the Kentucky Supreme Court would have held. It held that this exclusive right was legal and confirmed it and held it valid. That is what the taxicab company wanted, namely, to shut its competitor out. The Kentucky Supreme Court would not have done that.

We are talking now, Mr. President, about justice; we are talking about what is right. It has been stated here that this bill will take away the sacred rights of citizens of the United States. Who was right there—the Kentucky court or the Supreme Court of the United States? Here was a corporation in Kentucky, whose property was in Kentucky, whose office was in Kentucky, whose owners were in Kentucky, whose managers were in Kentucky; and yet the corporation was incorporated in Tennessee and, under the law, it was a nonresident of Kentucky, even though everybody who owned it lived in Kentucky. The courts of Kentucky would hold that a railroad company had to permit rival companies to have a reasonable opportunity to park their cars at their depot and compete for a part of the traffic. The Supreme Court held that the railroad company had the right to give an exclusive privilege and shut out everybody else. I will compare the Kentucky view with the Supreme Court view before any honest-minded man and not be afraid of the result of his decision.

Talk about justice! Those who are talking about getting justice for the poor widows and orphans under this bill ought to go somewhere else than the United States Senate to shed their crocodile tears. Justice! How long will the people of the United States submit to the kind of justice they are getting now and which this bill seeks to remedy? How long are we going to proceed before we realize what is going on over the country, that there is dissatisfaction with the delay in Federal courts, that there is unnecessary expense in the Federal courts? How long are we going to live before we realize the iniquity of these injunctions prohibiting a State from enforcing orders that apply to property within the State? How long are we going to hide our heads in the sand and not know what is actually taking place?

This is one of the elements that enter into the cost of living in every home in the land. In my judgment the time is not far distant when in one way or another the people are going to stop this duplication of courts, are going to prevent a process by which a corporation may drag some matter out in long litigation, and wear out its opponent with expense and delay. Honest people will not submit much longer to this injustice. They are crying alound; and if we do not hear the cry, it will be the worse for us when it gets so loud that it can no longer be denied.

It is one of the well-known facts from the Atlantic to the Pacific that justice in the United States very often costs more than it is worth and that we cannot get it even at the end of a long lawsuit unless there is some way to bridge over from life into eternity. I have just cited another case. I suppose it would be said to be "exceptional." I say it is difficult. There are not very many power companies in the United States doing business in the State where they are incorporated. They are all taking advantage of the law of diverse citizenship in order that they may wear out their opponents with expense and delay.

Is there anything wrong about setting up a State institution of experts, as most of the States have, to pass on rates that shall be made effective in the State for public utilities? Is not their judgment just as good as the judgment of a commission of experts selected by a Federal judge? Is it unfair to say, "You can have one source of trial as everybody else, but not two"? Is it unfair to say "We cannot afford two; we cannot pay the expense; we cannot await the outcome"?

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] called attention yesterday to an amendment which he offered in the Judiciary Committee and which he read here on the floor of the Senate. It was practically an amendment which would provide for a supersedeas bond. The effect of it, if agreed to, would be to keep the old rate in force until the case is finally disposed of. It would be a further reason for a public-utility corporation to delay by every means possible the final judgment in their cases, because during that time of delay the injunction would operate and the old rates would have to apply, if they were lowered by the public-utility commission; so that instead of a year of delay, if it were possible they would have 2 or 3 or 4 years and in some cases 5 or 6 years. "Exceptional", said the Senator from Vermont.

Let me invite attention to another exceptional case from the State of New York. Litigation has been pending there with the telephone company for the fixing of rates. It is a difficult thing, a technical thing. It is a matter that requires the services of experts, the services of men who have studied it for years. Federal district judges are not experts. Commissions are more apt to be, but they are not always experts. They select men who are experts. The work is done, no matter where the appraisement takes place, mainly by experts. I am not going to read all of it because it is quite long, but I want to read from Felix Frankfurter's book entitled "The Public and its Government." He traces this litigation from the beginning, giving dates, giving it in chronological order all the way through, and sums it up as follows, the question involved of course being the fixing of definite rates:

> There the matter rests, but only for the immediate present. Further appeal to the courts in the future is left open by the company's announcement that "no further application to the court is contemplated at this time." Thus, one need be no pessimist to anticipate that the rate determination arrived at by the commission is likely to give rise to another litigation, while the old one is now on its way to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, listen to his story of the expense involved:

> Down to the special master's report of last year, the record of this controversy contained 62,864 pages.

That is just one lawsuit! No wonder that lawyers do not want to have a simplified way of trying lawsuits. Think of it—62,864 pages of testimony! That one case is a means of income for a lifetime for a lawyer. What is going to be the fee in that case? They have taken testimony and have 62,864 pages. What about the exhibits?

> The number of exhibits filed is 4,323.

How long does it take to read them? How many times have they been studied and analyzed and fought over by the lawyers? More than 62,000 pages of testimony, more than 4,000 exhibits. What are the stenographers' fees? How many witnesses have been examined? How many experts have made a study which, outside of their testimony, has cost thousands and thousands of dollars? The case is not ended yet. Do not forget that. It is still going on, like Tennyson's brook—

> Making a shelf of books about 10 times as long as President Eliot's famous library.

That library has been advertised for a number of years. I have it myself, incidentally. In the ordinary life of a busy man like one of us it is pretty nearly the task of a lifetime to read it through. The evidence in this one case is 10 times as extensive as Dr. Eliot's 5-foot shelf library, being more than 63,000 pages of testimony and more than 4,000 exhibits, comprising a library 10 times as long as President Eliot's famous library of classics. What does anyone suppose that cost the taxpayers? Mark you, the taxpayers have paid every cent of it. They have paid the high-priced lawyers in this case and they have no voice in their selection. They paid the high-priced experts, whether they had a voice in selecting them or not. They could not get away from it. The company charged it all to expense and included in the rates every penny of the expense.

Now let us see what the author of this book said about the expense:

> The company alone has spent $5,000,000 in this fight.

One more suit not yet finished and $5,000,000 spent by one of the parties! Is there any wonder that there is a feeling among the common people of the United States that our Government is too expensive? Is there any wonder that there is a prejudice against the public-utility corporations? The people know they pay the bill. They know, too, that when a lawsuit is started, it is never ended until the public-utility officials want it ended.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. The very thing the Senator is now saying makes it obvious to every thoughtful person that it is a practical impossibility for the average American community to get justice in the courts in one of these rate cases because of the frightful cost. The average community would not undertake it, knowing the expense involved.

Mr. NORRIS. Absolutely. Not only that, but the ordinary individual in a community or in a municipality, if he is going to undertake to get some reform or attempt to get a lower rate, wants it effective before he dies. He has not any assurance that he is going to live to be as old as Methuselah; and he knows—he can easily find out if he will look into some of these cases—that there is not a hope on earth of getting a remedy during his lifetime.

Is it any wonder that the people are tired of this burden? Is it any wonder that they are overburdened by these public utilities, with the terrible rates that are imposed upon them? The wonder is that they have not risen in their might and destroyed these outfits that are living off the fat of the land, paid for by the sacrifices of those who toil and those who are poor.

Let me read on some more of this:

The company alone has spent $5,000,000 in the fight—

Says the author—

but the more significant cost is the bitter feeling which the controversy has engendered between the telephone company and the public.

Did you ever think of that? There is something beyond mere money. When a people realize that they have been abused, that they have been robbed, that they have been treated in a way that is unmercifully cruel, a feeling arises between them and the public-utility corporation that is more than can be measured by money. I should like to see that feeling disappear. I should like to lessen the possibility of the existence of such a feeling. I should like to simplify this legal procedure without doing any injustice to anybody.

This bill to a degree will do it. This bill proposes that when you come to my State voluntarily and invest your money, and go on with your business, whatever it may be, you shall, as a good citizen, subject yourself to the laws of the State and the courts of the State and the bureaus and boards of the State. You did not have to go into a State and set up a public-utility function; but if you did, honesty requires that you should be satisfied, as other people of that State have to be satisfied, with the laws, the rules, and regulations of the courts that are provided for everybody alike.

This bill does not deprive a single corporation of a right to reach the Supreme Court of the United States if a Federal question is involved. It does not deprive it of the right to try it even if a Federal question is not involved. It simply says, "You cannot have two remedies at once." It simply says, "You cannot wear us out."

As this writer says there is a feeling between public utilities and the public that is more significant than the money they pay.

It may be said that this case is extraordinary. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] called it an unusual case; but the trouble is there are more unusual cases than can possibly be enumerated in this discussion. Everything is unusual. And who gets the benefit? Is it a fair benefit? The public-utility corporation gets the benefit; and, I submit that it is unfair. It is cruel. It ought not to be given to them by law. If they were honest and wanted nothing but justice, they would not be here fighting this bill.

The author says, going back to this New York case:

After 10 years of regulation New York and its telephone company are still in the throes of conflict over what the public may fairly be asked to pay for its telephone service and what the company is fairly entitled to earn for rendering it.

Ten years! Not through yet! One side has spent $5,000,000. If they had to pay it, it would not be so bad; but the public of New York has paid every cent of it; and every dime that was paid for the entertainment of their experts and their attorneys in this case has been paid by the farmer, the small-business man, the laboring man, who has a telephone in his house. They are paying the bill.

Ten years! Not through yet! Ten years of litigation! Suppose the other side spent the same amount of money. That would mean $10,000,000 spent, paid for by God's poor, and the end not in sight. Ten years more may not see the end.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] says, "The first hundred years are the hardest." That may be true; but before the hundred years have passed away, the people who entered this lawsuit as babes will have died of old age, and a new generation of men and women will have come up to bow their shoulders to this unjust burden.

One of the Senators—I think it was the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT]—today, in arguing this matter, said that this bill denied to citizens of the United States, all the citizens of the United States, a fair deal before the courts.

What do they have now? They have an unfair advantage. They are entitled to go into one of two courts, or to go into both of them. They are entitled to go through one until they find that the decision is going against them, and, if they find that, to stop, dismiss the suit, and commence in the other court. That is unfair. That right is taken away from them by this bill. It does not deny anything that is fair or just. I deny that there is anything in the bill that denies to any honest citizen, or even a dishonest citizen, the right to be heard in court; the right, if a Federal question is involved in his case, to reach the Supreme Court of the United States.

Two or three years ago I made a study of the number of cases based on diverse citizenship in the Federal courts. After writing to the clerk of every district court in the United States, and getting a report from most of them of an entire year in their particular jurisdictions, I found that practically one third of the civil cases tried in the Federal district courts were tried because the plaintiff or the defendant, the corporation, had claimed diverse citizenship. In a great many, I think the majority of the cases over electric-light injunctions, the Federal district court got jurisdiction by virtue of the company's incorporating in one State and doing business in another.

Something has been said about the widow and the orphan, and about the poor savings bank. How are they hurt in this bill? Why drag in the poor widow and the orphan?

More tears have been shed by great, big, wicked corporations about the poor widow and the orphan than about anything else I know of. They say, "Do not take away the investment of the widow and the orphan who own some of the stock!" But they did not shed any tears when Insull took it away. They did not shed any tears when Insull and his brother escaped from the clutches of the United States courts into foreign courts. How many pennies belonging to the widows and the orphans did Insull take over to Greece? These corporations have not told us. They have not shed a single tear for those widows and orphans. But they say, "Here, you will injure the investment, you will destroy the property of the widows and the orphans and the savings banks!"

I do not know how. I do not know how they come in here. They are not denied the right to enter any court. Are you afraid to let them come into a State court, where the people of the State have to go whether they like it or not? Do you get an advantage by going to the Federal court? Everybody knows it costs much more money to go into the Federal court, and the litigation lasts a good deal longer. That, in the main, is why they want the privilege. That is why they want the right to wear out the widow and the orphan who have telephones, who have electric lights, who cook by gas. Those are the widows and orphans that I am talking about. Those are the widows and orphans that are hurt.

Nobody knows just how many widows and orphans own the stock and bonds of public-utility companies, or what their names are, or where they live; but if there is 1 widow and 1 orphan for every tear that the public-utility corporations have shed in their behalf, the census of the world's population must be taken over again, because we have not nearly reached the limit. According to their cry, there are more widows and orphans than there are people of all other classes; and it is in their behalf that the public-utility corporations want the right to wear out the other widows and orphans by litigating them to death!

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BONE. I am sorry to interrupt a discussion so interesting and entertaining as this; but the Senator's reference to the widows and orphans who are being "skinned" by power companies reminds me of a little incident that happened in the West which probably may serve to illustrate the Senator's point. It has to do with some of the widows and orphans who are using electric ranges and accessories, who are paying the price for all this funny business.

A power company in that part of the country that frequently resorts to the mechanism of the Federal courts to protect its peculiar manner of doing business built a little power plant on a river in that region, called the "White Salmon River." It filed on the water power of the river. That cost only a tiny filing fee; and the company built a plant on the river that cost $1,230,000. That is a rather interesting figure—$1,230,000 for a 15,000-horsepower plant. This power company that is now owned in the East, a wing of the Electric Bond & Share Corporation, got the water for nothing. Against this bare water right that cost nothing, the company issued $10,424,000 in common stock, which is probably "hocked" with some insurance company now.

It would have been bad enough if the company had merely issued the stock; but I want to tell the Senator from Nebraska that that outfit, which denied repeatedly through the press that it was paying interest or dividends on its stock, for years and years out there was paying not less than 12 percent a year on that $10,424,000 of "phony" stock which was wind and water and hokum. At 12 percent a year, that would amount to $1,250,000 in dividends on the stock; and that $1,250,000 annual dividend, stripped out of the hides and the pocketbooks of the people of my State and the neighboring State of Oregon, was more than the total cost of the hydroelectric plant itself!

If anyone in this body can find any racket like that which can be beaten by anything that Al Capone or any other racketeer in this country ever did, I should like to have such Senator rise and tell me about it now. Ten and one half million dollars of "phony" stock issued against a water right, and the interest gouged out of the people of my State and the neighboring State of Oregon! That was crooked, plastered all over by fraud, but sanctified by this thing we call State regulation and protected by the courts. They did try to protect that sort of thing, and the company denied that it existed, until in a State regulatory hearing it was brought out.

That sort of thing, Mr. President, is what the public utilities of this country have tried to defend and protect; and I share the able Senator's view that the utilities, by their activity, by putting over such monstrous things as that, by committing great crimes against the people of the States, are building against themselves a Frankenstein monster which some day will be their destroyer.

There is no apology made on the part of utilities for the losses to the homes and to the widows and the orphans in that part of the country who pay every year in excess charges more than the cost of the power plant, a fact which I have asserted on hundreds of platforms in my State. No one will try to deny that statement, because it is true; and because it is true, I will name the public utility in question—the Northwestern Electric Co., in my State. Not long ago the public-utilities commission in that State struck out the phantom earnings, but they struck out only the part allocated to the State of Oregon.

I am sorry to take so much of the Senator's time, but this is just one of hundreds and hundreds of cases where power racketeers have done that sort of thing, have literally jammed it down the throats of the people, and tried to sustain it in the courts; and when the little communities have tried to protest against it, as in this case and in hundreds of cases I have followed through the courts, there resulted the tragedy of the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars—perhaps, as in the case the Senator mentions of the telephone utility, I believe, of millions of dollars—to meet and resist that sort of thing.

Why should the people of my State remain helpless and have to go into the Federal courts and try such cases through the Federal courts, and be the victims of fakery jammed down their throats by people who claim to be respectable? I desire to tell the Senator from Nebraska that the men who did this occupied places of respectability, but I also wish to say that Al Capone was a gentleman compared to them.

Mr. NORRIS. There is one of them living over in Greece now, enjoying the results of his labors, and 1 or 2 other such "respectable" men now living in Canada.

Mr. BONE. There was no due process of law. One did not hear any of that clatter when they walked into the homes of southern Washington and took out in earnings every year more than the cost of the whole plant. There was no equal protection of the laws there for the little orphan and widow in southern Washington, nor were any of the fantastical theories we have heard in connection with the utilities raised there to protect their homes. This company was paid under the rates there in existence, as I said, in the course of a year, more than the cost of the whole plant; and this money went to enrich a little handful of men as a return on ten and one half million dollars of common stock which had been issued on a water power that cost $1,230,000. It represented what we lawyers call "the return on the venture." That was the gravy, the velvet, that went to the insider whose ability and genius was such that it enabled him to go and file on the water right down there, and translate that filing into a plant of real value. That gave him the control of the company; and he could go out and peddle a lot of his preferential, pluperfect, superheterodyne A and B stock out there to the people, and rake in the money and collect interest—12 percent a year, at least—which was more than the whole power plant cost!

That is a sample of the sort of thing in which the power companies are protected. I know of cases where there have been at least 100 percent write-ups by the power companies in that section of the country; and, for one, I desire to see removed the power whereby these "honorable" people can get through with their hokum and fakery.

I submit to those gentleman that they had better not continue such practices and press this kind of crown of thorns down on the people of America too long, because patience may cease to be a virtue, and the people may do what they do in my part of the country—adopt public ownership. That is the answer. If they want to hide behind the legal barriers, there is a way to reach them. The most effective way is public ownership. I hope the Senator from Nebraska agrees with me concerning that.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with it.

Mr. BONE. That is the way to reach it.

Mr. NORRIS. I might say that the case which the Senator from Washington mentioned would be, I presume, called "unusual" by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. President, when I was interrupted, I was about to call attention to what seems to me to be an unusual and unfair, almost criminal, disrespect being paid to State courts and State boards by those who want the double opportunity of going into Federal courts or State courts at their choice, in places where the people of the communities in which they do business, their own customers, do not have the same privilege. I find in the testimony that was taken at the hearings what I have found in the thousands of letters which have reached me from all over the United States, from attorneys who were opposing this kind of legislation, that it is claimed that they cannot get justice in the State courts. I have, for instance, one letter from an attorney from which I am going to quote now. He says:

> We do not want to try our cases before a judge who has to depend upon the will of the people to hold his position.

That is very frank. That fellow is honest. He is telling his real objection.

> We have no confidence in State courts.

Then, for God's sake why do they not keep out of the States where those courts exist? There is no compulsion to invest their money in the utility business in any State or in any other business. If they do not want to abide by the law of the State where they are going to do business, then let them stay out.

I will say, Mr. President—and I think it cannot be successfully contradicted—that as far as justice is concerned, there is nothing but poppycock in the claim that they cannot get justice. That is not their reason. They want to wear their opponents out with their litigation. They want to wear their opponents out with expense.

Let us see what another man writes:

> We want to try our cases before judges who hold their positions for life, and who, therefore, will not be inclined to be swayed in any degree by the fact that he must go back to the people for reelection.

If we do not like a democracy, if we do not like to let the people of this country rule the country, then let it be ruled by injunction. That is what is being attempted. Let the Federal judges rule this country by injunction. They might do a good job. I have not anything to say against the Federal judges. They are like the State judges; some of them are human, and some of them are inhuman. But any man who has a life position is, in my opinion, getting away from the people, where the human touch does not affect him, where mercy is not considered, where poverty and suffering have no appeal. I want a condition where the judges, and the Senators, and the President, all officials, shall come from the people of the United States. We profess in every platform we adopt, in every political party, that we believe in democracy. Let us practice what we preach.

Another one writes:

State judges are too close to the people who elect them.

Get somebody away from the people to make the laws and to enforce the laws.

Federal judges, who hold their positions for life and who are not indebted to the voter for their positions, are more satisfactory.

Let us see. Suppose someone goes into my State and kills one of our citizens. There is no law by which that murder case can be taken into the Federal courts. It is nothing but human life involved; that is all. You may come from Maine, you may come from Rhode Island or Massachusetts, into Nebraska, or Kansas, and murder a man, and you have to go before the courts of Nebraska or Kansas and be tried. But suppose there is some property involved, and you come from Maine or Rhode Island; the law says you have your choice. You do not have to submit to the courts of the States. You can go into Federal courts if you want to. Money is at stake; therefore, we are going to guard and protect you to the utmost, give you the advantage of the citizens of the State. If human life is at stake—oh, that is nothing. Go there and be tried. You cannot help yourself.

I want to put property on the same basis with human life. It is above it now. Property is far above human life. Let us take some of the air out of property and let it down on a basis that is sacred because it is in the same court where men are tried for murder, where people must go for redress if the pending bill passes. There is not any intention to do a wrong to anyone. It will not do a wrong to anyone. It ought to pass.

While the bill was pending, I received a copy of a circular letter sent by a very large interstate corporation to its attorneys in different places. One of those attorneys sent one of the letters to me. It winds up this way:

I am therefore writing to you and some other influential members of the bar in an effort to enlist your assistance in requesting our Senators to oppose the bill, and I should be glad to learn your views thereon.

He knows that lawyers are at times employed, not because they have been admitted to the bar, not because they know how to try lawsuits, but they are employed because of their influence.

Listen to this honest confession from another attorney:

The present law gives us the privilege of making a choice between two courts. We have had that privilege since the beginning of our Government, and there is no reason now why it should be taken away.

That is the whole thing in a nutshell. There are those who say: "We have been a privileged class since the beginning of the Government. We do not want equality. We want to be above the common man. We want to be away above the common people. We do not believe in democracy. We believe in a monarchy, with officials holding positions for life. We have had the privilege ever since the beginning of government of going into 2 courts instead of 1. We know it is a privilege which other people and other citizens do not have. We want that privilege continued now." That, Mr. President, is one of the things that is going to drive our civilization and our Government to destruction. It is only one, maybe a little one, but it has its effect.

I am pleading now that this special privilege be taken away from these corporations.

"I am writing you", says this letter, "and other influential members of the bar to solicit your assistance in requesting the Senators from your State to oppose this bill." That is why they are employed. They have an excuse to employ an attorney. I presume that if they could fix up any way by which they could have farmers used somewhere in the operation as farmers, they would employ farmers; but they would always get men with political influence. The farmers would not necessarily have to know how to try a lawsuit or to know the difference between a statute book and a wheelbarrow, just so they had political influence.

Another one writing a letter, speaking of the choice of two courts, uses this language:

This, to my mind, is a very important privilege—

He is right about that.

which is now enjoyed by companies like our own, and it seems to me most unfair to have any law passed which will take it away.

In other words, they say, "For 100 years we have enjoyed a privilege that the citizens of the State could not enjoy; we have enjoyed the privilege of a choice that goes to no one except those like us, and we think it unfair to take it away. We do not want justice. We are afraid of justice." That is the cry to which it at last simmers down. These letters only illustrate the truth of the assertion that the real reason why many of the interested parties want to retain the present law is that they may also retain the privilege which the present law gives them. They are unwilling to try their lawsuits in the States where they do their business and under whose laws they are making their money.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate much longer than I expected to do. I want to say in conclusion that in my opinion, having studied this question for years, I believe there is no injustice anywhere in the pending measure. There is injustice now existing which it will remedy. The bill will simply give justice to all alike. No honest man ought to want more. No fair corporation will demand more. That much we ought to give them as lawgivers, but not more. Equal rights to all alike with special privileges to none.

EXHIBIT A

JURISDICTION OF THE DISTRICT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES OVER SUITS RELATING TO ORDERS OF STATE ADMINISTRATIVE BOARDS

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 752):

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over controversies relating to orders of State administrative boards, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to make a favorable report thereon and to recommend the passage of the bill.

This bill is practically the same as S. 3243, introduced in the Seventy-second Congress, first session. That bill, in the Seventy-second Congress, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the Committee on the Judiciary referred the same to a subcommittee. The subcommittee held unlimited hearings on the bill; both those who favored and those who opposed it were given opportunity without limit to express their views. Among those who opposed the bill was the American Bar Association. This association was represented at the hearing and made an extended argument in opposition to the bill. At the conclusion of the hearings the subcommittee unanimously made a favorable report to the full committee. The matter was then taken up in the full committee, and, on the 18th day of May 1932, the Committee on the Judiciary ordered the bill favorably reported to the Senate. On account of the crowded condition of the Senate Calendar, the bill was never reached for Senate consideration and died on the calendar at the expiration of that Congress.

In the Seventy-third Congress, on the 23d day of March 1933, the bill was again introduced in practically the same form. The Committee on the Judiciary thereupon again referred the bill to a subcommittee. The subcommittee, after due consideration, reported the bill back to the full committee with a favorable recommendation. Afterward, before the full committee had acted upon this report of its subcommittee, the American Bar Association requested of the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that it again be given an oppertunity to be heard in opposition to the bill, and, upon consideration of this request, the full committee again, for the third time, referred the bill back to the subcommittee with instructions to hold further hearings. In compliance with the orders of the full committee, the subcommittee granted further hearings, and the American Bar Association, together with others, appeared in opposition to the bill. At the conclusion of the hearings a majority of the subcommittee again reported the bill back to the full committee, recommending that the bill be favorably reported to the Senate. The full committee took up the report of the subcommittee, and after a lengthy discussion the committee (a majority of the full committee voting therefor) ordered the same to be reported again to the Senate with a favorable recommendation.

It will thus be seen that the bill has been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary in two Congresses; it has been three times referred to and considered by the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, and at two of these times hearings were had. One cannot escape the conclusion that those who are opposing the bill are resorting to tactics that can have but one effect, and that is to delay final action by the Congress. The American Bar Association was given full opportunity to express its ideas at the first hearings. Nothing new was presented at the subsequent hearing. It was simply a rehashing of the old argument made over and over again, but by waiting until the Committee on the Judiciary was about to act, and then securing a third reference of the bill to a subcommittee with directions to hold hearings, those opposed to the bill succeeded in delaying action until it is undoubtedly impossible to get action at the present session of Congress.

This bill has for its object the taking away of jurisdiction of Federal district courts to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement of any order of an administrative board or commission of a State or to enjoin, suspend, or restrain any action in compliance with such order, where the jurisdiction is based solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship, or where jurisdiction is claimed on an alleged repugnance of such order of such board to the Constitution of the United States, and where such order affects the rates chargeable by a public utility, does not interfere with interstate commerce, and has been made after reasonable notice and hearing, and where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy is provided for by the laws of the State.

In practically all the States of the Union the legislatures of the various States have sent up State commissions, giving to such commissions jurisdiction to hear and determine just and equitable rates to be charged by public-utility companies. In most cases these commissions have built up the machinery necessary to make the proper investigations to determine the fairness or unfairness of any rate or proposed rate to be applied to the people of the State by the various public-utility corporations.

Provision is made for an investigation by the experts of the commission, and the commission is authorized to hear evidence and to give the utility corporation an opportunity to be heard either for or against any contemplated change in rates or other matter over which the commission has jurisdiction.

The laws then provide for an appeal in case either party is dissatisfied with the decision made in the controversy. This appeal is taken to the courts of the State, thus giving to both sides of any controversy which may arise a full hearing and judicial determination of the controversy.

It is quite a common practice for the utility corporations to go into the Federal district court and allege that the rates fixed by the commission violate the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution and secure from that court an injunction restraining the commission from putting the proposed rate into effect.

It will be seen that these utility companies have a choice not granted to the State of going into either one of two tribunals. If they have a hearing before the State commission and the controversy is taken on appeal through the State courts to the supreme court of the State and if the final decision of the State supreme court is unsatisfactory, the utility company can carry the case to the Supreme Court of the United States. On the other hand, the utility company can ignore the action of the commission and go directly into the Federal district court and secure an injunction, and that case can be carried from the Federal district court to the Supreme Court of the United States.

If the utility company goes into the Federal court in the first instance, it is the practice of these judges to try the case de novo and to pay no attention to the investigation made by the State commission and to ignore the findings of this commission. In most cases where a valuation of the property is necessary, a complete examination of the question by experts is resorted to, thus greatly increasing the expense, delaying the settlement of the question, and entirely ignoring the work of the commission in its investigation and its findings.

Indeed, the utility company may pursue these two remedies concurrently. The Supreme Court of the United States had held that State and Federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction in such cases and a utility company can proceed in both State and Federal courts until a final judgment is rendered in one of the two proceedings. This gives the utility an opportunity, as the case progresses, to ascertain the views of the State authorities and the Federal authorities; and when it once ascertains these views, and finds it will probably be defeated in one of the proceedings, it can dismiss the case in that proceeding and rely upon the other. It seems quite plain that to give the utility this advantage is unreasonable and unfair. It is likewise exceedingly expensive and always means long delay. All the expenses in the end must be borne by the people who pay the rates to the public-utility company. It all comes out of the ultimate consumer.

If the proposed bill becomes a law, this advantage of the utility company will be taken away. It will be required, in all cases where a State has set up a public-utility commission, to proceed before that commission if it has any complaint. It can appeal from this State board to the State courts; and if it is dissatisfied with the final judgment of the supreme court of the State, it can take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. This is no injustice to the utility company. It is fair to all parties concerned. It would save time and a large amount of money.

The writer of this report, in reporting the bill in the Seventy-second Congress, then no. S. 3243, gave an illustration of an actual case then pending in the Federal courts of the State of Montana. I quote from that report, as follows:

"I desire to call attention to an actual case now pending in the Federal courts of the State of Montana. This is a case between the Great Northern Utilities Co. and the Public Service Commission of the State of Montana. On the 21st day of September 1927 the Public Service Commission of Montana, on its own motion, instituted an inquiry into the reasonableness of the rates charged by the Great Northern Utilities Co. for natural gas at Shelby, Mont. This case, it will be seen, was begun in September 1927. The utilities company appeared and a hearing was had before the commission, but that hearing was not had until in December 1928—a delay of a little more than 1 year before a hearing was had. Three days of public hearings were held in the matter, and the order of the commission after this hearing was to the effect that the commission rejected the proposed schedule of the utilities company and required it to establish a specific schedule of rates. The order provided that the rates should become effective on February 1, 1929.

"The Great Northern Utilities Co. then began proceedings in the State court of Montana to have the order of the commission declared null and void. Upon the hearing of this case the State court of Montana granted the plea of the utility. The commission then appealed to the Supreme Court of the State of Montana. The Supreme Court of Montana, on July 29, 1930, reversed the lower court and remanded the case to the lower court for judgment in accordance with the opinion of the supreme court. The utilities company applied in the Supreme Court of Montana for a rehearing and, on November 25, 1930, the petition for a rehearing was denied. In due time the matter was taken up by the lower Montana court, whereupon the company dismissed the case.

"It will be noted that after all this delay and after all this expense and after going through all the courts of Montana—the company having been defeated and no final judgment having yet been rendered—this utilities company, having ascertained that the views of the Montana court were adverse to its contention of the law, decided to proceed no further in the Montana courts.

"While this case was pending in the State courts and before its dismissal by the utilities company, the company commenced an action in the Federal district court of Montana, praying for an injunction against the enforcement of the rate of the commission on the ground that such rate was in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Incidentally it should be said here that this was the same ground urged by the utilities company in the State courts and upon which theory, as we have seen, it was unsuccessful in the State courts.

"This action in the Federal court was commenced on the 22d day of December 1930 and an interlocutory injunction was issued by the Federal court on the 19th day of August 1931. In the meantime the commission had filed in the Federal court a motion to dismiss the case in that court. When the Federal district court allowed the interlocutory injunction and denied the motion of the State commission to dismiss the case, the State commission took an appeal. This appeal was argued in the Supreme Court of the United States and, on February 29, 1932, the action of the lower court in issuing the interlocutory injunction was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States 'without prejudice to the consideration and determination at final hearing of all questions of law and fact * * *.'

"It will be observed that the decisions of the United States Supreme Court affirmed the lower court only insofar as it allowed the interlocutory injunction issued by the Federal district court of Montana. The case was thereupon remanded to the lower court for a trial upon the merits of the case.

"It will be seen, therefore, that this case, commenced on the 21st day of September 1927 has wound its weary way through the courts of Montana and then, because the utilities company was dissatisfied with the judgment of the Supreme Court of Montana, it was dismissed and commenced again in the Federal court; that it has wound its way through the Federal court and is back again to the lower court in Montana, having been returned to that court by the order of the Supreme Court issued on February 29, 1932. From September 1927 to February 1932 the case has been to the supreme ccurt of the State and back and to the Supreme Court of the United States and back and still remains undecided.

"Such procedure makes a hollow mockery of the Montana laws. It is practically a denial of justice. Four years and seven months have elapsed since the beginning of the case and it is yet untried in the Federal court. It is such injustices as the one illustrated by this case that this bill seeks to remedy. In this instance, we are not talking about an imaginary case. We are considering an actual case. It is only a sample of what can occur in every State of the Union where the State has set up a State commission for the settlement of disputes with utility companies. There still remains, in the case illustrated, a trial before the Federal District Court of Montana and then another appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; but if the Supreme Court of the United States, upon that appeal, finds error, the case will again be sent back to the lower court for another trial—and so on, until final judgment is eventually rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States.

"The history of this case is so well outlined by Mr. Francis A. Silver, counsel for the Public Service Commission of Montana, in a letter addressed to Senator JOHNSON, the author of the bill, that I quote it in full, as follows:

BOARD OF RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS OF THE STATE OF MONTANA, EX OFFICIO PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION OF MONTANA, MONTANA TRADE COMMISSION

HELENA, MONT., March 21, 1932.

Hon. HIRAM JOHNSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JOHNSON: Through the courtesy of Hon. A. R. McDonald, of the Wisconsin Railroad Commission, chairman of the committee on legislation of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, we have been furnished with a copy of Senate bill 3243, introduced by yourself on January 25, 1932, being a bill to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards. We have read the bill and warmly support the measure as highly desirable legislation.

We believe that as a matter of principle there exists no justification for the procedure that permits Federal judicial interference with the orders of a State administrative board until such time as adequate remedies available within the State have been exhausted. Public utilities do not serve the public as a matter of constitutional right. The Supreme Court of the United States has affirmed the doctrine that a franchise to operate a public utility is not, like the general right to engage in lawful business, part of the liberty of a citizen. It being true that a public utility operates in a given State only by reason of a sovereign grant from the State, there appears to be no valid reason why disputes arising between the grantor of the franchise or privilege—the State—and the recipient thereof—the utility—should not be handled within the jurisdiction of the grantor, at least until the matter in controversy has been passed upon, on its merits, by the tribunal of the State having the final say, i.e., the highest appellate court. Then, if the utility is dissatisfied, it should have the right to a review of the strictly Federal question involved by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Montana commission is at present in the midst of an experience in connection with a public-utility rate order which fairly illustrates the incongruities of the present situation and the desirability of such legislation as you propose. With the thought in mind that a short history of our particular experience might be of informative interest to you, we are appending a summary of the principal features of the controversy. It will be noted that before the rate order in question was promulgated, the commission held three public hearings upon the issue as to the reasonableness of the rates for the service in question; that the utility first resorted to the State courts in testing the validity of the commission's order and was successful in the trial court in securing an injunction against the commission; that the commission appealed to the Supreme Court of Montana and secured a reversal; that the utility having unsuccessfully petitioned for a rehearing by the Supreme Court of Montana, filed a suit in the district court of the United States for the district of Montana, setting forth the identical facts that were pleaded in the case in the State court and urging the same identical alleged violations of the Federal Constitution as were urged in the case in the State court; that thereafter, when the case in the State court was set for trial at the instance of the commission, the utility took a voluntary dismissal thereof, thus preventing any final judgment on the merits from being entered in the case in the State court; that the utility successfully prosecuted an application for interlocutory injunction in the Federal district court and that an appeal was taken by the commission to the Supreme Court of the United States where the interlocutory injunction was affirmed without prejudice to the consideration and determination at final hearing of all questions of law and fact.

This case illustrates how under present procedure the utility can play hide-and-seek with a State regulatory board. It is, as you know, the presently approved doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States that State and Federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction of cases of this sort and that a utility can proceed concurrently in both State and Federal courts until a final judgment is entered in one when that judgment becomes conclusive in the other as res adjudicata. In other words, a public utility has the right to proceed concurrently in both State and Federal tribunals until such time as it ascertains the views of the respective courts on questions of law involved and then it may discontinue proceedings in the tribunal where the rulings have been adverse or unfavorable. The usual grounds for abatement of an action that there is another action pending between the same parties involving the same questions is of no avail nor does the doctrine of election apply. Irrespective of the annoyance and expenses that such procedure causes a State commission, the doctrine that permits it is unsound. In the instant case, the Supreme Court of Montana, in a unanimous opinion, overruled the utility's contention with respect to the commission's order violating the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution in the particulars charged. The court considered the contention at great length and disposed of it by sound logic and with the support of able precedents. Because there was a question of fact involved that had not been determined in the lower court, the case was remanded to the trial court for proceedings consistent with the views expressed by the Supreme Court. The utility, having ascertained that the views of the Supreme Court of Montana were adverse to its contentions on the Federal questions, immediately jumped into an inferior court—inferior in the sense that the Federal District Court of Montana is a trial court and not an appellate court—taking the chance of there obtaining a different interpretation. Obviously it had all to gain and nothing to lose. Ultimately, the 3 judges constituting the special district court, revised and reversed, in effect, the 5 members of the Supreme Court of Montana—an anomalous spectacle, 3 judges of a district court reversing 5 members of an appellate court.

The last chapter of this legislation has not yet been written, when it will be written is a matter of doubt. The writer hereof, as counsel for the Public Service Commission of Montana, consulted the senior district judge in this district in his chambers within the past fortnight to ascertain from him the probable date of trial of this cause upon its merits. Counsel was informed by the senior district judge that because, in his opinion, the commission had prevented the case from being heard upon final hearing on the same day and upon the same record as the application for interlocutory injunction was heard (incidentally, an opinion not at all borne out by the transcript of the proceeding), it would be a "cold" day before the senior district judge would reconvene the special court to try this action. When it was suggested to the senior district judge that the right to trial upon its merits was one accorded by the statute, the rejoinder was made that "probably" the case would be heard "in 2 or 3 years." Of course, the State of Montana will not cool its heels outside the doors of this tribunal for 2 or 3 years or until that particular cold day arrives. If the expressed attitude of the senior district judge is persisted in and the right of the State of Montana to a reasonably speedy determination of this controversy is ignored, appropriate steps will be taken in the Supreme Court of the United States to bring about a trial.

The above illustrates the extent to which a lower Federal court can go in paralyzing a State function, embarrassing regulation of public utilities, and humiliating a sovereign State. It is, we submit, contrary to sound public policy and makes for disconsonance between State and Federal Governments. Senate bill 3243 will preserve to the utility its full rights and at the same time maintain the dignity of the State tribunals. We trust that it will pass.

Yours very truly,

FRANCIS A. SILVER, Counsel.

"It will be interesting, also, to read a summary of the proceedings in this case, arranged in chronological order, as follows:

"SUMMARY OF PROCEEDINGS IN RE: CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GREAT NORTHERN UTILITIES CO. AND PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION OF MONTANA

"September 21, 1927: Commission, on its own motion, institutes inquiry into reasonableness of rates charged by Great Northern Utilities Co. for natural gas at Shelby, Mont.

"November 29, 1927: Public hearing at Shelby, Mont., on issues involved.

"October 1, 1928: Further public hearing at Shelby, Mont., on issues involved.

"December 20, 1928: Public hearing upon reasonableness of new schedule of rates proposed by Great Northern Utilities Co. for competitive purposes.

"January 22, 1929: Order of commission rejecting proposed schedule of utility and requiring utility to establish a specific schedule of rates effective February 1, 1929. (P.U.R. 1929–B, 176.)

"February 8, 1929: Action instituted by utility in State court to have order declared null and void and enforcement thereof enjoined.

"November 15, 1929: Second amended complaint of utility filed.

"November 22, 1929: Answer of commission filed.

"November 30, 1929: Motion for judgment on pleadings filed by utility.

"February 4, 1930: Motion for judgment on pleadings granted.

"February 4, 1930: Judgment rendered against commission declaring order null and void and permanently enjoining its enforcement.

"February 8, 1930: Commission files appeal to Supreme Court of Montana.

"April 3, 1930: Commission files motion to advance appeal on docket. Granted. Argument on appeal set for June 9, 1930.

"June 9, 1930: Appeal argued and submitted.

"July 29, 1930: Supreme court reverses lower court and remands cause for proceedings not inconsistent with views expressed. (88 Mont. 180; 293 Pac. 294.)

"September 2, 1930: Utility petitions for rehearing.

"September 9, 1930: Commission files objections to petition for rehearing.

"November 25, 1930: Petition for rehearing denied. (88 Mont. 232.)

"December 22, 1930: Utility files action in Federal court (U.S. Dist. for Montana) alleging same identical facts as in State case and requests injunctive relief on theory order violates fourteenth amendment to Constitution of United States. (Same grounds urged, inter alia, in State courts.)

"December 22, 1930: Utilty moves for injunction pendente lite.

"January 2, 1931: Commission moves State court for setting of State case for trial. Granted and case set for trial for January 23, 1931.

"January 15, 1931: Commission files motion to dismiss in Federal court case.

"January 21, 1931: Utility files praecipe for dismissal of case in State court.

"June 29, 1931: Application of utility for interlocutory injunction comes on for hearing before Sawtelle, circuit judge, and Bourquin and Pray, district judges, at Helena, Mont.

"June 29, 1931: At suggestion of court cause is submitted on final hearing with the right of commission to file its answer to bill of complaint on same date.

"June 29, 1931: Answer of commission filed raising the same identical issues of fact as were raised in the State case.

"July 22, 1931: Stipulation between parties agreeing that the case is submitted on application for interlocutory injunction only and not on final hearing.

"August 18, 1931: Decision of three-judge court filed (Bourquin and Pray award interlocutory injunction to plaintiff—Sawtelle dissents). (52 F.(2d) 802.)

"August 19, 1931: Interlocutory injunction issued against commission.

"September 15, 1931: Petition for appeal filed and order of allowance made.

"September 28, 1931: Sawtelle, C. J., files special concurring opinion (52 F. (2d) 805).

"February 24, 1932: Appeal argued in Supreme Court of United States.

"February 29, 1932: Per curiam order affirming action of special court issuing interlocutory injunction 'without prejudice to the consideration and determination at final hearing of all questions of law and fact * * *.' (United States Daily, issue of Mar. 1, 1932, p. 5, col. 1.)

"It is proper to say that the time will come, sometime in the dim, distant future, when this case will reach an end. Those who are now in the case and who were in it at the beginning will, perhaps, have passed away; many of them will have died of old age; new attorneys and new life will have come into the case, with new and additional motions for more delay, and the final judgment will probably be rendered long after the original participants have passed away and been forgotten."

The above quotation from the report of the committee on this bill pending in the Seventy-second Congress was written more than a year ago. It is interesting to know that since that time two additional chapters have been written in the Montana case above referred to. In that case, on the 5th of October 1932, the lower Federal court issued a permanent injunction restraining the enforcement of the commission's order. The Montana commission promptly appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and on April 10, 1933, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the Montana Federal District Court and upheld the order of the commission. At this writing (June 6, 1933) no further action has been taken by the lower Federal court upon the mandate of the Supreme Court, but it is reasonable to suppose that within a short time the Federal District Court of Montana will obey the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States and enter final judgment upholding the Montana commission, and thus will end a modern American Jarndyce against Jarndyce. It is not an isolated case. It is an illustration of what has been going on for years. It is an illustration of how States, in the management of their own affairs, are interfered with. As President Roosevelt, when Governor of New York, said in his official message on January 27, 1930, it "brings to the fore in a striking way the whole question of interference by the United States courts with the regulatory power of our public service commissions."

A delay of justice is very often an absolute denial of justice. These orders of State commissions are entered as and apply to the date when the findings are made. Before these great corporations get through with litigating in State courts and Federal courts, and by the time final judgment is rendered, the people for whose benefit the original order is made have nearly all died of old age; the order when finally entered may have no application whatsoever to the conditions existing at the time the order is entered. What should have been a proper rate at one particular time may be too high or too low if applied to a date several years later. This Montana case illustrates existing practice—a practice that this bill would to some extent change. It must be remembered that this case in Montana commenced on the 21st day of September 1927, and now, on the 6th day of June 1933, practically 6 years afterward, the end is in sight, and probably within a few months judgment will be rendered upholding the order of the commission as originally made. Here is a case where the great public-utility corporation was afraid of State courts. It tried its case out in State courts. It was unsuccessful. And then, because of prejudice that it is claimed existed on the part of State judges who were elected by the people and who were elected for a specific term and not for life, it went into Federal court and the judgment of the State court that was supposed to be so prejudiced rendered by men who had been elected by the people was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States. It is a demonstration that this claim of prejudice on the part of State judges and State officials does not exist, and that such claim is simply a sham and a delusion. The real object is to wear its opponents out by delay; the real object is not to get justice but to prevent justice being done to them. In this Montana case, after 6 years of litigation, the case is finally won for the benefit of the people of Shelby, Mont.

I presume after this mandate is carried out by the lower Federal court in Montana it would not be surprising if this same corporation should begin a new case, alleging that the conditions of 6 years ago would have no application to existing conditions and that, therefore, it was entitled to another injunction. Such a claim would be as reasonable as the original claim, and if it were made, the cry would go up from these great corporations and from their representatives that a great injustice was being done to investors in Montana property and that the only way to get justice was to get into Federal court and again wind the weary way to the Supreme Court of the United States. How long, oh how long, will a suffering people stand for such injustice being done in the name of justice? How long are the people's representatives in Congress going to listen to this corporation cry that they are suffering from the injustices of State officials elected by the people? The delay in court seems to be a precedent for a delay in legislation. The history of this bill illustrates it. One Congress after another, one delay after another—all on the ground of an alleged claim to save the foreign corporate monopoly from an injustice which might be inflicted upon it by State officials elected by the people.

This bill, pending for several years, has not yet been enacted into law. It cannot be enacted at this session of Congress. The claim for hearings and other technical claims, always bringing delay, have made it impossible for the Senate or the House to get an opportunity to consider this legislation on its merits. Every step that has been taken to bring about this delay, on the face of it, has been under the guise of asking for justice for a corporation which has never done justice and has never tried to do justice in its lifetime. Every step has been to prevent the people of a State from holding control over their own officials. And when we combine the delay in the courts with the delay in legislation, as illustrated by this bill, we begin to realize why it is that the people of the United States—honest, thinking citizens everywhere—are losing confidence in our courts and in Congress. They are beginning to realize the enormous power of great corporations—not because the courts are corrupt but because of the machinery of our jurisprudence, which enables them to delay and to delay and to delay, until their opponents are worn out. The fault, after all, lies more with Congress than anywhere else. Then, too, we ought not forget that all this expensive delay, all this injustice brought about by procrastination, is exceedingly extravagant and that, in the end, the people pay the bill. In the Montana case somewhere, some place, this great corporation is going to get every penny of its expense, every penny of its cost expended, out of the pockets of consumers of gas and electricity. The poor will pay the entire expense in pennies. From every fireside, from every home, contribution will be levied. It matters not what the expense has been in the way of paying for attorneys' fees, court costs, and expert witnesses, the people pay the bill. The people not only pay the bill of the power company but they pay the expense of the defense to which their State authorities are put in defending the action of State boards. The people pay one side by increased local taxation; they pay the other side by increased prices for electricity, gas, water, and telephone rates. It all comes out of the people. It is remarkable that they have patiently submitted for so many years to this unjust tribute. If such conditions are to continue indefinitely, the people of the country, bowed down to earth by burdens of unjust taxation and exorbitant rates for the necessaries of life supplied by these utilities, will eventually rise in their might and overthrow any party or any set of men who have the power, but who nevertheless refuse, to give relief by way of remedial legislation.

DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP

The bill also provides that Federal courts shall be denied jurisdiction in these utility cases where the ground for jurisdiction is diversity of citizenship.

THE REAL OBJECTIONS AND THE REAL OBJECTORS

At the time of the adoption of the Constitution there were undoubtedly jealousies existing between the several States. It must be remembered that at that time every State was supreme and entirely independent. Each State, at the conclusion of the Revolutionary War, was an independent nation. When the Constitution was adopted, Federal courts were established. The jealousies in some instances, in that day, were quite pronounced, and in order to meet that condition it was provided in the Constitution that Congress should have the right to give to Federal courts the authority to try cases in which the dispute "is between citizens of different States." It was believed then that such a provision was necessary in order to give the citizen of one State complete justice when he became involved in a legal dispute in another State. Whatever reason existed at that time for such a provision of law has long since passed away.

No one of experience will seriously contend at this time, for instance, that a citizen of Maryland is not able to get justice in the courts of the State of Virginia. Thousands of people live in the State of New Jersey and do business in New York City, just across the Hudson River. Would it be seriously contended that a citizen of New Jersey could not get justice in the New York courts simply because he lived on the west side of the river which separates New York from New Jersey? Is there any citizen of New York who is willing to admit that the courts of New York will discriminate between citizens of New York and citizens of New Jersey?

While the real reason for this provision of law has long since disappeared, there has grown up under the practice a system of jurisprudence which gives an advantage to the nonresident of the State in litigation which is not possessed by the resident of the State where the controversy arises. A citizen of Iowa, doing business in Nebraska, has a privilege under present laws not accorded to the citizen of Nebraska. The Iowa citizen, in such a case, if he desires to sue a citizen of Nebraska, has the choice of going into the Federal court or into the State court. And if in the course of his business in Nebraska, he is sued by a Nebraska citizen in the State courts of Nebraska, he has the right—not possessed by his opponent—of taking the case out of the Nebraska courts into the Federal courts.

An examination of the testimony taken before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee will show that some of the witnesses very honestly and frankly admitted that this was a "privilege" they had always possessed and they wanted to retain it. There is no doubt but that it is a privilege of great value. When a citizen of one State goes into another State and engages in business in the other State, under the laws of that State, and he gets into a controversy with a citizen of that State, why should he not be required to submit his controversy to the courts of that State, the same as every citizen thereof is compelled to do? This privilege of having the choice of going into one of two different courts is not only of great value, but it is often of extreme hardship and detriment to the other party to the litigation.

LITIGATION IN FEDERAL COURTS MORE EXPENSIVE THAN IN STATE COURTS

It is much more expensive to litigate in Federal courts than in State courts. Attorney fees are usually higher and the other expenses connected with the litigation are, as a rule, many times higher in Federal court than in the State court. The wealthy individual or corporation is thus often enabled to wear out his opponent and compel him to settle or submit to an unjust judgment for the very reason that his opponent is not financially able to follow him through the tortuous and expensive route through the Federal court to the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington. And all the time in this dispute there is no Federal question involved. There is a dispute arising under a State statute or law of other origin and nothing more. There are many places in the United States where litigants must travel several hundred miles to attend the place of trial if they are sued in Federal court.

It is not argued that the Federal court will be unjust. For the purpose of our illustration we can assume that the Federal court will be just as fair and as just as the State court. But, when sued in a Federal court, the defendant will be required to take his attorneys and his witnesses long distances where the Federal court sits. If the case is continued they must come again. And, when the case is finally decided, the poor defendant may be successful, but his opponent, because he is a nonresident, has taken him into Federal court and he appeals the case to the Federal court of appeals. Then he must send his attorneys several hundred miles to the place where the Federal Court of Appeals sits. This means again a very much increased expense and, in almost every case, a much larger attorney fee. He may win his case in the Court of Appeals, but, if so, his opponent may possibly take the case to the Supreme Court of the United States and he will have to send his attorneys perhaps a thousand or two thousand miles, paying the expenses and again a much larger attorney fee than he would pay in the State courts.

It means, therefore, that a person taken against his will into the Federal court for the purpose of settling a State question is worn out before he reaches the end. He is financially unable to follow the case to the end. Therefore, at the beginning, he perhaps submits to an injustice because he knows it means financial ruin to pursue the case to its final determination.

It is easy to be seen, therefore, that while perhaps there was some basis for this kind of a law when our Constitution was adopted, the purpose for which this provision of law is now used was never dreamed of by our forefathers when they adopted the Constitution. The effect of this provision of law is now entirely different from what it was then. First adopted to bring about justice, it has, as a matter of practice, very largely resulted in injustice and discrimination. Originally intended for the protection of the nonresident, it has become a weapon of destruction and injustice in his hands.

Those who favor the continuance of this unjust discrimination base their reason upon the original claim of jealousies existing between citizens of different States. But the real reason is that they want to protect the privilege which this law gives them. They desire to have the right in their litigation to choose between two tribunals. What was originally intended to protect them in a right has become a privilege which they use to give them an advantage over their adversaries.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED LEGISLATION COMES MOSTLY FROM LARGE CORPORATIONS

It will be found that most of those who are opposed to taking away this jurisdiction as proposed in this bill are, as a rule, extremely wealthy people or powerful corporations. Nearly every witness who appeared at the hearings before the subcommittee in opposition to the proposed legislation was an attorney for some large and powerful corporation. The American Bar Association, whose representatives appeared in opposition to the bill as everyone knows, is composed of many of the leading, brightest attorneys in the United States. Most of these attorneys, especially those who in reality have charge of the operations of the association, are, in their practice, attorneys for great corporations and do a great deal of their business, especially the most remunerative part of it, in the Federal courts. Their ability and their patriotism and their interest in good laws is conceded and recognized. But they are all human. If this bill should become a law it would affect the financial income of many of these leading attorneys. Their fees in Federal courts, being higher than the fees in State courts, would have a direct effect upon their financial returns. Their business likewise would be somewhat curtailed. If all lawsuits involving only State questions were tried in the State courts there would be less legal business for foreign attorneys and more legal business for local attorneys. It is, therefore, only fair to take this matter into consideration and it is only natural that it should be taken into consideration when we find that a large majority of the members of the bar opposing this legislation are, in fact, not only attorneys for corporations and wealthy individuals who would lose the right to choose between courts in their litigated matters, but who would likewise lose a portion, at least, of their most valuable professional work.

PRESENT LAW LEADS TO DISCRIMINATION AND INJUSTICE

Since the Supreme Court has decided that a corporation is a citizen and since the doing of business under corporate names has greatly increased, it has become a common practice for corporations to be incorporated in one State while they do business in another. And there is no doubt but that it often occurs simply for the purpose of being able to have the advantage of choosing between two tribunals in case of litigation.

A corporation is often organized under a State where it has no property, where none of the incorporators live, where they do no business and have no intention of doing business. The incorporators usually live in the State where they do business, where their property exists, and yet if they desire to commence an action against any citizen of the State where they do business, they can commence it in a Federal court and thus greatly increase the expense which the opposite party will be subjected to when, as a matter of fact, no Federal question is involved and when the action is based entirely upon State law where both the plaintiff and the defendant live and actually do business. Illustrations without number could be given to show that this has become a common practice and that, in reality, this is the reason why many corporations and wealthy men are opposed to any change in the present law.

This was well illustrated by a case which arose in Kentucky, where the Brown and Yellow Taxicab & Transfer Co. was plaintiff and the Black and White Taxicab & Transfer Co. was defendant. The plaintiff, in that case, was a corporation of the State of Tennessee. Prior to being incorporated in Tennessee the plaintiff was a corporation in the State of Kentucky. The defendant was also incorporated in the State of Kentucky. The Brown and Yellow Taxicab Co. and the Black and White Taxicab Co. were competitors. The Brown and Yellow Taxicab Co. and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. were about to enter into a contract by which the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. gave to the Brown and Yellow Taxicab Co. certain exclusive privileges connected with their passenger station. It was known, however, that the courts of Kentucky would not sustain the contract which they contemplated making. It was known that the courts of Kentucky had already declared such contract as they contemplated making with the railroad company null and void. It was known also that the Federal courts had held such contracts to be valid.

Both of these corporations were incorporated in the State of Kentucky. In any controversy between them, they would be required to go into the State courts of Kentucky. Knowing this, the Brown and Yellow Taxicab Co. went across the line and incorporated in the State of Tennessee. The incorporation in the State of Tennessee was under exactly the same name as they had incorporated under in the State of Kentucky. They went through the formality of the Kentucky corporation, transferring all its property of every kind to the Tennessee corporation and the Kentucky corporation thereupon went out of business. The result was that the Brown and Yellow Taxicab Co., of Kentucky, had become the Brown and Yellow Taxicab Co., of Tennessee. The business was just the same as it had been before. The property was all in Kentucky. The business was all in Kentucky. But the corporation, under the same name, was incorporated in the State of Tennessee.

It, therefore, became a nonresident of the State of Kentucky, and, under the clause of the Federal statute which this bill would repeal, litigation between this taxicab company of Tennessee and the other taxicab company in Kentucky could be taken into the Federal court, although there was no Federal question involved. The question was entirely a State matter and the courts of Kentucky had settled the question so far as Kentucky was concerned. But the Federal courts had a different rule. As soon as this transfer of property had taken place and the plaintiff became incorporated under the laws of the State of Tennessee, it entered into the contemplated contract with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. by which the railroad company gave to the plaintiff certain exclusive rights and thereby excluded the defendant, the Black and White Taxicab Co., from enjoying the exclusive privileges given to the other taxicab company; and the Brown and Yellow Taxicab Co., as soon as it had incorporated in Tennessee, commenced the action against the Black and White Taxicab Co. to prevent that company from interfering with its contract with the railroad company.

This action was commenced in the Federal court. It was admitted that the only object which the Brown and Yellow Taxicab Co. had when it incorporated under the laws of Tennessee was to enable it to go into Federal court in litigation with its competitor, the Black and White Taxicab Co. of Kentucky. It was admitted that the plaintiff did no business in Tennessee. It had no property in Tennessee. Its offices, officials, and employees were all in the State of Kentucky, but, by the means above outlined, it was enabled to commence its action in the Federal courts and maintain a position which it is conceded it could not have maintained under the laws or the rulings of the Kentucky courts. In a dissenting opinion written by Justice

Holmes and concurred in by Justices Brandeis and Stone, it is stated:

"It is expressly recognized that the decisions of the Kentucky courts held that in Kentucky a railroad company could not grant such rights, but this being a 'question of general law', it went its own way regardless of the courts of this State. (15 F. (2d) 509, Black and White Taxi Co. v. Brown and Yellow Taxi Co., 276 U.S. 518, 532.)"

This case is a glaring illustration of the injustice which is brought about by the law which this bill seeks to repeal, so far as orders of State commissions are concerned. Here is a case where a citizen corporation of Kentucky, in a controversy with another citizen corporation of Kentucky, was enabled to violate the laws of Kentucky as laid down by the Supreme Court of Kentucky, by the simple device of going across the line and incorporating in another State, thus enabling it to get an advantage which no citizen or corporation of the State of Kentucky could have obtained.

This statute, coming down from our forefathers, to correct an evil which perhaps existed in their day, but which does not exist in ours, thus enables a foreign corporation to enjoy a privilege in a State which is denied to every corporation and every citizen of that State. It shows the injustice which comes about under this ancient statute—a statute which has outlived its usefulness—a statute originally enacted to bring justice, but which has become a weapon of injustice. And it is defended on the ground—and the only ground—that when a nonresident goes into a State court he cannot get justice because it is alleged there is a prejudice in the State against nonresidents. Here were two taxicab companies doing business in the same town, under the same State laws. Neither one of them had been forced to go into this State to do business. They went there voluntarily. One of them, when it had an opportunity to make an unjust contract with the railroad company, knowing that the courts of that State would not sustain this kind of a contract, went into another State and incorporated before it began its action. This taxicab company was not thinking of prejudice. It knew that such a thing did not exist as between itself and its competitor. The question of prejudice never entered the minds of its attorneys when they gave this company the advice to cross over the line and incorporate in another State. They were seeking solely to get an undue advantage, an unfair advantage, over their only competitor.

PRESENT LAW MAKES PROPERTY RIGHTS MORE VALUABLE THAN HUMAN RIGHTS

Under existing law the nonresident is given an unfair advantage for his property, an advantage which does not accrue in favor of his personal liberty. His property rights, in other words, are given more consideration and are surrounded with more safeguards than are the rights of life itself.

If his business is incorporated in a foreign State and he has a personal dispute or a controversy with his neighbor which leads to litigation, and the amount involved is more than $3,000, he is given the advantage denied to his opponent of taking his controversy into the Federal court. If, on the other hand, an inhabitant of one State crosses the line and commits a crime, murder for instance, the law does not consider even his life as valuable as it would consider $3,000 of his property. After he has committed a crime he escapes to his own State, but he is extradited. He is taken by force across the line, back into the State where it is alleged the crime was committed. He can not then plead in court that he is a nonresident of the State where he is to be tried. If his property were at issue he could make this plea and have the case removed to the Federal court. But nothing but his life is at stake and the law, as it now exists, does not consider that valuable enough to give him the privilege of going into Federal court. He cannot plead that as a nonresident criminal who is to be tried for crime, he will face a jury which has a prejudice against him because he lives in another State. He is compelled, when his life is at stake, to disregard this sacred right. He must stand trial before a State judge—a judge perhaps not appointed for life, but elected by the people, a fact which these fortunate corporations so often say they do not like. In other words, he has violated a State law and he is to be tried under the laws of the State where it is alleged he violated the laws. He is tried before a jury, and the question of State prejudice never arises. Indeed, it is never thought of, for the very reason that it does not exist.

These people who are so jealous of the rights of property on account of State prejudice when a nonresident is involved, have never yet proposed that when a man commits murder in a State where he does not reside, he should have the same right which they ask for property, the right to transfer his case to the Federal courts. These gentlemen who are so much afraid of State prejudice when it comes to property have never yet given a thought to that terrible prejudice as it might affect human freedom or human life. Where nothing but a human life is at stake, no transfer to Federal courts can take place. Such a blessed privilege and unfair advantage is given only to property.

RELIEF OF FEDERAL COURTS FROM CONGESTION

The congestion in our Federal district courts is acknowledged by all. That of itself is often a denial of justice. All classes of our citizens have recently become interested in various proposals for the relief of the congestion in our Federal district courts. The President of the United States has sent official messages to Congress on the subject. He has appointed a commission composed of eminent jurists and other able, patriotic scholars. The question has received the attention of the leading members of the bar throughout the entire country. Federal judges from the Supreme Court down have lent their assistance in trying to devise some plan by which the Federal courts can be relieved from a large amount of the work now upon Federal judicial dockets.

Why not do this by letting State courts settle State controversies and confine Federal courts to the settlement of Federal questions? When a State question arises under a State statute, why not let the courts of that State settle that controversy, whether the controversy is between citizens of one State or citizens of two different States? Why not be logical and let the State courts try controversies arising under State laws within their borders instead of permitting a few privileged persons who do business in a State to take their controversies into Federal courts and thus burden Federal judges with the settlement of State questions and the control of lawsuits arising entirely and solely out of controversies under State laws?

Of all the suggestions which have been made from any source there is none which will bring as much relief as would the enactment of this proposed bill. It is estimated that the work of the Federal judiciary would be decreased from 25 to 40 percent if this bill should be enacted into law. Not only would this relief for the Federal judiciary take place, but it would do it without any injustice of any kind coming to any person or corporation.

We are continually met with the demand for more judges, and if we provided for enough district judges to do all the work of the district courts and keep the dockets of these courts up to date, it would require a very large number of additional judges, prosecuting attorneys, United States marshals, and all other officials which necessarily go to the establishment and maintenance of courts of justice.

If all the cases involving diverse citizenship should be left for the State courts, where they fairly and honestly belong, this congestion in Federal courts would be relieved, the demand for more Federal judges would disappear, and all this would occur without any injustice to anyone. Every logical reason seems to point to the step which this bill proposes to take, and there is no reason now existing why the jurisdiction which this bill would take away from Federal courts should be retained. Many of the matters which the United States courts are trying, arising entirely within the jurisdiction of a State, and controversies coming up exactly the same as controversies arise between citizens of the same State, would, if this bill becomes a law, be left to the State courts for adjudication. There is no good or logical reason why this proposed bill should not become a law.

The Judiciary Committee of the Senate has twice reported favorably to the Senate a bill identical or very similar to S. 939, recommended for passage.

In order to get definite and first-hand information as to just how much relief would come to Federal courts if such a bill as is now proposed were enacted, the writer wrote to every district judge in the United States. The following is a copy of that letter:

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 29, 1930.

Hon. ———,
United States District Judge, ———.

MY DEAR JUDGE: The Judiciary Committee of the Senate has twice reported to the Senate bills proposing to take away from the Federal courts jurisdiction in cases arising solely under the diversity of citizenship clause of the Federal law (U.S.C., title 28, sec. 41, par. 1).

Considerable discussion has arisen in regard to the number of cases which get into Federal courts on account of this provision of the statute. In order to get direct, first-hand information on this subject, I am writing this letter to all of the district judges in the United States.

Will you please let me know how many civil cases were filed in your court during the calendar year 1929, and how many of these cases were in your court on account of the diversity of citizenship clause in the law?

Thanking you in advance for your attention to this matter, I am,

Very truly yours,

G. W. NORRIS,
Chairman Judiciary Committee.

This law, as will be observed, eliminates criminal cases and all civil cases except such as arise under that clause of the statute which the proposed bill would eliminate.

From the replies which I have received from these letters I have had compiled the following table, showing how many civil cases were filed in the various district courts of the United States during the calendar year 1929, and of these cases how many came into the respective Federal district courts by virtue of the diversity of citizenship clause, the one which this proposed bill would repeal. The first column in the table gives the entire number of civil cases filed during the calendar year 1929. The second column gives the number of these cases which were filed under the statute which this bill proposes to repeal.

In this connection, and as bearing directly on this point, quotations made from a letter written by Hon. William Clark, one of the Federal district judges in the State of New Jersey, is exceedingly illuminating. Judge Clark says:

"I would estimate the percentage of reduction which will be effected by the passage of the bill as about 33⅓ percent. I say this because our work is about equally divided between the law, equity, and admiralty matters. As most of our equity work is in the patent law, the contemplated reductions on that side would be approximately equal to the present constitutional and admiralty work.

"It has always seemed extraordinary to me that in all this somewhat uninformed talk with respect to congestion in the United States courts, the question of abolition of the diversity jurisdiction is never emphasized."

It must be remembered that Judge Clark was writing in reference to a bill that proposed to take away all the jurisdiction conferred on Federal courts by the diversity of citizenship clause in the law. The bill under consideration does not go that far; it applies only to orders made by State boards and commissions having to do with the fixing of utility rates, but it is illuminating, nevertheless, as showing what a large percentage of the cases that are being tried in our Federal courts have no relation whatsoever to any Federal question. Federal courts, in other words, are devoting about one third of their time to trying cases arising entirely under State statutes, cases which, as a matter of fact, have nothing to do with any Federal question. According to Judge Clark, about one third of the time of our Federal judges is consumed in controversies arising under State matters and in construing State statutes.

In another letter Judge Clark says:

"I am making herein a short classification of and commentary on the work of the April civil term over which I have just finished presiding."

In that term the judge tried 17 civil cases. It is remarkable that every one of these 17 cases was in his court by virtue of the diverse citizenship clause of existing law. It should be noted that in every one of these 17 cases it was the law of New Jersey which Judge Clark was called upon to administer. Every dispute and every case should have been tried in the State courts.

Of these 17 cases, 7 were automobile accidents and 1 the death of a little girl to whom an anæsthetic had been administered, 1 was a suit for commissions on the sale of underwear; 1 was for the construction of a water-supply system; and 1 for the recovery of an amount claimed to be due for flooring in a public building; 3 cases were grade-crossing accidents; 1 attractive nuisance; 1 for platform injury; and 1 a slander suit.

It is perfectly apparent to every student of the subject that some relief must be sought for the congested condition of our Federal courts. We cannot go on continually adding more judges. If we can divide the judiciary power of the country, giving to State courts jurisdiction over State matters and Federal courts jurisdiction over Federal matters, we will rapidly approach a proper division of the jurisdiction which will give the necessary relief.

This bill does not, of course, go so far as to take away the jurisdiction of Federal courts in all diversity of citizenship cases, but it is a step in that direction. If it is passed, it will assist very materially in relieving the congestion now existing in practically all Federal courts.

An illuminating presentation of this subject from a very high source is an article entitled "Distribution of Judicial Power Between United States and State Courts", contained in the Cornell Law Quarterly for June 1928. This article was written by Hon. Felix Frankfurter, professor of law in the Harvard Law School. In this article Professor Frankfurter says:

"One hundred and forty years ago there began a great debate concerning the functions of the national courts under the new Union. What should be the scope of their authority? What their relation to the State courts? Intermittently that debate has continued throughout our history, and now * * * we are at the beginning of another important stage of the discussion. Nothing but good can come from a reexamination of the purposes to be served by the Federal courts. Their historic contributions, above all their share in molding the loosely knit States into a nation, have rooted the United States courts deeply into our national consciousness. They need not fear fair scrutiny.

"It is proper to inquire into the appropriateness of the existing distribution of judicial power, just as the substance of law is revised from time to time in response to new needs. Whatever survives such an inquiry can only help to strengthen the judicial system. Especially is this true of the Federal judiciary. * * * The happy relation of States to Nation—our abiding political problem—is in no small measure dependent on the wisdom with which the scope and limits of the Federal courts are determined.

"* * * They are not technical issues, nor within the special province of lawyers. The formulation of the compromises demand legal skill, and of a high order. But the bases of adjustment must be evolved by statesmen, and ought both to enlist and to satisfy public understanding.

"* * * For example, efforts at relief of congestion in the Federal courts can hardly escape inquiry into the sources of their business, and that inevitably leads to scrutiny of the allotment of the common fund of litigation available for distribution between State and United States courts. * * *

"For 40 years there has been no organic reconsideration of the scope of business intrusted to the lower Federal courts. Recently a few isolated measures have made some significant contraction of jurisdiction. There have been also some abortive efforts at major restriction. But, in truth, for more than 50 years there has been no comprehensive revision. For the act of 1887–88 largely took for granted the jurisdictional assumption which underlay the Judiciary Act of 1875.

"A division of judicial labor among different courts, particularly between a dual system of Federal and State courts, is especially subject to the shifting needs of time and circumstance. That the wisdom of 1875 is the exact measure of wisdom for today is most unlikely. * * *

"Of these, the profoundest need is that the Supreme Court may be free to adjudicate great issues of government. 'The most important function of the court', the present Chief Justice has told us, 'is the construction and application of the Constitution of the United States.' All other purposes are subsidiary; all other litigation must be subordinated. To this end Congress has translated into law the court's own views upon the duties and powers appropriate to its functions. The Judiciary Act of 1925 and the energetic labors of Chief Justice Taft and his associates have enabled the court to remove arrears and to reach in regular course cases docketed this term.

"But the present equilibrium of Supreme Court litigation will not long be maintained. The volume of the Supreme Court's business will again increase, as it has in the past increased after every measure for the relief of congestion. * * *

"Most important of all, however, the stream of Supreme Court litigation is conditioned by its feeders. Interstate controversies, to be sure, are apt to raise not only grave issues, but involve a mass of intricate facts, thereby occasioning considerable inroad upon the Court's time. But such controversies are infrequent and other demands upon the Court's original jurisdiction are negligible. What matters is its appellate jurisdiction. With few exceptions, the cases that come to the Supreme Court come from other courts. The volume of Supreme Court cases and the nature of their issues are largely predetermined by the volume and nature of the business of the feeding courts.

"If diversion from the lower Federal courts of controversies which State courts can settle adequately enough would help save the Supreme Court for its more essential labors, this would be a gain of moment. * * *

"In a summary of the business that has heretofore been given to the Federal courts a sharp line must be drawn between cases arising under the Constitution, laws and treaties of the United States, and controversies deriving significance solely from the citizenship of the parties. Different considerations led to the deposit of power in the Constitution over these two broad groups of litigation; different considerations have evoked its exercise by Congress from time to time in varying degrees and under varying circumstances."

Professor Frankfurter then proceeds to give the history of various acts of Congress running over a series of years, by which Congress in various ways took away from Federal courts jurisdiction which had been before permitted, and in several instances he calls attention to the fact that Congress has conferred upon State courts jurisdiction in Federal matters and over corporations incorporated by acts of Congress.

Professor Frankfurter takes up the question of diversity of citizenship, and says:

"Thus far we have been considering the role State courts may play in the disposition of Federal rights. What of the converse—State litigation in the Federal Courts? The availability of Federal tribunals for controversies concerning matters which, in themselves, are outside the domain of Federal power and exclusively within State authority, is the essence of diverse citizenship jurisdiction. * * *

"This jurisdiction, particularly in its modern manifestations through corporate litigation, has aroused strong division of opinion, both judicial and professional, and repeated congressional attempts at curtailment. With a view to circumventing this use of jurisdiction by foreign corporations, States have resorted to every variety of legislation, frequently frustrated by the Supreme Court. Altogether, diversity jurisdiction has deeply weakened attachment to the Federal courts over a wide area and has unhappily given rise to measures calculated to impair their usefulness.

"According to Marshall's classic justification for diversity jurisdiction, the Constitution entertained apprehensions lest distant suitors be subjected to local bias in State courts, or, at least, it viewed with indulgence, the possible fears and apprehensions of such suitors. Whatever may have been true in the early days of the Union, when men felt the strong local patriotism of the politically nouveaux riches, has not the time come now to reconsider how justifiable the apprehensions, how valid the fears? The Civil War, the Spanish War, and the World War have profoundly altered national feeling, and the mobility of modern life has greatly weakened State attachments. Local prejudice has ever so much less to thrive on than it did when diversity jurisdiction was written into the Constitution. * * *

"Certainly the obvious abuses of diversity jurisdiction should be promptly removed by legislation, on plain grounds of policy and to relieve the overburdened Federal dockets. In the absence of an adequate system of Federal judicial statistics, we are without an exact basis for analyzing the scope and nature of Federal court business. That the diversity cases represent one of its heaviest items is common knowledge. According to the usual estimate they constitute one third of the business of the district courts. An examination of 10 recent volumes of the Federal Reporter shows that out of 3,618 full opinions 959, or 27 percent, were written in cases arising solely out of diversity of citizenship. In 716 of these cases, or 80 percent, a corporation was a party.

"At best, diverse citizenship jurisdiction has elements of unfairness. A resident of a State when suing another resident of the same State is compelled to sue in the State court; a nonresident suing the same defendant has a choice in two courts. The situation is aggravated by the freedom of the Federal courts to make local law in accordance with their notions of general jurisprudence, in complete disregard of the declared law of the State. The unfairness is increased in the various situations in which Federal courts are not even bound to follow State court decisions on a State statute or a State constitution. When these doctrines are applied in suits between citizens of a State and a corporation which does all or part of its business in that State, the unfairness to residents who are thus made litigants in the Federal court, as well as to resident parties in similar actions, is unmitigated. Public as well as private interests are sacrificed. The system leads to evasion of State legislation embodying legitimate State policies. Thus foreign corporations which do business in a State without complying with constitutional conditions imposed by the State, bar themselves from enforcing rights in the State courts, but they may sue in the Federal courts of that State. (Citing David Lupton's Sons Co. v. Automobile Club of America, 225 U.S. 489, 32 Sup. Ct. 711 (1911).)

"The temptations for abuse of the doctrine of 'indisputable citizenship' were too obvious; needless to say, they have been richly exploited. A very large part of the business of corporations is done in States other than that of their incorporation. To a considerable extent, corporations do all of their business in such other States. They enjoy the privileges and advantages of the laws of these States and the benefits of business relations with their citizens. Yet, without the corporate consent, a nonchartering State has not the power to adjudicate through its own courts disputes between these corporations and its own citizens, although such disputes arise wholly from the activities of the corporation within the State and in no wise impinge upon matters of Federal concern. This jurisdiction has been consciously abused. Men incorporate in a foreign State solely to avoid subjection to the laws of the State in which they carry on business and to obtain the advantages of Federal jurisdiction.

"The operation of a double system of conflicting laws in the same State is plainly hostile to the reign of law. Janus was not a god of justice. Litigation in the Federal courts is apt to be more expensive and otherwise more burdensome than in the State courts. The justification, if any, for these evils and burdens in suits between citizens of different States disappears when the suit is between a citizen of a State and a corporation which does business within that State.

"The various types of diversity litigation call for concrete scrutiny in the light of present-day conditions and the demands upon Federal courts by peculiarly Federal litigation. The right to remove to the Federal court a litigation between two nonresidents in a State court will not survive analysis."

MANY LARGE CORPORATIONS FEAR JUDGES ELECTED BY THE PEOPLE

The usual objection made to this proposed legislation is based, as before stated, upon the alleged prejudice of the people against nonresident litigants. Another reason, however, seldom given publicly but often referred to privately, is that these large corporations do not want to try their cases before judges who have been elected by the people; and, in confidence, their attorneys often state frankly that they want to try their cases before a judge who has not been elected by the people but who has been appointed and who holds his office for life. They say that a judge who must be elected by the voters and whose reelection depends upon the favor of the people often is thinking about his reelection and does not give the corporation or the man of great wealth proper consideration.

One letter from such an attorney, addressed to the writer, frankly states:

"We do not want to try our cases before a judge who has to depend upon the will of the people to hold his position."

Another equally frank letter says:

"We want to try our cases before judges who hold their positions for life, and who, therefore, will not be inclined to be swayed in any degree by the fact that he must go back to the people for reelection."

Another statement from an attorney whose clients consist mostly of gigantic corporations, reads:

"State judges are too close to the people who elect them. Federal judges, who hold their positions for life and who are not indebted to the voter for their positions, are more satisfactory."

Other letters state, as some of the witnesses at the hearings in effect stated, that—

"The present law gives us the privilege of making a choice between two courts. We have had that privilege since the beginning of our Government and there is no reason now why it should be taken away."

There has always been contention between those who believe in an appointed judiciary and those who believe in an elected judiciary. If we add to the elected judiciary a life tenure of office, then we have given to the trial judge a power within the scope of his duties as great as has ever been extended in history to any monarch, king, or potentate. These attorneys and corporations who are standing for life tenure of trial judges and the appointment by the President of such judges do not realize that they are trespassing upon dangerous ground.

In a democracy such as ours the consent of the governed is presumed, and however beautiful may be the theory of a life tenure for trial judges and the appointment of such judges regardless of the wishes of the people, the practical effect of such a claim is far from satisfactory.

Our institutions, to be stable and lasting, must have the confidence of the general public. The judiciary is no exception to this rule, and when the people lose confidence in the judiciary, our governmental fabric is at once weakened and such lack of confidence goes a long way in definitely and permanently injuring the very foundation of government itself. When the people lose confidence in any system of jurisprudence, the warning is at once blazoned upon the canopy of civilization and unless it is heeded by men and corporations of great wealth and great influence, they will themselves in the end be the victims of a destruction which their own conduct will bring down upon their heads. There can be no doubt whatever but that in the minds of millions of our people there is already a prejudice against Federal judges interfering in their official capacity with local matters which should be handled and disposed of entirely by the courts of the several States.

The American Bar Association has taken an active part in opposition to the proposed legislation. Briefs almost without number have been written, but it might be well to call the attention of members of that association to the fact that even they have received warning from their own membership. In the hearing there is printed in full a letter addressed to Hon. Paul Howland, chairman of the committee on jurisprudence and law reform, American Bar Association, Cleveland, Ohio, by Hon. Charles E. Clark, of the Yale University School of Law. I am making several quotations from that letter as follows:

"There is a tendency to view all proposals for any limitation of Federal judicial jurisdiction in cases of diversity of citizenship as an attack on the Federal court system. On the contrary, however, supporters of that system, cherishing its historic and present functions in our Government, may well view with something akin to consternation the rapid expansion and dilution of that jurisdiction by all sorts of cases, petty as well as important. They may well study with considerate care any proposals which might serve to make that jurisdiction more respected and more worth while. It must be safeguarded even from its friends who would so overwhelm it that it cannot serve its proper function as a unifying arm of the Central Government. The business now placed upon it is such as in many districts to compel it to sacrifice its deliberative functions to the merely mechanical disposition of countless cases unimportant to a national court. Further expansion of the judicial establishment and consequent lowering of its prestige seems quite undesirable. Public sentiment responded adversely even to the suggestion of adding judicial powers to the United States commissioners. The opposite way, that of limiting jurisdiction, is the better one. The Supreme Court of the United States has shown how respect for a tribunal, which might easily have been overwhelmed by trivialities, is preserved and enhanced by sound restrictions on its jurisdiction. * * *

"Opposition to such change apparently comes down to a belief that local prejudice of State courts would operate as a denial of justice to nonresident litigants. Observers of some competence deny that such prejudice exists in serious form. Here is an issue of fact where the need of a dispassionate ascertainment of the real situation and perhaps of some experimentation to test the results of slight modifications of existing rules would seem apparent. This committee, given some wider scope of its powers, would be an excellent body for such purpose. In the absence of a careful factual study, I venture to believe that the charge of prejudice, turning exclusively upon nonresidence and affecting an appreciable number of cases, is not proven, while the present terms of the diversity of citizenship jurisdiction result in a selection of Federal cases in many ways unfortunate as giving the appearance of another sort of prejudice in the Federal tribunals. * * *"

Added to Professor Clark's letter is a postscript reading as follows:

"Since writing the above I received copy of Mr. Everett's letter of March 4, 1932. I cannot read into Crowell v. Benson all that he does. Moreover, I regret the suggestion that this committee use its influence to fight the proposed legislation at Washington. The American Bar Association and its members can hope to have little influence in public life if it and they consistently, and, as I believe, without careful and impartial consideration of the opposing views, strike out against judicial reform believed to be necessary by large groups of our citizens."

I invite attention to the warning which is contained in these quotations. They were written by a man having no selfish motive, but who is moved only by a desire to protect the judiciary itself.

Suppose we admit for argument's sake that there is a prejudice among the common people against great corporations. Can any student of our history or of political economy claim for one moment that this prejudice is not justified by our past history? As a practical proposition, does not everyone know that many of our Federal trial judges have been appointed for political reasons or for the very reasons that it was known by those who make the recommendations and who are really responsible for the appointments that the views of the appointee on social and economic questions were favorable to those held by respresentatives of corporate wealth.

The President cannot personally know the views of all the appointees he is called upon to name. As a matter of practical politics, it is well known that many Federal judges are appointed because they have recommendations from men and corporations of great wealth and power, institutions which are able, or supposed to be able, to control large numbers of votes; or, what is perhaps still worse, men and institutions who have already controlled the votes, and who are, by these appointments, paid for their influence in controlling conventions and elections.

In theory our system may be ideal, but as it has worked out in practice it has given an advantage to men and corporations who have great political influence; and it is not to be wondered at that such men and such institutions should want to try their cases before judges whom they, themselves, have been instrumental in placing upon the bench.

PROPAGANDA

That there has been a Nation-wide propaganda in opposition to this legislation, coming mostly from large corporations, mainly through their attorneys, there can be no doubt. This propaganda began in a preceding Congress, when a bill similar to the present one was favorably reported from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. Many of the circular letters sent out stated in effect that the proposed legislation was unconstitutional and interfered with the constitutional rights of the people.

As a matter of fact, no lawyer on either side of the question, so far as I know, who has given the matter close and definite study, has any doubt about the constitutionality of this legislation. So plain is its constitutionality to lawyers generally that it is not necessary to argue that question at any great length. Nevertheless, many of these circular letters, without stating the real objection, clothe their statements in language which would have a tendency to make the ordinary citizen believe that his constitutional rights were invaded.

One instance of this misleading propaganda was demonstrated by the manner in which many organizations of colored people became excited and worked up in the belief that the bill struck at the colored race and interfered with the rights granted to that race under the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution. And yet no one who wishes to be fair will make the claim that the proposed legislation has any effect one way or the other upon the rights of the colored people, or any other class of people.

In the preceding Congress, when the same bill had been reported to the Senate, an attorney for one of the great interstate railroads wrote to local attorneys and other attorneys asking them to write to their Senators and demand that they make a fight against the passage of this terrible legislation. Omitting the name, the following is a copy of this letter:

"Senate bill 4357, introduced by Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, calendar day May 5, was reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee on the 19th ultimo. This bill amends section 24 of the Judicial Code of the United States, omitting the provision authorizing the removal of suits between the citizens of different States to Federal courts where the jurisdictional amount exceeds $3,000. A favorable report was made without a hearing by the Judiciary Committee, Senator NORRIS representing that it would relieve the Federal courts of congestion and that there was little opposition except from corporations.

"While it is true that corporations are much interested in this proposed legislation, it is equally true that litigants of all classes or groups are equally interested. It would, in effect, suspend the constitutional provision extending the jurisdictional power of the United States to controversies between citizens of different States, certainly a very radical and dangerous proposition.

"I am therefore writing to you and some other influential members of the bar in an effort to enlist your assistance in requesting our Senators to oppose this bill, and I should be glad to learn your views thereon."

Another letter written by the general agent of an insurance company to a Member of the Senate is, in part, as follows:

"United States Senate bill 939, recently introduced into the present Congress by Senator NORRIS, would amend section 24 of the United States Judicial Code by eliminating diversity of citizenship as a ground for removal of suits from State courts to United States district courts, and Senate bill 937, also recently introduced in the present Congress by Senator NORRIS, would have exactly the same effect, so far as corporations are concerned.

"At the present time, if the corporation or the American Employers' Insurance Co. or the Employers' Fire Insurance Co., should be sued in Vermont by a Vermont citizen in the State courts, those companies have the right to remove the case from the State court to the United States district court. The purpose of this is to guarantee absolute justice to an outsider. If tried before some local or county court, the jury may be made up obviously of friends and neighbors of the plaintiff, who naturally would sympathize with him to the prejudice of the out-of-State defendants, whereas if brought into the Federal court the jurors, as a rule, are drawn from all over the State or all over the judicial district, if there happens to be more than one judicial district where the United States district court sits.

"This, to my mind, is a very important privilege which is now enjoyed by companies like our own, and it seems to me most unfair to have any law passed which would take it away."

It will be noted that this writer is afraid of local prejudice of jurors. The local prejudice of jurors, while often existing, is a two-edged sword. If the interested party in a community is generally known and bears a good reputation in the neighborhood where he lives, he would naturally be benefited if any such prejudice existed. On the other hand, if he were a man of disreputable character or otherwise believed by the people of his community to be a dishonorable person, his reputation would be to his detriment. And why should this not be so? The man who lives an honorable life and who is known to be an honest man in the neighborhood where he lives is entitled to the benefit of such a reputation. On the other hand, the man who is of such a character in the neighborhood where he lives that his neighbors and acquaintances look upon him with suspicion, will perhaps suffer if his character becomes an issue before a jury of his community.

It will be noted, also, that in this letter this general-insurance agent says:

"This, to my mind, is a very important privilege which is now enjoyed by companies like our own, and it seems to me most unfair to have any laws passed which would take it away."

Why should this insurance company or any other corporation or individual have a "privilege"? The object of this law is to take away this privilege, a privilege which gives to the corporation outside of the State an advantage over the corporation within the State, a privilege which exists in favor of the nonresident litigant as against the resident litigant.

Another letter from an attorney in a Western State is, in part, as follows:

"Some of the loan companies, because of diversity of citizenship, are bringing all of their foreclosure actions in the Federal courts. * * *

"When the various loan companies now start a foreclosure in the Federal court, it has a tendency toward intimidating the mortgagor, who is already in a hard-pressed condition or foreclosure would not have been necessary. He is then faced with the necessity of either securing counsel at the distant point where Federal court is held or of securing local counsel and having them attend court there. This makes it very difficult for him to properly protect his rights in the foreclosure. It also places the attorney practicing in a county where there is not a Federal court division at a disadvantage in this line of practice, since, from a distance, he must compete with the attorneys who are living where the court is held."

A letter from Mr. Lester B. Johnson, a prominent attorney in the city of Philadelphia, not only shows the existence of a Nation-wide propaganda, but it is a very concise and logical argument in favor of the passage of this proposed bill. Particular attention is called to the statements in this letter. There exists in Philadelphia a Rapid Transit Co., a street-railway corporation. It is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania, so that if it is sued in the State courts of Pennsylvania it is not able to have the case transferred to the Federal court because it is a corporation of the same State wherein the plaintiff in such a case resides. The Rapid Transit Co., however, has organized the Yellow Cab Co., which is incorporated in another State. The Yellow Cab Co. is owned by the Rapid Transit Co., so that a suit against the Yellow Cab Co. is, in reality, a suit against the Rapid Transit Co. By incorporating the Yellow Cab Co. in a different State they are able to take advantage of the diverse citizenship clause and transfer their cases into the Federal court. There can be no possible question of prejudice in this case. The Yellow Cab Co. does business only in the State of Pennsylvania. Its property is there. Its offices are there. Its officials are there. But it incorporates in another State in order to transfer into Federal court all suits which may be commenced against it. The object of incorporating in another State is to enable it to go into Federal court. In other words, the Rapid Transit Co. organizes a separate company in order to obtain this blessed privilege of going into Federal court rather than trying its lawsuits in the State where it does business and where the cause of action likewise arises. The letter from Mr. Johnson is printed in full, as follows:

JUNE 27, 1930.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
Chairman Senate Judiciary Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. NORRIS: I have received a circular from the secretary of our law association in reference to Senate bill No. 4357.

The circular asks us to protest against a proposed amendment to section 24 of the Judicial Code so as to take away from the United States district courts original jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship.

I am unwilling to make such a protest because I am strongly impressed with the necessity of making some amendment to the code that would keep the United States District Court from being flooded with damage cases which are obviously transferred from the State courts for the purpose of delay and with the thought that the juries in the Federal court may return lower verdicts.

We have a very excellent illustration in the United States district court for this district. I enclose you one of our recent trial lists and you will find that there are 17 cases listed for trial against the Yellow Cab Co. You will find that in most instances these are cases that were started in the State courts to recover damages for injuries and that the defendant has transferred them to the United States district court.

That these transfers are not made in the spirit of the provision of the Judicial Code in question is made very plain when it is understood that Yellow Cab Co. is a subsidiary of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. The suits against the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. are brought and tried in the State courts, while parties having claims against the Yellow Cab Co. are subjected to a transfer to the United States district court.

It is absurd to say that one class of citizens, injured by the operations of the Rapid Transit Co., have their claim satisfactorily adjudicated in the State court, while another class, injured by the subsidiary company, in the same city, must have their cases adjudicated in the United States district court.

I also call your attention to the transfer by the Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. of its cases to the United States district court. This company is no more entitled to transfer its cases to the United States courts than any other store carrying on business in the city.

I do not pretend to say what the remedy should be, but call your attention to the real need of amending the code to take care of this situation. The fact is that litigants in the United States district court cannot get their cases heard because of these and other conditions which are familiar to you.

Very truly yours,

LESTER B. JOHNSON.

A letter from a prominent firm of attorneys in Kansas City, Mo., shows conclusively that the idea of transferring cases to Federal court is not on account of any prejudice in State courts, but is for the purpose of obtaining an undue advantage over an opponent in a lawsuit. This letter, in part, is as follows:

"I appreciate the force of any argument advanced to give speedy trials to litigants, but I do not believe another judge is needed in this district or in any other district in the United States. The cure is a restriction of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, not enlargement of the judiciary or its jurisdiction. It is claimed that the cause of the congested condition in the Federal court is the enforcement of the prohibition law. It is true that the prohibition law has increased the number of cases in the Federal courts, but the increase is largely due to the fact that corporations from other States enter the different States and receive license to transact their business, and receive all of the benefits flowing therefrom, and when sued in the State courts, if the amount involved is sufficient, promptly remove them to the Federal courts.

"If Congress wants to work in the interest of the average citizen, the bill introduced by you at the last session should be passed, forbidding the removal of cases where the corporation has entered the State and is sued in a State court by a resident of the State.

"A great injustice is done to a citizen of Missouri suffering a fire loss, when insured for more than $3,000 in a nonresident insurance company, where the company came into his town, appointed an agent, transacted its business with him, and then when he brings a suit in the State court they promptly remove it to the Federal court, and the insured is compelled to go to a distant place to try his case, not only incurring almost prohibitive expense by way of employment of additional counsel, as the average small-town lawyer is unfamiliar with Federal practice, but the plaintiff is also placed to a disadvantage, being required to take his witnesses to a place far removed from the scene of the loss at further trouble and expense. Under the laws of Missouri a 9-man verdict is sufficient, but under the Federal practice a unanimous verdict is required.

"The remedy that will appeal to any fair-minded man is a limitation and restriction of the jurisdiction of Federal courts and not an increase of judges."

Another letter from a prominent firm of attorneys in New Jersey reads, in part, as follows:

"We trust, however, that you will use every possible effort to see that this bill is passed. If not, at least that the amount involved be raised from the present sum of $3,000 to at least $25,000 or more, before the case can be removed. There is no good reason why corporations coming into a State and doing business for the people of that State should not submit to the jurisdiction of the courts of that State when controversies arise.

"The situation in this State is that these cases are removed to the United States district court, where, either due to insufficient number of judges or other reasons, it is impossible to get a speedy trial. Aside from that fact it is a hardship bringing witnesses from the vicinity of the trial court, a considerable distance, and then have to perhaps travel back and forth many days before the case is actually reached."

A representative of a firm engaged in the handling of surety bonds in the city of Seattle, Wash., in protesting against this proposed legislation, refers to the important privilege which is now possessed by the nonresident in having the choice of two courts. He winds up his letter as follows:

"As stated before, to my mind this is an important privilege now enjoyed by companies doing business nationally, and it seems to me most unfair to have any law passed which would take it away."

The American Bankers Association has been active in circularizing the banks of the country in opposition to the proposed legislation. Among much correspondence with banks on the subject is a letter from a bank in the State of Nebraska which illustrates the fear created by these circulars in the minds of bankers as to just what the bill would do. The letter from this Nebraska banker says:

"There may be a good reason for this legislation that we do not know of, but we are informed that it would affect our own interests adversely if any shyster outfit can sue us in any other State than our own, as would seem to be the purpose of this bill.

"For example, this bank is now about to be sued by a shyster outfit in New York City that exploited the banks of the entire country recently (among them our own) with a deceptive contract for distributing the hearings before the House committee on branch banking. The contract was so deceptively drawn that one of the officers of this bank misread it and thought it was contracting for a dollar's worth of mimeographed reports, whereas he discovered very shortly that he had contracted for $1,200 worth of it. Upon further investigation our own opinion of the fraudulent character of the outfit was confirmed.

"Now, if this concern can get jurisdiction on us in New York City and compel us to go there to prevent ourselves from being robbed, we certainly would be put at a great disadvantage and a very great expense."

In a second letter from this banker, after the report on a similar bill in a preceding Congress had been sent to him, it is stated:

"* * * It is not what I understood it to be at all. It is probably a result of my careless reading of the original letter which you refer to and which was sent out by the American Bankers Association."

This banker had been led to believe that the bill would have an entirely opposite effect to what it would have if enacted. His first letter shows he was led to understand that if this bill should pass his bank in Nebraska could be sued in some other State and the bank compelled to go into that State to make a defense.

A letter from Mr. George Donart, an attorney at Weiser, Idaho, shows what injustice the present law brings about. It is more or less a common practice for persons who are about to sue some foreign corporation or nonresident of the State to limit the amount asked to less than $3,000, although in reality claiming they are entitled to much more, in order to prevent the nonresident or foreign corporation from taking the case into Federal court where they will be compelled to go to the extra expense of following the litigation all the way through the Federal courts to the Supreme Court of the United States. In referring to the bill, Mr. Donart says:

"I sincerely hope that you will succeed in getting it enacted into law. The present situation is particularly vexatious in the State of Idaho, where half of our business is done by foreign corporations who can remove to the Federal court any case involving more than $3,000. To people living in those counties in which sessions of the Federal court are held this is, of course, no inconvenience, but to persons living in the more remote counties it is not only inconvenient but expensive.

"The class of cases most generally transferred to the Federal court in this State are cases against fire-insurance companies and against common carriers, and so unsatisfactory is this arrangement to the litigants that I have actually known of instances where residents of the State having lost their property by fire and being so unfortunate as to be compelled to sue for their insurance, and where their damage considerably exceeds $3,000, have remitted the excess and sued for $2,999 in order to keep the case in the State court. * * *

"We have in this State one power company controlling all of the electrical energy for the southern part of the State, which, by virtue of the fact that it is organized under the laws of the State of Maine, can take any of its litigations into the Federal court."

These letters only illustrate the truth of the assertion that the real reason why many of these interested parties want to retain the present law is that they may also retain the privilege which the present law gives them. They are unwilling to try their lawsuits in the State where they do business and under whose laws they are making their money.

It is proper to say at this point that these quotations likewise have reference to a bill then pending which took away from the Federal courts jurisdiction in all cases where the jurisdiction was obtained by virtue of the diversity-of-citizenship clause in the law. They have, however, a direct application to the pending bill, insofar as that bill takes away from the courts jurisdiction on account of diversity of citizenship in all cases where an order of a State commission or board is in controversy.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE PROPOSED ACT

The constitutionality of the proposed bill has been called into question by at least one of the lawyers appearing in opposition to the proposed bill. Other suggestions of a similar nature have been made in some of the briefs which have been filed. It is hardly necessary to discuss this question. Even those who are opposed to the proposed legislation, as a rule, admit that the proposed bill is constitutional. It seeks to take away the jurisdiction of Federal courts only in cases where the litigation is between citizens of different States.

The objection of the legislation, as it has been distinctly stated, is to take away jurisdiction from the district courts of the United States. It is not intended to take away and does not take away any jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court is the only Court where jurisdiction is conferred by the Constitution. All the inferior courts—which means all the courts of the United States except the Supreme Court—obtain their jurisdiction from statute. It would be perfectly constitutional for Congress to pass an act which would abolish every Federal court in existence except the Supreme Court. All the jurisdiction which such inferior courts have has been conferred upon them by statute, and the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly held that it is within the power of Congress to add to that jurisdiction within the limits of the Constitution, and to take away any part or all of it.

In the case of Kline v. Burke Construction Co. (260 U.S. 226 (1922)), the Supreme Court said:

"The right of a litigant to maintain an action in the Federal court on the ground that there is a controversy between citizens of different States is not one derived from the Constitution of the United States, unless in a very indirect sense. Certainly it is not a right granted by the Constitution. The applicable provisions, so far as necessary to be quoted here, are contained in article III. Section 1 of that article provides: 'The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.' By section 2 of the same article it is provided that the judicial power shall extend to certain designated cases and controversies, and, among them 'to controversies * * * between citizens of different States * * *.' The effect of these provisions is not to vest jurisdiction in the inferior courts over the designated cases and controversies, but to delimit those in respect of which Congress may confer jurisdiction upon such courts as it creates. Only the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is derived directly from the Constitution. Every other court created by the general Government derives its jurisdiction wholly from the authority of Congress. That body may give, withhold, or restrain such jurisdiction at its discretion, provided it be not extended beyond the boundaries fixed by the Constitution."

This question was passed upon directly by the Supreme Court in an early day. In Turner v. Bank of America (4 Dall. 8, 10 (U.S. 1799)), the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Chase, said:

"The notion has frequently been entertained that the Federal courts derived their judicial power immediately from the Constitution; but the political truth is that the disposal of the judicial power (except in a few specified instances) belongs to Congress. If Congress has given the power to this Court, we possess it—not otherwise; and if Congress has not given the power to us, or to any other court, it still remains at the legislative disposal. Besides, Congress is not bound, and it would, perhaps, be inexpedient, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to every subject in every form which the Constitution might warrant."

It is perfectly clear that this bill cannot be successfully attacked on constitutional grounds. Congress, in legislating on that subject, has always acted on that theory.

In the first judiciary act, passed in 1789, jurisdiction was extended to the lower Federal courts in cases arising between a citizen of the State where the suit is brought and a citizen of another State when the dispute exceeded $500. In other words, where the amount in dispute was less than $500, the Federal courts had no jurisdiction. Thus, Federal courts, in the history of our country, have never had jurisdiction in diverse citizenship cases where the amount in dispute is less than $500. The scope of this jurisdiction remained unchanged for about 80 years.

By the judiciary act of 1887–88, the restrictional amount to give the Federal courts jurisdiction in diverse citizenship cases was raised to $2,000, thus taking away from the Federal courts in all such cases the jurisdiction which had before been given by the first act where the amount was between $500 and $2,000.

In 1911 Congress again changed this amount and provided that Federal courts should not have jurisdiction in such cases unless the amount involved was $3,000 or more.

All of these acts, insofar, at least, as the amount in controversy is concerned, were constitutional if the present act is constitutional. In other words, each one of these acts illustrates the proposition that so far as the jurisdiction of inferior courts is concerned, Congress can give such jurisdiction within the limits of the Constitution as it pleases and, having thus given jurisdiction, it is likewise within the power of Congress to take it away either in whole or in part.

INVESTMENTS

It has sometimes been urged that if this jurisdiction is taken away from Federal courts it will make it sometimes impossible and often difficult, especially in the West and South, to secure eastern capital for investment in the development of the country.

This argument is purely theoretical. It has no real application, as a matter of fact. The argument, even if true, is not based upon any logic or with any idea of justice. In a great many instances the West and South would be better off today if they had not been able to borrow the large sums of money which they have borrowed from foreign countries and from the eastern part of the United States.

The floating of bonds for the building of railroads, the issuing of bonds and certificates of indebtedness, and sometimes the release of invested capital from taxation for a number of years, has been, upon the whole, a detriment rather than a benefit. The taxpayers in many localities have learned, from bitter experience, that such indebtedness, agreed to by the people of various localities, has resulted in increased taxation in many cases without any return. The floating of bonds for the building of new railroads (which in many cases were not built), stand as milestones in many western localities to the error of the days when it was too easy to borrow money.

An investor who refuses to invest unless he is able to select the tribunal to which he will go in case of dispute is not only asking an unfair and illogical advantage of the local borrower but, in addition to that, the country where the investment is made would, almost without exception, be much better off if such an unfair investor kept his money in his own locality.

When we realize that during the last several years investors of hundreds of millions of capital in foreign countries and in foreign business undertakings have turned out to be not only reckless investments but absolute business losses, it is hard to believe that those who have money to invest would stay out of some State other than their own simply because the privilege which has been given them in the past of choosing their tribunal where they shall settle their controversies has been taken away from them.

The man who invests his money in Central or South America, for instance, realizes when he makes the investment that in case of controversy or dispute he must go into the foreign country, half-way around the world, to litigate his controversy certainly would not shy away from the purchase of a mortgage on land in Illinois, Iowa, or any other Western State.

History shows that investment of capital in the West and in the South, where it is conservatively and honestly made, has been a paying venture. No risk has been taken if the investor is careful in making his investment not to enlarge his loan more than the real value of the property.

Some of the witnesses, as shown by the hearings, representing large investment corporations have shown from tables and memoranda which have been incorporated into the record that these foreign corporations seldom take advantage of the law by going into the Federal district court instead of trying their cases in State courts. They claim that it is only in a very small proportion of the cases that they resort to the Federal courts and thus take advantage of the privilege which they have under existing law. Taking their claims at 100 percent correct, it is a practical demonstration, from their own statements and their own viewpoint, that they have greater confidence in the State courts than they do in the Federal courts. This is no doubt often true as a matter of practice. If they have a good case, they are not afraid to go before the State court and litigate it. However, when they wish to wear out the defendant, drag him across the country and cause him a great deal of expense, and then obtain indirectly what they could not get directly, they resort to the Federal courts. Or if we assume that they always choose the court most friendly to their theory, then it must follow that they have found litigation in the State courts to be satisfactory. In any case, their showing is to the effect that they do not need this blessed privilege which they are so strenuously trying to retain.

DEMAND FOR THIS LEGISLATION COMES FROM NEARLY ALL OF THE STATES

The State public service commissions of most of the States are earnestly urging the passage of this bill. From all over the United States these commissions are pleading for action. They realize that under present conditions, where the utility corporations have the choice of two courts, the commissions are greatly handicapped.

Opponents of the bill have striven to make the country believe that only the West and the South favor legislation such as is proposed in this bill. The demand for this legislation comes from the East and the North, as well. As an illustration of that, let us take the State of New York.

President Roosevelt, while Governor of the State of New York, on January 27, 1930, sent a special message to the New York Legislature, then in session, from which I quote:

"The recent decision of the Federal court in the southern district of New York, permitting the New York Telephone Co. drastically to raise its telephone rates, brings to the fore in a striking way the whole question of interference by the United States courts with the regulatory powers of our public service commission. * * *

"It means that hearings and trials which rightfully should be held before our public service commission or before State courts are, by a scratch of the pen, transferred to a special master appointed by the Federal court. The State regulatory body * * * is laughed at by the utility seeking refuge with a special master, who is unequipped by experience and training, as well as by staff and assistants, to pursue that searching inquiry into the claims of the company which the consuming public is entitled to demand. The special master becomes the rate maker; the public service commission becomes a mere legal fantasy.

"This power of the Federal court must be abrogated. Only the Congress can give the remedy. Legislation has been introduced in the Congress to carry out this purpose. * * * I recommend to your honorable bodies that you memorialize the Congress to pass this legislation."

This recommendation of President Roosevelt has reference to this particular legislation now pending. The bills to which I refer were practically the same as this bill which the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary now ask Congress to enact into law. President Roosevelt, referred to interference by the United States courts with the regulatory powers of our public service commission, from his experience as Governor of the State of New York. The same story could be told by nearly every other governor. It is the jurisdiction which Congress has given to Federal courts to pass on matters of State regulation which holds up the laws of the States, prevents the officials of the States from doing their duty, and robs the people of the benefit which would accrue to them, if the commissions which they have set up by law in the various States were permitted to perform their duty, giving to every party in interest the right to appeal to the court, and, if that party claimed that any of his constitutional rights were being infringed, he could appeal from the decision of the supreme court of the State to the Supreme Court of the United States.

This is no denial of justice. This is preserving to every corporation all the privileges that it has an honest right to demand. Under existing conditions, these corporations drag out the litigation through the State courts, then through the Federal courts, until, by delay alone, justice is denied the common people, justice is denied the users of electricity and other public utilities. This bill takes away no honest right. It deprives no person or corporation of due protection of the law, but it puts all persons and all corporations upon an exact equality. There would still be long delay, even if this bill were enacted, but, under our Constitution, it would be a delay which probably could not be avoided. These great corporations which now take advantage of the privilege given them by Federal law to wear out their opponents in long years of litigation do not realize that a suffering people will not always submit to this injustice.

Most of the States have appropriated large sums of State funds to set up their commissions. They have equipped them with experts and investigators for the sole and only purpose of reaching a just settlement where disputes arise between utility companies and municipalities in the various States. They realize unless something of this kind is done by Congress that, to a great extent, their work in trying to regulate rates of utility companies will be completely nullified. Their investigations made at great expense will be of no consequence. The ratepayers of gas and electricity will be compelled to bear an expense which is conceded by everyone to be unfair and unjust.

REVOCATION OF SECTION 18 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 6166 (H.DOC. NO. 240)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the Congress:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 16 of the act of March 3, 1933 (ch. 212, 47 Stat. 1489, 1517), as amended by title III of the act of March 20, 1933 (ch. 3, 48 Stat. 8, 16), I am transmitting herewith an Executive order revoking section 18 of Executive Order No. 6166 of June 10, 1933, heretofore transmitted to the Congress, the purpose of which was to abolish in part the functions of: Cooperative vocational education and rehabilitation; payments for agricultural experiment stations; cooperative agricultural extension work; endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 6, 1934.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

As in executive session,

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram received by me from former Governor Fisher, of Pennsylvania, who is now president of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce. I ask that it may be read by the clerk to appear in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the legislative clerk read as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 2, 1934.

DAVID A. REED,
United States Senate:

At a public hearing on the St. Lawrence seaway project held today at the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, at which the trade, industrial, transportation, and power interests were fully represented strong protest against ratification of this treaty was unanimously recorded; pending full report of our meeting will you not call attention of the Senate to action taken?

JOHN S. FISHER,
President Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in the Washington Herald of this morning, in the column conducted by Mr. Arthur Brisbane, there appeared several paragraphs which I wish to have inserted in the RECORD, relating to the St. Lawrence waterway. It should be noted that in the column of yesterday Mr. Brisbane pointed out that certain statements had been made by Canadian newspapers and today he completely answers those statements.

I also ask that an article appearing in this morning's New York Times entitled "Unfairness Denied in Seaway Treaty" may be printed as a part of my remarks, following the quotations from Mr. Brisbane's column.

There being no objection the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, Feb. 6, 1934]

In this column you read, perhaps, statements made by a Canadian newspaper about the proposed American-Canadian treaty for building a waterway via the St. Lawrence from the Great Lakes to the ocean. The Canadian editor said America would bear the greatest part of the expense, and get only 1,000,000 horsepower, against 4,000,000 horsepower for Canada.

Mayor Daniel W. Hoan, of Milwaukee, interested, as many millions of Americans are, in connecting the Great Lakes with the ocean, telegraphs:

"Toronto Mail statement completely refuted by United States official documents and records. We do not bear the major part of the expense, or abandon sovereignty over Lake Michigan. We get one half of all the horsepower developed."

To establish and connect the Great Lakes and the ocean, enabling products from midwestern farms and factories to go by ship direct to Europe and Asia, would be of greatest value to this country. To have the canal is more important than any little details of the bargain driven. In addition, President Roosevelt is said to desire that the treaty be approved by the Senate and the canal dug. If he wants it, it will be done. That is a safe prediction.

[From the New York Times, Feb. 6, 1934]

UNFAIRNESS DENIED IN SEAWAY TREATY—STATE DEPARTMENT BRANDS AS FALSE TORONTO PAPER'S ASSERTION IT PUTS MAIN COST ON US—THIS WAS QUOTED BY FOES—CANADA AND UNITED STATES WOULD GET SAME AMOUNT OF POWER, IT IS STATED

WASHINGTON, February 5.—Statements made in the Toronto newspaper Mail and Empire and made use of by American opponents of the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty to the effect that Canada would contribute much less to its cost and derive far greater advantages from it than the United States were answered by State Department officials today.

These statements were made on July 19, 1932, the day after the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty was signed. Although the attack made on the treaty in the United States on the basis of such contentions was answered in detail by Senator VANDENBERG in his speech on the subject during the special session of Congress, it has been revived during recent Senate consideration of the treaty's ratification.

State Department comment today on the alleged facts contained in the Mail and Empire was as follows:

"The statement that 'the cost of the undertaking will be borne mainly by the United States', is completely false. The cost has been balanced as absolutely as possible between the two countries. The United States will pay $272,000,000 and Canada between $271,000,000 and $272,000,000.

"As to the statement that 'the United States abandons its ancient contention that Lake Michigan is an American lake', Lake Michigan is, as it always has been, wholly within the territory of the United States and this treaty does not surrender American sovereignty over it.

TREATY TERMS CITED

"In reference to the statement that 'the treaty puts an end to Chicago's ambition to drain the Great Lakes for the benefit of the Mississippi Valley', it needs only to be said that the treaty does nothing but include in its terms the substance of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, surely a firm foundation for any treaty.

"The only comment to be made on the statement that 'Lake Michigan belongs to the watershed of the St. Lawrence instead of to the Mississippi watershed', is that it seems geographically undeniable.

"The statement that 'no feature of the treaty is more surprising than the low cost to Canada at which the undertaking is to be carried out' calls for explanation. As stated, Canada pays half the total. Included in Canada's cost is $128,000,000 for the construction of the Welland Canal (which actually cost $130,000,000). Every report on the project from the international joint commission in 1923 to that of the board of engineers recommended that the Welland Canal be made part of it.

POWER DIVISION EXPLAINED

"In 1928 Secretary Kellogg, with President Coolidge's approval, said the United States would agree to include the cost of the Welland Canal. The Welland Canal was not completed until 1932. It was completed, strictly according to the engineers' specification, as an integral part of the waterways project.

"What may have been the ground for the Mail and Empire's statement was that the Canadians deducted from their figures what they expected to get back from the Province of Ontario for building their part of the waterway—$104,000,000. The United States Government also subsequently made a tentative agreement with New York State to receive $90,000,000, but this has not been deducted in American estimates.

"The statement that 'Canada is to obtain 4,000,000 horsepower and the United States 1,000,000 horsepower out of the whole St. Lawrence waterways development' is true so far as it goes, but gives an incomplete picture. The fact is that the St. Lawrence Treaty has been restricted to the international section of the waterway. The international section will develop 2,200,000 horsepower, of which Canada will get 1,100,000 and the United States 1,100,000.

"On the purely Canadian side of the river Canada will be able ultimately to develop 3,000,000 horsepower. This development will be entirely at Canada's own cost, the United States will not pay a cent toward it, and to develop it Canada has absolutely no need of any treaty with the United States. As a matter of fact, the Beauharnois Power Co. is now in process of completing plants for a considerable part of that power."

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER, as in executive session, laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. McADOO, from the Committee on Patents, reported favorably the nomination of Richard Spencer, of Illinois, now holding recess appointment, to the position of First Assistant Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Hugh O'Neill, of Alaska, to be United States attorney, division no. 2, District of Alaska, to succeed Leroy M. Sullivan, resigned; and Joseph W. Kehoe, of Alaska, to be United States attorney, division no. 3, District of Alaska, to succeed Warren N. Cuddy, term expired.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Harry T. Foley, of Yonkers, N.Y., to be surveyor of customs in customs collection district no. 10, with headquarters at New York, N.Y., to fill an existing vacancy.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

NOMINATION OF BLANCHE E. WHITE—RECOMMITTAL

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, yesterday Blanche E. White, of Chatsworth, Calif., was confirmed as postmaster at that place. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the nomination was confirmed be reconsidered and that then the nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the nomination was confirmed is reconsidered, and, without objection, the nomination is recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

LIMITATION OF JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards.

Mr. HASTINGS obtained the floor.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the Senator from Delaware will yield for that purpose, I desire to move a recess.

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, February 7, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 6, 1934

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

John B. Keefe, of Iowa, to be United States marshal, northern district of Iowa, to succeed Don A. Preussner, term expired.

Henry L. Dillingham, of Missouri, to be United States marshal, western district of Missouri, to succeed Asa W. Butler, resigned.

COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION FOR PUERTO RICO

José Padín to be Commissioner of Education for Puerto Rico, reappointment.

CHAPLAIN

To be chaplain with the rank of major

Chaplain (Capt.) Frank Burton Bonner, United States Army, from January 25, 1934.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, awake, asleep, in daylight and in darkness, Thou art our guardian angel, ministering unto us and revealing Thyself in abundant goodness and mercy. We come; we wait upon Thee in gratitude. Let us feel the silent power of prayer, learn its lessons, and know more of the quiet peace and comfort it gives. O deepen the serenity of our souls, which are so conscious of Thy Fatherhood. Satisfy our skylark instincts, for they seek affinity with the sunlight of God. O make them tremulous with an inner glory. Do Thou regard with great favor our President, our Speaker, and the Members of this Congress. Give them wisdom and direction which shall enable them to pierce the thickest cloud that ever stretched across our country's sky. O Prince of Peace, spare the old world from the ravages and the tragedies of war, which in its best estate is a wild forest fire that destroys the very country it would redeem and blights the force it would protect and cultivate. O continue to be with us for Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech on old-age pensions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

THE NEED FOR A NATIONAL SYSTEM OF OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered by myself from Pittsburgh, Pa., Sunday, February 4, 1934:

I have been receiving so very many letters inquiring about the status of old-age-pension legislation and urging me to speak about old-age pension laws that I have decided to discuss this problem tonight.

Before I begin I should like to read to you a part of just one letter which came to me from an old-established family living in Pittsburgh, Pa.:

"I hope your next talk will be on old-age pensions. In my humble opinion, the best system for the country is a national system for all aged over 65 or 70 years of age. If our party can succeed in passing an old age bill, I feel sure it will be one of the greatest blessings ever bestowed by the United States Congress. I believe our dear President will be with us on such a merciful piece of legislation."

May I remark, by the way, that I have taken the liberty of sending this letter to the President of the United States, because I believe that it speaks for hundreds of thousands of people in this country.

The problem of the security of our old people springs from our modern industrial system. In an agricultural system this problem does not exist. As long as the American people were prevailingly engaged in agriculture old people could always look forward to spending their last years in peace and comparative comfort on the farm. Under our present system of modern industrial machine production the situation is entirely different. The specialization of work in modern large-scale industry, where each worker performs over and over again the same stereotyped operation, has largely dispensed with the need for the experience and skill of older workers, and the speed-up system of the modern industrial plant, with its ever-increasing nervous strain, demand younger and younger workers. As a result, most large-scale industries will not employ workers beyond the age of 40 or 45 years. In some plants the age limit is even as low as 35 years.

The adoption of private industrial pension schemes also has lowered the age at which the companies having such pensions will employ men. Most of these companies require that a man must be at least 65 or 70 years of age when he is pensioned and must have been employed from 20 to 30 years. Persons not fitting into the scheme are not employed, and thus these companies refuse to employ men beyond 40 to 45 years.

Also, modern public-health measures have tremendously increased the average span of life. In 1840 the average duration of life in the United States was 39 years, whereas in 1930 it had risen to about 60 years.

The growth of the average duration of life has increased not only the total number of aged people in the United States but also the proportion of old people as compared to the rest of the population.

In 1870 the total population of the United States was 38½ million people, of which 1,153,000, or about 3 percent, were 65 years of age or over.

In 1930 the total population was 122,755,000, of which 6,633,000 persons, or almost 5½ percent, were 65 years or over.

According to various studies made it appears that, owing to our modern industrial system, between 40 and 50 percent of all people 65 years and over are in need and dependent. That would mean that in 1930 about 2,700,000 out of 6,634,000 people 65 years of age and over in the United States were dependent.

Permit me to summarize these facts because they are extremely important:

First. The problem of old-age insecurity has been created by our modern industrial system of mass production.

Second. The total number of older people is steadily increasing.

Third. The percentage of old people in relation to the whole population of the United States is steadily and speedily growing.

Fourth. The number of dependents among our older people is steadily increasing.

Every student of the facts will admit that for these reasons the situation has reached a point where a permanent and adequate system must be established to care for our old people.

In most States the aged and older people were supposed to find a refuge in what are known as poorhouses or almshouses.

Here is how the New York State Commission, in its 1930 report, described conditions in poorhouses or almshouses:

"Worthy people are thrown together with moral derelicts, with dope addicts, bums, drunks, with whatever dregs of society happen to need the institution's shelter at the moment; sick people are thrown together with the well, the blind, the deaf, the crippled, the epileptic; people of culture and refinement with the crude and ignorant and feeble-minded.

"The large dormitory system prevails rather than the individual room or the roommate system. Privacy, even in the most intimate affairs of life, is impossible, so that despite the conscientious and often kindly efforts of the superintendents, the whole atmosphere of the almshouse tends to become more and more depressing, 'institutionalized', and dehumanized."

How much better would it be to take care of our people through pensions instead of herding them into poorhouses! How much more humane, more civilized to let these older people live a decent, quiet, and respectable life in their own community and in the same surroundings where they spent their younger years.

Human decency always pays, even from the point of view of dollars and cents. It is a known fact that old-age pensions are much cheaper than poorhouses. To illustrate:

The New York State Commission in 1929 found that the cost for an inmate of a poorhouse in New York State was $39.61 per month. Under the law of 1930, which established an old-age-pension system in that State, the average cost per person was only $23.80. Twenty-seven States have laws providing for old-age pensions of one sort or another, but the best and the most feasible system is a national one. Only a national system can protect all dependent persons of old age and can provide adequate and fair pensions without discrimination between the citizens of the various States at the expense of our old people.

There is now pending in Congress a bill which provides that the Federal Government shall contribute to each State which makes provisions for old-age care one third of the expenditures made by such State. Under that bill no State is eligible for such Federal funds unless its laws provide for an adequate old-age-pension system. For instance, Pennsylvania would not be eligible because the law which the Pennsylvania State Legislature passed in December of last year is in reality not an old-age pension law, but a pauper law. I predict that it will prove a great disappointment not only to our old people but to all those who fought for fair and adequate pensions for the aged in Pennsylvania.

There is also pending in Congress a resolution which I introduced, and which seeks to establish a national old-age-pension system on a contributory basis.

A contributory system is really a compulsory system of old-age insurance. Under it the employer and the employee must contribute a very small and almost insignificant sum of money from his salary or wages to a pension fund. In a good many countries the government also makes contributions to the central fund. The amount would be small. For instance, for a person of 18 years the weekly contribution from both employer and employee would be less than 28 cents. During periods of unemployment no contributions would be required. Under this system, when a person becomes 65 years of age, he is entitled to a pension which is paid out of these contributions.

The experience of foreign countries has proven that this is the most feasible plan to prove permanently for pensions for older people. Today 42 foreign countries have old-age-pension systems. Out of those 42 countries 31 have contributory systems such as I have proposed to the Congress.

The resolution which I introduced has attracted national attention. It has been endorsed editorially, and I received assurance from many of my colleagues in Congress that they will support it.

The United States is the only large industrial country in the world which does not have a national system of old-age security. The time has come for the enactment of such a system. The American people demand it, and I see hope that the Congress will heed the voice of the people and will take action.

But until that is done, I urge everyone of you to continue to fight for adequate old-age pensions in your own State. Those of you who live in Pennsylvania I urge to fight for a much better law on old-age pensions than the one passed at the last session of the State legislature.

Modern industrial conditions demand modern laws for the security of our people. Let us keep up the fight for them. It is a fight for a just and noble cause. It is a fight which we can win; it is a fight which in the end we shall win.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I am offering two resolutions, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

House resolution

Resolved, That the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration is hereby directed to furnish the House of Representatives with the following information: The names and addresses of the directors, officers, and employees of the Federal land banks, the positions held by such directors, officers, and employees, the salaries received by such directors, officers, and employees, and the political party affiliation of each of such directors, officers, and employees.

House resolution

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of seven (7) Members of the House, and that such committee be instructed to inquire into the method and procedure in the appointments of appraisers and field representatives and other employees of the Federal land banks, standard of qualifications and fitness required in such appointments, particularly to inquire why in such appointments so little recognition has been given to training and experience in actual farming, and to inquire as to the basis of the appraisals made by the representatives of the Federal land banks, whether such appraisals have been made by competent persons, whether such appraisals have been reviewed by competent persons, whether such appraisals have been handled in a businesslike and expeditious manner, and whether such appraisals have been fair and just to the farmers, and to inquire as to the fees paid for such appraisals and particularly as to the amount of fees retained by the bank and its representatives where applications for loans have been denied, and to inquire as to favoritism and political discrimination in the matter of appointments and in the matter of loans. And for such purposes, it shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths and shall have the right to report at any time. The expenses of said inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee, to be immediately available.

SPANISH WAR VETERANS DISCRIMINATIONS

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a brief article which appeared in the periodical Army and Navy Advocate, in which I especially stress a letter written to me by Congressman MCSWAIN, the distinguished colleague of ours, in which he explains most fairly and humanly the Spanish War veteran question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, as the editor of the Army and Navy Advocate, a periodical which is devoted to the interest of officers and men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, active and retired, it was my pleasure to have the opportunity to print in the columns of my periodical an excellent letter submitted to me by my distinguished friend and colleague, Congressman JOHN J. MCSWAIN, of South Carolina. Mr. MCSWAIN'S letter is outstanding and shows that he has a sympathetic and fair-minded understanding of the problems of this group of veterans who served in the first and only American war on foreign soil in which all who participated were volunteers. I am pleased to insert in the RECORD an extract from my periodical as a testimonial to a distinguished colleague who has presented an irrefutable argument in behalf of the boys of '98.

A TRUE FRIEND OF THE VETERAN—HUMAN, SYMPATHETIC, AND UNDERSTANDING

(The Honorable JOHN J. MCSWAIN, Member of Congress from the Fourth District of South Carolina and Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, is a real friend of the military services and the veterans. His knowledge of the conditions confronting veterans, his appreciation of their service, and his humanitarian attitude and interest in their welfare are clearly shown in this letter to Congressman HOEPPEL, which follows:)

GREENVILLE, S.C.

Hon. J. H. HOEPPEL,
Arcadia, Calif.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I acknowledge the receipt of the November number of the Army and Navy Advocate and commend you for the fine tribute which you paid to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, on the first page thereof.

What I like about Franklin D. Roosevelt is that which doubtless appeals to you very strongly, and it is that he does not truckle to the high and mighty in the financial or social world but is seeking, with courage and enthusiam, to promote the well-being of the ordinary citizens, such as you and I are. I thank God today that we have a man in the White House during this terrible crisis with human sympathy and equal vision and the moral courage of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Of course, I do not agree with him in every detail, and I differ widely from some of the administrative measures that his subordinates and Mr. Douglas and General Hines have executed in the name of the President. I feel that when the full truth is finally brought to the attention of the President, he will repudiate the advice that these gentlemen have given him with reference to administrative regulations based upon the authority contained in the Economy Act, and that the President will do justice to the Spanish War veterans and to the World War veterans who are out of money, without jobs, and have dependent wives and children looking to them for support. If such ex-service men hold honorable discharges from the United States Army and are in need of assistance, they should obtain their assistance from the United States Government in the form of pensions, and hospitalization if necessary, and they should not be forced to line up at the door of local charity along with men of their own ages, but who never served the United States Government as soldiers in war. This matter of an honorable discharge as a soldier creates a classification among citizens and affects vitally and powerfully the duty of the United States to such honorably discharged soldiers.

Furthermore, it will not do to say that Spanish-American War soldiers, whose average age is now about 57, shall be required to make proof of service connection for their disability. We know the incompleteness of the medical records of that time, and we know that the typhoid fevers and the malaria fevers through which they all suffered were sufficient to rob them of vitality and to render their bodies subject to the attacks of various diseases in later life.

Furthermore, service connection is not now laid down as a test of the right of the soldiers of the Union Armies in the Civil War to receive pensions. It is safe to say that hardly one half of 1 percent of the 23,000 veterans of the Civil War now on the pension rolls have any disability of service origin. Their disabilities are incident to age and to human life generally, and yet no man would raise his voice or vote against granting them a pension. Furthermore, at least 206 of these Civil War veterans were not entitled to pensions under general laws on account of various circumstances, and perhaps most of them owing to a record of desertion. These desertion records and other disabling records have been corrected by acts of Congress. Of course, the 120,000 widows of Civil War veterans still on the pension rolls are not required to show that their husbands suffered any disability in the service or died of service-connected disability.

We people of the Southern States, whose fathers and grandfathers were in the Confederate armies, have for more than a quarter of a century been taxing ourselves to pay an absolute service pension to every Confederate soldier, irrespective of any service-connected disability. Service in the Army does not bring on age, but age brings on disability. Of course, not in such times as these, with the Treasury depleted and with Government functioning upon borrowed money, is it time to pay a pension to men who are well fixed financially.

Thus you will see one of the details in which I do not agree with the advisers of President Roosevelt. But still I assert that he is the friend of humanity; and when he sees this matter in the proper light, and not in the distorted light as presented by Douglas and Hines, he will know that the old Spanish War veterans, in order to receive justice, must be treated in the same way that the old Union soldiers and their widows are treated.

I do not mean to say that their pensions should now be as generous, but I say that the requirement for service connection should be abrogated.

With very kind personal regards, I am,

Yours truly,

J. J. MCSWAIN.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1935

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 7513) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LOZIER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I have discussed this matter pretty thoroughly, and in the 3 minutes I am merely going to read a letter which I received from Thomas Kirby, national legislative chairman of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War. This letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 5, 1934.

Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.,
Chairman Labor Committee, House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. CONNERY: The membership of the Disabled American Veterans has been somewhat disturbed by reports that Congress is considering reductions of appropriations for the United States Employment Service. Of course, the assertion is made that the funds for the veterans' division will remain as they have been and the savings will be in other activities of the general employment set-up. Unfortunately, all of these activities are so interwoven that the veteran would be adversely affected were there curtailment in any regard. In other words, there are now offices in practically every section of the country, but the fact that these offices are not veterans' employment offices does not hinder the veteran in receiving assistance, whereas were some of these dropped the effect would be felt by the former service men seeking employment.

As you are aware, the Disabled American Veterans have consistently maintained that there are three distinctive factors in the rehabilitation of those who bear the scars of war. The first is hospitalization to cure, so far as cure is possible; the second is compensation, so far as compensation is possible for the disability; and the third, but equally important, is the placement of that disabled man in gainful occupation where he may catch his stride in civilian pursuit. Therefore any reduction of the employment set-up can but militate against the probabilities of employment for these disabled men, so the purpose of this letter is to urge appropriations consistent with the original provisions of the Wagner-Peyser bill.

Cordially yours,

THOMAS KIRBY,
National Legislative Chairman.

In this letter Mr. Kirby explains how the veteran would be affected. I may say in conclusion that we promised the States that we would appropriate $4,000,000 for all 3 fiscal years. The Appropriations Committee has cut this to $1,900,000. We want the $4,000,000. In other words, we want what was asked for in the Budget, namely, $3,700,000. This is what the President asked for, this is what Miss Perkins asked for, this is what the veterans are asking for, and this is what labor is asking for. I hope we will be able to put through this legislation.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, yesterday this body in 40 minutes passed a bill which carried an appropriation of $950,000,000, to be expended as a temporary palliative to take care of the unemployment situation and provide moneys for relief costs.

Today we are attempting to cut in half the modest sum, in comparison, of $4,000,000, which is designed to make effective the expenditure of the $950,000,000. For one, I absolutely and utterly fail to understand such action. The incongruity of it, particularly since the gentleman from Massachusetts has pointed out that this appropriation of $4,000,000 is a pledge carried in the Wagner Act which was passed last year.

The appropriation is asked by the President, it is asked by the Budget, it is asked by the Director of this Service and by the Secretary of Labor; and its need is shown in one of the most concise, interesting, and intelligent statements that a public servant has ever put into a record of hearings before the committee. To those who have not taken the time to read this testimony of the Director of this Service, Mr. Persons, I invite their attention to the hearings, beginning on page 150.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What is the number of the document?

Mr. KVALE. Page 150 of the hearings before the Appropriations Committee on behalf of the Department of Labor.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KVALE. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Do I understand that this sum of $4,000,000 has been recommended by the Director of the Budget and by the President?

Mr. KVALE. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. MAY. But has been changed by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. KVALE. Yes.

Let us understand what is being done here. The bill which created the Employment Service is the Wagner bill, which specifically states that $4,000,000 shall be appropriated annually, and specifically provides that three fourths of this money shall go to the various States on a population basis. In many of the States the legislatures have not yet had an opportunity to set up the necessary machinery required in section 4 of the act. Therefore your committee now states that they have not availed themselves of the act, that they will not need the funds, and that they are giving them all that will be required. It can easily be shown that this is not so. Section 10 of the same act provides—and I want you to pay special attention to this—that if and when States fail to avail themselves of this privilege, the Director of this Service is empowered and ordered to go into such States as do not avail themselves of the act, for some reason or other, or are slow to get the work under way, and set up a Federal division there until such time as the State can set up the necessary agency to cooperate with the Federal division.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the gentleman will yield there, does not the law provide that they can give this money to the States up until July 1935 when the States have not had an opportunity of cooperating?

Mr. KVALE. It takes it up to this fiscal year and the next fiscal year, and no such provision is made thereafter. However, this year and next year the Director can go into such States and set up these agencies.

Now, what is being done? The Director is proceeding to organize offices designed not only to take care of reemployment, temporary employment, and placement but to weave the work into a permanent structure, so that wise and judicious opportunities are afforded all unemployed, and so that the permanent employment policy envisioned in the Wagner Act might become a reality.

At present there are 3,400 such agencies. There will be an effort made to cut the number down to about 500, that being the number estimated as necessary to afford the best character of service to the unemployed throughout the Nation.

Much has been said about how the veteran is affected here. Do you not realize if you deny them funds——

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks, I add the following quotations from the act of June 6, 1933, the so-called "Wagner Act":

SEC. 4. In order to obtain the benefits of appropriations apportioned under section 5, a State shall, through its legislature, accept the provisions of this act and designate or authorize the creation of a State agency vested with all powers necessary to cooperate with the United States Employment Service under this act.

SEC. 5. (a) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated (1) the sum of $1,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, (2) $4,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, (3) and thereafter such sums annually as the Congress may deem necessary. Seventy-five percent of the amounts appropriated under this act shall be apportioned by the Director among the several States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population of the States of the United States according to the next preceding United States census, to be available for the purpose of establishing and maintaining systems of public employment offices in the several States and the political subdivisions thereof in accordance with the provisions of this act. No payment shall be made in any year out of the amount of such appropriations apportioned to any State until an equal sum has been appropriated or otherwise made available for that year by the State, or by any agency thereof, including appropriations made by local subdivisions, for the purpose of maintaining public employment offices as a part of a State-controlled system of public employment offices; except that the amounts so appropriated by the State shall not be less than 25 percent of the apportionment according to population made by the director for such State for the current year, and in no event less than $5,000. The balance of the amounts appropriated under this act shall be available for all the purposes of this act other than for apportionment among the several States as herein provided.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, may we not have the amendment again reported?

The Clerk again read the pending amendment, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: Page 107, line 20, after the word "expenses", strike out "$1,590,000" and insert "$3,700,000."

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KVALE. Are the proponents of this amendment required to use all their time before the opposition is heard?

The CHAIRMAN. Several gentlemen are seeking recognition and the Chair will recognize them as they rise and request recognition.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, no one wants more than I do to give the Employment Service sufficient money to function efficiently. Your committee went into this question more thoroughly than any other part of this appropriation bill. We had Mr. Persons with us at three different times. We told him we wanted to give him all the money he could effectively use, and we asked him how he proposed to spend the $3,700,000 that he had asked for. In the many hours he was before the subcommittee he could not tell how he was going to spend the $3,700,000. He admitted he did not know.

The money he had for this year he was unable to spend. He has $422,000 unexpended this year, which is automatically reappropriated for the next fiscal year under the terms of the act.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I may state to the gentleman that he had five hundred and some odd thousand dollars on January 1.

Mr. BACON. Over $500,000, which if unexpended will be automatically reappropriated in addition to the amount that we have given him in this bill. We have been advised that a large part will be unexpended.

The net result will be that he will not only have as much money in 1935 as he had in 1934, but in addition thereto such unexpended balance as may remain from the present fiscal year.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the gentleman, gladly.

Mr. KVALE. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the gentleman's own State of New York, by legislative act, has already appropriated $4,000,000 with which it is anticipated to meet its share of the money to be made available?

Mr. BACON. There is plenty of money in this appropriation.

Mr. KVALE. There is not, I will say to the gentleman; and the State will be disappointed and embarrassed.

Mr. BACON. It will not embarrass the State of New York one bit. There will be plenty of money in this appropriation for every State of the Union.

We did not cut in any way the farm placement service; we did not cut in any way the veterans' placement service, and we honestly and sincerely tried to give Mr. Persons every penny we thought he could possibly spend, and in the minds of the entire committee we believe we have given him more money than he will be able to spend, even if the appropriations are left at the figure the committee recommends.

This is a new enterprise and we must guard against an unwieldly bureaucracy here in Washington. The proposed salary roll they have set up is greater than the salary roll in similar activities in other departments. We have reduced the amount that can be spent for overhead in the District of Columbia. The amount to be spent in the States will be ample and sufficient.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman is forgetting that I am not blaming the committee for what the subcommittee or the Committee on Appropriations has done. But the Department of Labor, through Mr. Persons, has not obeyed the law. Mr. Persons told me that $4,000,000 would be needed to put a veterans' employment office in every place.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Persons did not give this opinion to our committee. If he had that information, he should have given it to the subcommittee. We called him before the committee on three different days, and he did not disclose that to us. He told us there was sufficient money to take care of the veterans, and we have given him every cent he asked for the veterans and farm placement services.

All I am trying to do is to convince the committee that the Subcommittee on Appropriations honestly and sincerely tried to go into the matter thoroughly, and tried to give this bureau every penny that he could possibly spend wisely. We are all sympathetic with the purposes of the act authorizing this employment service. None of us want to hamper it in any way. We all should want to guard against extravagance and waste. We believe we have provided more than sufficiently for this bureau. With the money we have given them we believe they can operate efficiently and effectively. I, for one, would not want to hamper them in any way. Your committee conscientiously and sincerely tried on the one hand to eliminate the possibility of wasteful expenditure, and on the other to give sufficient money to efficiently operate this important and essential service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, the report filed before the committee shows that by virtue of this cut the State of New York will be cut from $367,740 to $115,671, through the operation of this bill. You will find that on page 191 of the report. You will find there just how much each States loses.

Gentlemen, the whole proposition here shows that this amount is infinitesimal compared with what you are appropriating. We are spending billions to create jobs, and we want this small amount in comparison to connect these men with the jobs we have created.

Stop and think a minute. When the reforestation project was started it cost the Government more than $5,000,000 to get 450,000 people to their jobs. It took 20,000 civil employees at an average of $140,000 a month to get these few thousand boys on jobs already created and ready. This only asks for $3,700,000 to get approximately 10,000,000 men now unemployed on the job.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is making a good argument, and I am in favor of the amendment. The gentleman is contending for a sufficient amount of money to enable a law that was passed by Congress to expend within the scope provided by that law, while the appropriation provided restricts it. In other words, it will not allow for further expansion in those States that have not yet come under the law. It provides, not for expansion, but for restriction.

Mr. GRISWOLD. That is true, and I am in accord with everything the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] had to say in connection with this act.

In addition to that, the Wagner-Peyser Act provided a certain set-up that we were to use to connect men with jobs—these jobs we have been spending billions to make. This appropriation that was asked for was asked for, for the purpose, if the Department of Labor intends to use it properly, of putting into full force and effect the Peyser Act. There is more than that to it. There is this keeping faith with the States, and they have a right to expect it. Most of the States have coordinated, under Federal control, their employment bureaus in the hope of receiving the Federal aid promised.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The physical plans in many States have been subject to sharp revision and expense in anticipation of this cut?

Mr. GRISWOLD. They have been. That is one of the things the gentleman from Massachusetts brought to our attention. The veterans' end has been abolished.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. Owing to economic conditions, this is the time to increase rather than decrease appropriations of this nature, is it not?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Certainly, if we want to connect these men with jobs.

There is another thing from the standpoint of the man who is out of a job and down and out. This provides free employment agencies. It stops the blood-sucking tactics of private agencies.

These agencies are free to the employer and employee. They eliminate the chiseling tactics of the private employment agency. The private agencies levy their toll month after month on the salaries of the employees. We have recently heard of one of these agencies here in Washington that collected a toll from Government employees for obtaining for them a place with their Government. These Government employment agencies will not ask the already destitute man or woman in search of employment to mortgage his future for the sake of obtaining a job.

If it costs this Government more than $5,000,000 to connect a half million boys with jobs that were ready at hand how can we expect to place 10,000,000 in jobs at a cost of one and one half million dollars? Maybe the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] can do it by high finance but I think we had better get out of that realm and down to simple arithmetic. It could not be done by the rules of subtraction, addition, or division.

Let us be fair on this matter. Let us be sensible. We hope industry will revive. If it does not then all the billions that Congress has voted for that purpose are wasted. If these billions of dollars do cause a revival it is the best money Congress ever spent. Why not put our faith back of our billions and provide the machinery for connecting these men with jobs? Everyone admits that the Department of Labor has not carried out the intent of the Wagner-Peyser Act in the establishment of these agencies. It was the intent of that act passed on June 1 of last year to give special attention to the veteran in Government employment agencies. It was the intent of that act to take care of the thousands of veterans that were taken from hospitals and off the pension and compensation rolls by reason of the Economy Act. Many of these men suffered disabilities that did not allow them to go out and compete with the well man and the uninjured man, for a position. It was the intent of the Peyser Act to give special attention to these cases and to endeavor to find them jobs that they could fill despite their physical and mental disabilities.

The Department of Labor has not seen fit to follow the intent of Congress but that is not the fault of the law—rather of the administration. To cut this appropriation would merely give the Department of Labor further excuses to disregard the intent of Congress. The President has asked for this appropriation of $3,700,000. The Secretary of Labor has asked for it. Congress obligated itself to the States to give it. Justice demands it. The 10,000,000 unemployed need it. The destitute and injured veterans need it. Out of all the billions that we have been giving we should be able to give this pittance in such a cause.

Only last June the President requested Congress to pass the Wagner-Peyser bill to create these employment agencies. Congress passed the bill and it is now the law. If we allow this reduction and cut this appropriation from $3,700,000 to $1,590,000 then we are doing a back handspring. We are nullifying the Wagner-Peyser bill because of a lack of funds to make it operative. In the way of appropriations we have swallowed many camels and now we are straining at a gnat. If we support the Connery amendment to put this appropriation back to where the President requested it we will remedy the defect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD] has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PEYSER] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Naturally I am very much interested in it, because I sponsored this particular bill. In my judgment, there is one thing which is being overlooked, and that is that in considering the recommendations by the Committee on Appropriations we have overlooked the fact that many States not as yet agreeing to cooperate with this Bureau, are setting up their plans to come along, and the provision would not necessarily be enough. We should give what the Budget Director has asked for, namely, $3,700,000 which the amendment we are discussing provides.

I have a letter before me from Mr. Persons, Director, which states that around 30 veterans' offices which previously existed in 27 States will be abolished, and under this law it is their intention to establish a veterans' bureau in each of the 48 States. If this cut should take place that would be impossible to carry out.

Mr. BEAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEYSER. I yield.

Mr. BEAM. I am in sympathy with the argument which the gentleman is making, but I am also concerned about a statement which the gentleman from New York made relative to the expenditure of practically $500,000 that was appropriated and the Bureau was unable to spend. I should like to have some enlightenment along that line.

Mr. PEYSER. I was not at the hearing, but this law, which only became a law in June of last year, probably was not in operation until in August. If there were 14 States, which I understand, that came along in the early months of this bill, it is only natural there would be money left over from the previous appropriation. But if you take into account that there are 48 States which have an opportunity to cooperate under this bill, how is it possible to keep faith with them when by the passage of the law we have promised them cooperation along these lines?

I spoke to Senator WAGNER, who, I believe, is as familiar with this particular subject as any of our legislators, and who was terribly disappointed that this cut should have even been suggested in the House. I know if we should fail to pass this amendment, which I do not think we will, I feel sure there will be some action taken on it at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEYSER. I yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. What does the gentleman suggest as a means to speed up or expedite the use of these funds? What plan does the gentleman have?

Mr. PEYSER. One plan that is in effect is that the legislatures in the States which have no employment bureaus are now in session, and they are probably arranging a plan to cooperate under this law; and until such time as they do, if the money is not used, it is not thrown out of the window; but it is fair that we should at least put ourselves on record to be prepared to keep our word with those States, under the provisions of the law.

Mr. BOYLAN. In the gentleman's opinion, does he not think that the Director of this service should be speeded, in order that he may open offices in the States that refuse to cooperate?

Mr. PEYSER. For the information of the gentleman, I will say that I spoke to the Director of this service, and it is the intention to speed up the service as quickly as possible and as quickly as he can get an affirmative reply from some of the States that are now willing to cooperate.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEYSER. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I should like to have the gentleman call attention to the fact that even if they do not put it in another State at all, if they speed up the law, they will need every nickel they have in the appropriation, regardless of this act.

Mr. PEYSER. I agree with the gentleman fully.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEYSER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that at the present time veterans have a particularly difficult time securing positions due to the fact that many are disabled and not able to do hard work such as the C.W.A. usually entails? Owing to the cuts in compensation many who were able to keep body and soul together formerly must try in some way to get a livelihood for themselves and their dependents. In Massachusetts there is only one veteran to cover the entire State for the employment of veterans at the present time. He is giving his service but he needs assistance.

Mr. PEYSER. That is the point I brought out from the Director's letter, that he is endeavoring to have a veterans' bureau in every State, and also to provide them with some expenses for traveling, so as to cover the regions which are now outside of these districts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And it will take care of all activities?

Mr. PEYSER. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE,
Washington, February 2, 1934.

Hon. THEODORE A. PEYSER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN PEYSER: In answer to your request, I submit the following statements which indicate briefly why it is important that the appropriation of $4,000,000 authorized for the fiscal year 1935 by the act of June 6, 1933 (Public, No. 30, 73d Cong.), be not reduced below $3,700,000.

Section 5 (a) of this act provides that—

"For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated (1) the sum of $1,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, (2) $4,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, (3) and thereafter such sums annually as the Congress may deem necessary."

Of the amount so authorized, section 5 (a) further provides that—

"Seventy-five percent of the amounts appropriated under this act shall be apportioned by the Director among the several States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population of the United States * * *."

This means that instead of a series of employment offices directly operated by the Federal Government the organization shall consist of a confederation of State services financed in part by the States and in part by the Federal Government.

The President's Budget submitted to Congress recommended an appropriation of $3,700,000 for the fiscal year 1935, which represented a reduction in the amount originally estimated of $300,000. Accepting this as the amount which should be appropriated for the United States Employment Service for the fiscal year 1935, this amount should be allocated as follows:

A. For apportionments to States on the basis of population	$3,000,000
B. For all other purposes	700,000
Total	3,700,000

A brief summary of the reasons why it is essential that $3,000,000 be provided for apportionment to States is set forth as follows:

1. The States which operated an employment service and which have already accepted the provisions of this act or are now in process of becoming affiliated with the United States Employment Service, have completely reorganized their respective employment services on the basis of the amounts which are available this fiscal year from the appropriation of $1,500,000 and with the understanding that there will be available for the fiscal year 1935 the sum of $3,000,000 (75 percent of appropriation authorized for the fiscal years 1935 to 1938, inclusive), on the basis of population.

2. While it is not expected that all of the 48 States will become affiliated with the United States Employment Service and participate in the distribution of this appropriation of $3,000,000, to reduce that amount would mean that the apportionments to those States which are and will become affiliated would be curtailed below the amount which is necessary to operate the services that have been organized.

3. The Legislature of the State of New York has already made available sufficient funds to match the Federal apportionment to the State of New York from an appropriation of $4,000,000 for the fiscal year 1935. It is no doubt true that other States will take similar action when their respective legislatures meet.

4. For those States in which there is no State employment service and which have not as yet taken active steps to participate in the Federal apportionment, section 10 of the act provides that for the fiscal years 1934 and 1935 "* * * the Director is authorized to expend in any State so much of the sum apportioned to such State according to population, and so much of the apportioned balance of the appropriation made under the provisions of section 5 as he may deem necessary, as follows:

"(a) In States where there is no State system of public employment offices, in establishing and maintaining a system of public employment offices under the control of the Director.

"(b) In States where there is a State system of public employment offices, but where the State has not complied with the provisions of section 4, in establishing a cooperative Federal and State system of public employment offices to be maintained by such officer or board and in such manner as may be agreed upon by and between the Governor of the State and the Director."

This means for the 2 fiscal years ending June 30, 1935, the Director is authorized to establish an Employment Service in such States either to be directly operated by the Federal Government or in cooperation with the State system if such system exists.

5. Since July 1, 1933, there has been created in each of the 48 States an Employment Service (the National Reemployment Service), which is now being financed from funds made available by the Public Works Administration and the Civil Works Administration. It was absolutely essential that these two emergency organizations finance the National Reemployment Service during the fiscal year 1934, due to the limited appropriation provided for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act cited above.

Beginning with the fiscal year 1935, an appropriation of 75 percent of $4,000,000 would make it possible to continue the essential parts of this Service which has already been established and in operation and which it is believed it will be necessary to carry on for an indefinite period.

6. Any curtailment of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1935 and the succeeding fiscal years would not only be a disappointment to those States which have already affiliated but would also make it impossible for the Director to provide an adequate employment service under the authority granted to him in section 10 of the act and to continue the Service which has already been established in those States.

The necessity for $700,000 for expenditure for all other purposes is briefly summarized, as follows:

Departmental services	$290,000
District of Columbia Public Employment Center	37,000
Veterans' Placement Service	154,360
Farm Labor Placement Service	92,810
Regional offices	128,320
Total	702,490

These estimated expenditures are briefly justified, as follows:

1. It has been impossible during the fiscal year 1934 to reorganize the United States Employment Service as contemplated in the Wagner-Peyser Act, due to the restricted funds provided for this fiscal year. Of the amount of $290,000 estimated for departmental services, $190,000 will be required during the ensuing fiscal year for personal services in the District of Columbia. This leaves only $100,000 for all other current expenses.

2. By reference to the hearings it will be noted that it has been necessary to establish in the District of Columbia a branch employment office. The services for that office are now being paid from C.W.A. funds. Equipment for that office has been recruited or borrowed from the Government warehouse. A continuation of that service will require an allocation of $37,000 for the fiscal year 1935.

3. The process of reorganizing the veterans' placement service has been fully explained in the hearings. This reorganization contemplates that a veterans' placement representative will be provided for each State, rather than the 30 veterans' placement offices which previously existed in 27 States. This plan of reorganization also contemplates that the veterans' placement representative will travel throughout the State in the interest of veterans' placements and preferences requiring a larger amount for travel expenses in connection with this service.

4. With regard to the farm labor service, a reorganization is in progress, but the plan contemplated will not entail an expenditure greater than that which has been necessary in past years.

5. The amount of $128,320 estimated for the operation of regional offices is necessary for carrying out the provisions of the act wherein it is stated:

"The bureau shall also assist in coordinating the public employment offices throughout the country and in increasing their usefulness by developing and prescribing minimum standards of efficiency, assisting them in meeting problems peculiar to their localities, promoting uniformity in their administrative and statistical procedure, furnishing and publishing information as to opportunities for employment and other information of value in the operation of the system, and maintaining a system for clearing labor between the several States."

It is estimated, in order to comply with the provision, that approximately eight regional offices will be established for the purpose of supervising and coordinating the operations of the State services in their respective areas and providing a means of labor clearance between the States so represented.

Respectfully yours,

W. FRANK PERSONS, Director.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all parties who speak on this bill this morning be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by including these papers to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the committee hope they can make clear to the Members of the House the reasons which prompted them to make the recommendation they have, reducing the Budget estimate as to this item. It represents the sincere convictions of every member of the committee, after a much careful study.

Permit me to say that in the past Congress has often boasted of the fact that they have appropriated less money than the Bureau of the Budget recommended; and this is the first time I have understood that Members of the House were so extremely anxious to appropriate every dollar that the Budget Bureau recommended. I recall that the leaders on both sides of the aisle for the past 12 years have taken special pride in calling the country's attention to what the House has done in reducing Budget estimates. The claim was that the House in making such reductions had exercised wise and independent judgment, and as a result millions of dollars have been saved. I remember the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, now passed away, stating that the House had saved the Federal Treasury in a comparatively few years, more than $400,000,000 by refusing to approve Budget estimates.

Now, let me say I consulted the Director of the Budget after the committee was firmly convinced he had submitted too large estimates for this service, and he said: "No doubt you are right." Now, gentlemen, do not get it into your heads that officials in the administrative bureaus, often subordinates, should always be followed. You have wisely corrected mistakes in the past, do not now conclude they will be absolutely immune from like mistakes in the future.

Having made this general statement, I shall now discuss the amendment which seeks to increase this item by more than $2,000,000.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. No; not just now. I want to give some information to the House.

We now have in every county in America a Government employment agency; they call them reemployment agencies. What do you suppose this service costs, covering as it does every county in America? Less than half a million dollars; yet we are told the employment service for 1935 in this same Department will be destroyed unless they are given $3,700,000 to establish what they call employment bureaus at from 4 to 8 places in the 48 States.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Not just now.

I ask you to examine the ambitious set-up of salaries for 1935, especially in the District of Columbia. My distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] knows something of how this service has functioned, and on Thursday of last week he announced, with his accustomed frankness to the House, what he understood were the wishes of the Director of this Bureau, when he said:

> I am informed that the Director of this service will require, in 1935, $700,000 for the District of Columbia.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Later; if I have time.

If we gave him $700,000 to spend in the District of Columbia, even if you appropriate $3,700,000, the director could only use for administrative purposes in the District and in the field, under the terms of the Wagner-Peyser Act, one quarter of that sum. Little would be left for the field if $700,000 is to be used for administrative purposes in the District.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am sorry, but not just now.

I requested the gentleman to secure from the Director a statement as to how he expected to expend this money. He replied he would endeavor to secure it and put it in the RECORD; but the only statement I have found in the RECORD from the Director since that date was one setting out some provisions of the Wagner-Peyser bill. The Director has not submitted to the gentleman from Massachusetts, as he was required to do in the hearings before our committee, that statement which even the gentleman from Minnesota says is full, comprehensive, and complete. The committee required the Director to submit a table showing in dollars and cents where and how he expected to spend the $3,700,000 which he asked be appropriated. The committee, as the hearings disclose, required a statement in writing from the Director showing how, where, and for what purposes it was proposed to expend this large sum.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I may say that my next amendment, an amendment perfecting the present one, calls for $190,000 for the District of Columbia.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I knew that the gentleman, after looking into that, would recognize the wisdom of limiting such expenditures, and the sum he suggested does not materially differ from the amount recommended by our committee.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Not just yet. I desire to give some facts to the House. Many erroneous statements have been made due altogether to lack of accurate information.

Mr. KVALE. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If I have time I shall be pleased to yield later. I am trying now to give information to all the Members. The gentleman says he read the report, and if he read it carefully I am unable to see how he could have reached some of the conclusions announced in his speech a few minutes ago.

Mr. KVALE. I read the report but could not reach any other conclusion, I may say to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Let us see. There was carried for 1934, $1,500,000, pursuant to the Wagner-Peyser Act. We carry for 1935, $1,590,000, and under the terms of the Wagner Act any unapportioned balance of the $1,125,000 which represents the 1934 apportionment to the States is automatically carried into the fiscal year of 1935 for the benefit of those States which could not affiliate because of inability to match their Federal apportionments.

Up to the last of December 1933 only 14 States had matched the apportionments they were entitled to receive in the fiscal year 1934; and while Mr. Persons, the Director, estimates that some additional States will likely be able to affiliate before July 1, 1934, the end of the fiscal year 1934, yet if his brightest forecasts are realized, at least $422,000 will be carried over into the fiscal year of 1935. Only $630,000 of the $1,125,000 due the States had been matched on December 30 last.

What more? No State affiliated for the first 2 months. Nearly all of the 14 affiliated States met the requirements in October, November, and December. They will have substantial balances at the end of the present fiscal year, since they were late affiliating, and the few States that may affiliate between now and July 1, 1934, will have expended but a small part of their 1934 apportionment on July 1, 1934, the beginning of the fiscal year 1935.

What more? Every State that did not match this year has carried for 1935 the same sum that they could have matched in 1934 plus their apportionment of an additional $1,125,000 carried in this bill for the fiscal year 1935. In other words, assuming that the bright forecast of Mr. Persons is realized that some other States may match before

July 1 next their apportionments, there will be available for establishing employment offices during the fiscal year 1935 in the several States, assuming the States match their apportionments, $2,250,000 plus $422,000, making $2,672,000 available for employment in the States in the fiscal year 1935, and plus the unexpended balances carried over by affiliated States in the fiscal year 1934. To this sum must be added the further sum of $456,000 carried in this bill for administrative purposes during the fiscal year 1935. When you consider that 3,300 reemployment offices are now being run at less than one half million dollars, I ask, are we justified in appropriating an additional $2,000,000 plus simply because the Wagner-Peyser Act authorizes the appropriation?

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota for a question.

Mr. KVALE. Will not the gentleman add to that statement the fact that these reemployment offices are largely manned by volunteers and that they are being reduced in number and absorbed into this permanent system?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. These reemployment offices are being paid for out of $500,000 allocated by P.W.A. to C.W.A. and by C.W.A. to the Department of Labor. Every reemployment office is in charge of a representative from the Department of Labor, and have an engineer appointed by C.W.A., clerk help, and an advisory board of from 7 to 9 representative citizens of the county where such reemployment offices are maintained. Such boards supervise the reemployment registers and classify all names appearing on the unemployment registers, and seek to provide work for those on such registers. This service will likely be continued for sometime. Why? Because you will have Government work to do in 1935 and C.W.A. and P.W.A. will provide funds therefor.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] ventured to declare the other day, and so did the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], I think, that the veterans' service was really better under the old system than it has been in 1934. That, however, is a matter about which many different opinions may be held.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Under the old system they had one veteran to a State. Now they have two veterans to a State. They are not obeying the law. They should have a veteran in every office, and the gentleman knows if the law is obeyed it will take all of this money to take care of this situation.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. They have not one veteran in every State even now. The gentleman, if he has examined the hearings, will find that they have in his State two veterans, I think. They have only one in North Carolina. If there are any more throughout the country the Director has not disclosed it to us, but, said he, "We set up in North Carolina what we thought would be a try-out veterans' placement service there." The hearings disclose that Mr. Persons was very much pleased with this try-out veterans' service in North Carolina. He did not believe, as far as our hearings disclose, in doing what Mr. CONNERY says should be done, namely, put a veteran at every employment office. He reported that he felt very efficient veterans' placement service could be provided by following the method tried out in North Carolina. He estimated the cost of the veterans' placement service for the fiscal year 1935, even if the Budget estimate of $3,700,000 was approved. The committee has recommended for the veterans' placement every dollar that the Director requested for 1935.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Allow me to finish. This committee knew that the House was solicitous about the veterans' placement service, and we allowed every dollar requested therefor. As the gentlewoman from Arizona well said the other day, there is no partisanship when you come to deal with veteran matters. Members on both sides of the aisle want to do the right and just thing for our veterans.

The Wagner-Peyser Act vested the Director of the Employment Bureau with very broad, discretionary powers, and the hearings disclose in tables that cannot be misunderstood what the Director of the Employment Service asked for the veterans' placement service and for the farm placement service, and the committee allowed the full amounts estimated for these two services, and for the employment office in the District of Columbia. This bill carries more than twice the amount that will be expended for veterans' placement service this year under any system the Director has advised us of. Every dollar that he estimated would be expended in 1935 for veterans' placement service, even if he was given $3,700,000, I repeat has been allowed by the committee, and the hearings disclose it.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky for a question.

Mr. MAY. Did the gentleman's committee develop in its hearings the fact that all over this country discriminations, preferences, and political attitudes are taking place in the employment of people?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I catch the gentleman's question. My understanding is that there have been many complaints registered of the kind that the gentleman refers to. It was not the province of our committee to inquire into complaints of that character, as the gentleman knows. We have heard such complaints rumored on the floor of the House, and elsewhere, and I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has heard the same rumors. Our committee is not clothed with the power to investigate complaints of that character, and we have no information as to the correctness of the same. We have recommended to the House what, in our judgment, should be appropriated for the service for the fiscal year 1935.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired under the unanimous-consent agreement. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 77, noes 96.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. OLIVER of Alabama and Mr. CONNERY.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 87, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to pages 6 and 9 for the purpose of offering amendments to reduce the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, there are two amendments which I am offering, and I send them to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama: On page 6, line 8, amend the amendment which struck out $562,500 and insert $580,000 by striking out $580,000 and inserting $578,250.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, this amendment and a kindred amendment are offered for the purpose of correcting a mistake of the State Department in estimating the amounts carried for certain salaries. They failed to take into account as to such salaries the 10-percent cut carried in the bill as to all salaries, except alone in those two instances. This is in order to correct that mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama: Page 9, line 29, amend the amendment which struck out "$1,953,000" and insert "$2,118,000" by striking out "$2,118,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,101,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a table which the gentleman from Texas requested and which I promised to insert, giving the average salaries in the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LOZIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 7513) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. TABER and Mr. CONNERY rose.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. TABER. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Page 12, line 14, strike out "$175,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, the Clerk was authorized to correct all totals in the bill.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT IS PROMOTING AND PROTECTING MONOPOLY

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a radio speech delivered by Senator CAPPER.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in making these few remarks is to place before the Congress and the country a speech delivered today over the Columbia Broadcasting System by my friend the distinguished senior Senator from Kansas, Senator CAPPER.

In this radio address Senator CAPPER is discussing the National Industrial Recovery Act as it is being administered. This address of Senator CAPPER is most timely and points out two evils which are being fastened on the people of the United States by the Government through the administration of the N.I.R.A. There are two reasons why these remarks of Senator CAPPER should be given immediate and serious consideration by President Roosevelt and General Johnson, unless, indeed, they are so set in their ways that they will not brook any sincere and friendly criticism. The first reason is that these remarks of Senator CAPPER are, in the light of experience, the truth. They point out conditions which are being made possible by the Government and which completely and permanently place the American people in the grip of monopoly. The statements made by Senator CAPPER are so truthful that they should be accepted by the administration and the country, irrespective of who might have uttered them. The second reason justifying their acceptance is that Senator CAPPER, although a Republican, has been big enough to cast aside politics and do everything in his power to give this administration an opportunity to serve the true needs of this country.

Personally, I am glad to join whole-heartedly in these remarks which Senator CAPPER has made. I have been more than glad, as a Republican, to join with Senator CAPPER, as a Republican, and give the Roosevelt administration, a Democratic administration, every opportunity to serve the true needs of this country. Senator CAPPER and I, as Members of Congress during the Seventy-second Congress, saw a Democratic Congress, under the leadership of Speaker Garner, refuse to meet responsibility, refuse to do anything itself to serve the needs of the country and at the same time stubbornly tie the hands of Mr. Hoover, a Republican President, and refuse to give him any opportunity to serve the country, notwithstanding the fact that we were in the grips of the worst world-wide depression the modern world has ever suffered.

We had seen enough of partisan politics in Congress refusing to do anything itself except play politics and tie the hands of the President. We had seen the country drift from bad to worse as the result of the indecision made inescapable by a political Congress refusing to meet responsibility itself and refusing to permit the President to meet the responsibility growing out of the emergency. We had no desire to follow that course simply because the election had given to us a President of a political faith different from ours. We had no desire to follow the partisan example set by the Democratic Congress under the control of Speaker Garner. Therefore, we were glad, for the good of the country, to join with the Democratic President and give him every possible opportunity to be of service to this country. We voted to give President Roosevelt the extraordinary powers contained in the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the National Industrial Recovery Act. We fully realized that the power conferred by these acts permitted the administration to curb and control monopoly. At the same time we knew that the power of government to curb monopoly carried with it, if abused, the power to nurture and advance monopoly. We both believed that monopoly, through the concentration of the control of industry, was responsible for many of the ills from which the American people were suffering. We could not comprehend or believe that power placed in the hands of this administration would be abused so as to extend the control or grip of monopoly on the American people.

We do not believe now that it is the aim or desire of this administration actually to extend the grip of monopoly on American business. However, we are now firmly convinced that the N.I.R.A., as it is being administered through the codes, is actually extending monopoly and is giving monopoly the protection of Government. We believe this makes the monopoly evil worse than it has ever been. The spirit in which we voted for the N.I.R.A. and the A.A.A., we believe, justifies us in protesting against the manner in which the N.I.R.A. is now being administered. We offer this protest not in political or any other form of hostility toward the administration; we offer it in the hope that the administration will accept it and immediately change the manner in which it is administering the N.I.R.A. insofar as the extension of monopoly is concerned.

If the administration cannot or will not administer N.I.R.A. so as to guarantee fair and equal opportunity in business and to curb monopoly rather than to extend and protect monopoly, then we believe that it will be better to retain the two outstanding benefits of the N.I.R.A., namely, the shortening of the hours of labor and the abolition of child labor in industry, and then abandon the remainder of the program. We still believe that the N.I.R.A. can be administered for the true benefit of the country as a whole by curbing monopoly rather than extending and protecting it. However, we insist that the record up to date of the administration of the N.I.R.A. is that it is extending and protecting monopoly rather than curbing it.

With these remarks, I am more than glad to join with most whole-hearted approval in the most timely address which Senator CAPPER delivered today on a Nation-wide hook-up over the Columbia Broadcasting System. His address is as follows:

Friends in the radio audience, today I believe we will discuss the forgotten people. At least it seems to me that so far the small business man and the smaller industries over the country are the forgotten people in the new deal.

Now, it may be that they are to be protected and taken care of under this new deal. I certainly hope so. There is considerable talk that the code-making system is to be revised, and also that a way is to be worked out by which small industries may obtain loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the near future.

Both these changes seem to be necessary if the letters and reports and information coming to me from all the country are based on facts, and they seem to be based on facts.

Now, in what I am about to say I do not want to be misunderstood. I have been supporting the administration recovery program and supporting it in good faith. I expect to continue to do so just as long as that program is in the public interest. And there is no question in my mind that President Roosevelt and his advisers and associates in the new deal have as their goal the welfare of the average citizen of the United States. If I had not believed that, they never would have had my support.

But that does not mean that when some part of the program seems to be working in the wrong direction that I have to approve that. When that happens, I believe it is my job and my duty to try to correct it.

Four weeks ago today, in our opening talk over the Columbia Broadcasting System, I believe I called attention to the fact that there was grave danger in the immense powers given in the N.R.A. codes, if that power were wrongfully or even carelessly used or given to the wrong people to handle. It was pointed out also that the delegation of power to code authorities, giving these code authorities practically power to write codes, to interpret codes, and to enforce codes in their own industries, could lead to grave abuses.

For one thing, I pointed out at that time, the code authorities would be composed largely of "leaders in the industry." Now the leaders in almost all industries are what we have termed big business. And naturally they will have the attitude of big business, rather than of little business. And their codes may be written—already, in fact, some of them seem to have been written—in the interest of big business and against the interest of little business; against the interest of the smaller units of the industry.

At that time I pointed out the danger of this course of action. And my fears are increasing along this line as the situation is developing from day to day.

I get the following letter from a leading independent grocer in my home city of Topeka, Kans. I will merely say it is typical, except that it is much milder in tone than many others I have received. He says, in part:

"I want to bring to your attention the matter of fair practice code as it affects the retail grocer. Of course this thing has not gone far enough to determine just how it will work, but I can readily see that the real disadvantage under which the average independent retail merchant is working is not going to be changed. There is a widening price advantage in purchasing power to the big chains.

"The big chains are undoubtedly entitled to at least a part of this quantity price advantage, but as these chains buy and take over additional factories, packing plants, and so forth, this price differential becomes constantly greater.

"The only logical outcome of unlimited competition is the survival of one competitor, and this will undoubtedly be the outcome unless there is something done."

This groceryman whom I have just quoted, in other words, sees some good in the underlying principles of the N.R.A. and some justification for codes of fair competition. But it seems to him that the codes are in danger of being used to destroy what they are intended to preserve and build up.

From a grocer in Newton, Kans., I received a statement showing that the chain store in his neighborhood, operating under the N.R.A., is selling at retail many articles at the same price, or even less, than this independent grocer has to pay at wholesale. But he, the independent grocer, is told that under codes the amounts he requires cannot be purchased at less.

Whether it is in the code, I cannot say; but it looks as if someone has fixed prices on a sliding scale, allowing huge discounts for quantity production, so that the big business concern can undersell the little fellow and drive him out of business.

Now, you who buy groceries may think this is a good thing for you, but I tell you that it is signing the death warrant of the independent business man; and when that warrant is executed it also will be the death warrant for business and employment in your community.

My friends, that procedure has got to be stopped if we are to have a return of prosperity. If the abrogation of the antitrust laws for those who have signed the codes means that big business is going to grow still bigger; that ownership and control, instead of being more scattered over the country, is going to be centralized still more; then, either Congress made a terrible mistake in repealing the antitrust laws for that purpose or someone is making a mistake that amounts to an economic crime in administering the codes.

Complaints of this nature are not confined to the grocery business. I receive the same complaints from the small independent druggists, from the small millers, from small industries and businesses generally.

Here is another thing that has happened to the little business man who patriotically went into the N.R.A. set-up last summer. He, as a rule, went into his contract with the Government—he understood it was with his Government—in good faith. He shortened hours and held or increased his pay scale and increased the total of his pay roll considerably. That meant he lost money at the time, has been losing it in most cases ever since, because the increased purchasing power indicated has not materialized.

Also, the chains with their cutthroat prices sell for cash. He had to take the credit customers. And as a result too many of him have gone still deeper into debt. This applies to both the small industrial plant and to the retail merchant.

That means he needs credit as well as better prices. Also, he needs protection against monopoly more than ever before, perhaps, in our history. At least, that is the way it seems to most of the little business men and little industrialists from whom I hear and with whom I talk.

My understanding is that plans practically are completed to extend some credit through the R.F.C. and mortgage companies, organized for that purpose, to the small industries of the country. That is fine. That is necessary. I commend whoever is backing that plan. If the banks cannot or will not extend credit to these small industries, which are so necessary to the economic welfare and the economic freedom of our people, then the Government should do for them what it has done for the railroads, the insurance companies, the banks, for big business generally.

But I want to say right now, that unless the little industry, the little business man, is also given protection against big business and monopoly, the extension of credit will do him more harm than good.

We in the agricultural section have learned to our sorrow that the man or the industry or the business that is able to borrow money to continue conducting a losing business, in the long run has just plunged himself or itself deeper into debt, and finally reaches the place where he or it can never pay out.

Loans alone to small industries, necessary as they are and helpful as they can be, will not begin to solve the problem unless business and industry is freed from the centralization of wealth and power, from monopoly by big business. In fact, loans of themselves, without protection for little business and small industries, will only aggravate the situation and bring ultimate ruin.

There are one or two other things to which I believe attention should be directed this morning. In the first place, we thought that the Steel Trust completely dominated the steel industry long before the new deal and the N.R.A. were born. But it seems that under the codes written by the Steel Trust heads, and to all intents and purposes which are being enforced by the United States Government itself, that domination has simply been extended and made secure. It is now legal, it would seem, where before there was some question of its legality.

There also are complaints, and many of them apparently justified, about certain provisions of the electrical industry code. We find that the Federal Trade Commission, which is on the side of sanity and fair dealing for the people of the country, in my opinion, had this to say about the so-called "N.E.M.A. code", written for that industry by the General Electric Co., apparently. What I am about to quote was written before that code was approved. The Commission said:

"The price-fixing provisions of article 10 necessarily result in depriving the independent manufacturer or small enterprise of whatever economic advantage it enjoys by reason of its efficiency in operation, low overhead, including low executive salaries, and so forth.

"To the extent that this occurs there is a resultant increase toward monopoly."

The Federal Trade Commission also says of the general code for the electrical industry, as first approved:

"There are several provisions of the code for the electrical industry, as approved on August 4, 1933, which in practice may tend to eliminate or oppress small enterprises, discriminate against them, and thus promote monopolies, all of which results the N.I.R.A. expressly prohibits."

Then there is the proposed Power Trust code, which proposes to put publicly owned public utilities under a code authority completely dominated by the privately owned public-utility interests—the Power Trust, if you choose to call it that. And such a designation is justified, in my opinion. I am hoping that in some way this may be blocked. It should, and ultimately will, be blocked by Congress itself, unless the administration is able to take care of this situation in the public interest.

The danger to the public, and to those forgotten people, the small business man and the small industrialist whose plants and factories are essential to a well-balanced economic structure, and to the economic freedom of the American citizen, is looming so large that the Senate itself has had to take action.

Only last week the Senate approved, practically without dissent, the resolution by Senator BORAH, of Idaho, calling on the Federal Trade Commission for a report on the price fixing under the steel code and also on the increased price of gasoline.

Now, from what I have said I do not want you to get the idea that the N.R.A. has been turned over to big business for the purpose of fastening monopolies in basic industries upon the country.

I do not believe that the N.R.A. is so dominated or so intentioned. But what I do say is that unless the N.R.A. administration, the national administration, the Congress, and the people of this country stand continually on guard, that is what may happen under the code systems that are being drawn. And the danger is a real one, not just a possibility.

In closing, permit me to say that I am very hopeful that the national administration sees the danger, appreciates the danger, and is preparing to guard against it. And also to urge early and effective action by the administration to foster and protect the forgotten people, the small industrialists, and the small business men.

I thank you.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE SABINE, TEX.

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, H.R. 4870, a bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. As I understand, there is no necessity for the bill at the present time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

UNEMPLOYED FILIPINOS RESIDENT IN CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next joint resolution on the Consent Calendar, House Joint Resolution 118, to provide for the return to the Philippine Islands of unemployed Filipinos resident in the continental United States, to authorize appropriations to accomplish that result, and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask whether or not there have been any hearings on this bill in this session of the Congress?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There were hearings in this Congress and the committee unanimously reported this bill with the unanimous recommendation that the bill pass.

If the gentleman will permit, I should like to explain what the bill proposes. I think the House ought to know this. It is an important measure and I should like to make an explanation of the bill unless the gentleman has some special question he desires to ask.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman for the purpose of making a statement or explanation.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill refers to about 22,000 or more Filipinos who are stranded in the United States. Some of them have no homes, some of them are out of prison, and many of them have no jobs. I just want to read to you one letter I have received which clearly shows the need for this legislation and indicates the good its enactment can do.

THE FILIPINO ASSOCIATED CLUBS,
347 EAST SIXTY-FIRST STREET,
Chicago, Ill., March 21, 1933.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
Chairman Immigration and Naturalization Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN DICKSTEIN: The Filipino Associated Clubs of Chicago, composed of eight different Filipino organizations, with an approximate total membership of 3,000, are very much interested for the reintroduction and for the enactment of the former House Joint Resolution 549 or any legislation which will provide free transportation for Filipinos residing in the United States who are unemployed and are in distress.

The enactment of such legislation will, without question of doubt, help relieve local burden here as well as it will help to enlighten human suffering, hunger, and distress which are prevalent among the Filipinos in our community.

At present the Associated Clubs have received numerous requests from unemployed Filipinos who want to avail themselves of the free transportation to return to the Philippine Islands which your honorable committee and the American Congress may generously provide.

Of the 3,000 members we have only one-twentieth percent are employed. Some work part time or extras, others depend on public and private charities, but the majority is an army of unemployed Filipinos who are in actual need and want.

Several cases came to the attention of the Associated Clubs where Filipinos are refused relief by the State, county, and city welfare stations because they considered Filipinos as aliens. Consequently, even private charitable institutions stop giving relief to distressed Filipinos, most of whom are married and have families depending on them.

It will be indeed an act of mercy by the American Congress to extend its helping hands to these unfortunate Filipinos by acting upon any measure or legislation to provide for their free return to the Philippine Islands. I am sure the Filipino people will forever cherish such generous and merciful act.

The Filipino Associated Clubs of Chicago respectfully urge you and your honorable committee to either reintroduce the House Joint Resolution 549 to the present Seventy-third Congress or to consider any resolution with the same proviso of providing free transportation to distressed Filipinos.

Very truly yours,

JOSÉ M. ALBERTSON,
Executive Secretary.

The Delegates from the Philippine Islands have testified that they approved this bill. It proposes to let the Filipinos who desire to go home to go on a Government transport. They are not deported. It is not mandatory. The 22,000 or 23,000 who want to go back will have to make application to the Department of Labor. They have no means of support, they have no jobs, and they want to go back home. They will have to sign an application which the Department of Labor will have to approve. They will go voluntarily back home and stay there. It is not a mandatory deportation. It is a good investment and will save the Government money.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. How much will it probably cost? Can the gentleman give an estimate?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think it would cost perhaps $100,000 or $150,000 to take them from the United States back to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HASTINGS. Of what does the cost consist?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Their maintenance on the Government transports.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will it cost anything to collect them together?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, no; they are all ready, and voluntarily go back home and stay there.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman says "they will go back home and stay there"; how does he know they will stay there?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think I have explained to the House that if he is a pauper and he has no job he would have to make application to the Department of Labor.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not answering my question. The gentleman said that he would go back to the islands and stay there. What would keep him from coming back again?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. When a pauper makes application to go home he goes out as a pauper and he cannot enter the country again under the rules and regulations of law. Therefore he is through, and you are going to relieve this country of their presence.

Mr. BLANTON. That applies to pauper aliens from foreign countries. I do not believe that such law will apply to Filipinos.

In the closing hours of the last session our friend from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] assured us that as soon as this session opened he was going to have hearings and help us to report the bill stopping immigration to this country from foreign countries. That is more important than any other question that has come before Congress. We ought to stop aliens from coming here. They are taking hundreds of thousands of jobs from Americans. We ought to stop all immigrants from coming here for the next 10 years.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have tried to render my country a service by investigating the smuggling of Japanese and Chinese over the border. I tried hard to get a resolution passed to investigate smuggling but I lost by only 25 votes. The very men who talk the loudest about restrictions voted against the resolution, which only required a small amount of $2,000 appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will remember well the agreement I made and kept with him. He promised me an early hearing in this Congress on my bill to stop all immigration from all foreign countries. Why not stop immigration, not only from Japan and China and over the Rio Grande, but from every other foreign country? Then we would preserve jobs for Americans.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman will listen, I will say that I will give you honest restrictions and not restrict immigration at certain places on election time.

Mr. BLANTON. This is not election time. This is the time to stop all immigration.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I want to say that the Immigration Committee has been considering that question. I want to bring to the attention of the House something about this particular problem. If we are going to deport Filipinos, we are doing it——

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is not a deportation, it is voluntary withdrawal. They are going of their own volition.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. If we do not pass this measure, they will be here month after month, and we will save money by sending them back to their own territory.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I see no reason why we should give free transportation to the Filipinos back to their own country. Would it not be setting a dangerous precedent?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not expect every Member of this House to be acquainted with the immigration laws. As a matter of fact, 99 percent of the lawyers do not know anything about them, but the fact of the matter is that if the gentleman will look at section 23 of our present immigration law, an alien, legally in the country, who finds himself stranded within 3 years after his entry, can apply to the Department of Labor, and the Department of Labor can voluntarily send him back to his native country at Government expense. I am not speaking of Filipinos now. There is a bill on the Consent Calendar to bring that up to 5 years, so as to give the Department the right to send them back to their native country when they are stranded and when they make application for that purpose.

There are 32,000 or 35,000 Filipinos. We find upon a careful survey that about 23,000 or 24,000 of them are stranded, have no jobs, are walking the streets; they cannot even get a little charity.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Is it not true that there are about 10,000,000 stranded people in this country; and if we start this, we will have to send all the rest of them back?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I say in this connection, the Legislature of the Philippine Islands has sanctioned and approved taking these people back to the Philippine Islands and taking care of them. For God's sake, why do you not relieve your communities from the burden of charity?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. In reply to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN], in regard to my own city of Detroit, we have probably 500 Filipinos that must exist on public charity. They are getting into all kinds of crime; they are handicapped in getting positions. They will be the last ones to be reemployed. There is not anything vicious about this law, and I think you should bear with us in this.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Are they worse than any other nationals?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. No. They are no worse and no better. As far as I am concerned, all people are equal, and I hope I never have to base my vote on a racial question or a religious question or a national question. I do not want to legislate that way; but we can perform an act of charity for our country and an act of charity for these individuals. I do not think the chairman of this committee is unreasonable in asking for this. It will save us a great deal of money that you and I and the rest of the taxpayers will have to pay.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Both of the gentlemen have evaded the issue as to whether or not this will not impose upon us an obligation to send these other people back. There are millions of other nationalities here. Why not send them back?

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. I should like to state to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] that if we could send them all back who are out of jobs and whose countries are willing to take them back, it would be the best piece of work that we could possibly do. [Applause.]

But in this case we have a peculiar condition. I say to you again that we may all understand it perfectly well; but if we could send back all who are out of jobs, it would be a great thing to do. But since we are not in a position to do it, since we have got no transports running to other countries, we ought to go as far as we can.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Why can we not send them back on these ships that are carrying such a small amount of mail?

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN], there is a difference between a Filipino and men from other countries, because the Philippine Islands are under the jurisdiction of the United States. May I also say that it is much more economical to send these men back to their own country to live than it would be for our would-be charitable agencies to support them. [Applause.]

Mr. GUEVARA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. GUEVARA. I wish to direct the attention of the House to section 5 of this bill which authorizes the Philippine Legislature to appropriate a sum of money to reimburse whatever expenditure has been made for the transportation of the Filipinos from the United States to the Philippine Islands. [Applause.] Therefore, you are not giving free transportation to the Filipinos in the United States back to the Philippine Islands, you are only advancing a sum of money to transport those Filipinos to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I have just looked up the record for the 1930 census. As far as the State of California is concerned, there are 28,000 Filipinos in my State, and only one thousand one hundred-and-some-odd are women, meaning that all those Filipinos, in fact, are men who are supplanting American labor. They have to live on something. They go up and down my State in the springtime trying to pick fruit, and they try to do the best they can. They cannot go home. Now, other countries have been mentioned. You ask why do we not send back the German and the Swede. Of course, we do not have transport service to those countries, and that is the answer to that situation.

We have a transport service, where many of the transports go to the Philippine Islands in regular sailings once every so many weeks, and there is ample space on those boats to send them back home. I do hope that nobody here will object to this resolution. Even though you cannot get the whole cake, let us have half of the cake or part of it and eat it, and it will be a great service to my State, where there are so many thousands of Filipinos.

Mr. STUBBS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. STUBBS. I should like to give my endorsement to the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER]. This matter presents a social problem there, as well as an economic problem. I say to you that in my valley, in the valley of the gardens, there are 2,000 Filipinos who are taking work away from the taxpayers of that district.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then does the gentleman agree that the chairman of the committee as well as the members of this committee are rendering a real patriotic service both to this country and to the Philippine Islands, by proposing this measure?

Mr. STUBBS. Absolutely, I do.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is a rather interesting thing how we sometimes get our judgment disturbed by the controversy that arises during the consideration of these bills. I do it; we all do it.

The practical situation as I see it is that we have in America some millions of idle people. When these people are to become employed nobody knows; but it is absolutely known that until they shall get employment they must eat bread that is earned by people who are working, by the taxpayers of this country. That is just a plain, practical proposition.

These Filipinos are not going to be permitted to starve in America. They, of course, make the task of taking care of the other unemployed more difficult. They constitute a competitive element in the labor market of this country.

What are we going to do about it? Gentlemen in whom we have confidence tell us that the American transports which of necessity must ply between this country and the Philippines have empty space sufficient to take these Filipinos back to their homes. Now, as a matter of practical common sense, what are we going to do about it? Are we going to use this vacant space to send them back or are we going to let them stay here to remain an additional burden on this country?

What is the common-sense thing to do? Let us reduce this question to simple proportions. If we had some person living in our home whom we had to feed, who wanted to go home; if we were going down the road to his home with an empty wagon, a wagon in which we could take him along just as well as not, if the man were willing to go, what would be the horse-sense thing to do? It would be to give him the empty seat on the wagon and take him somewhere where he could be fed without our having to feed him, at the same time taking him where he wanted to go. That is the proposition in this instance as I see it.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Another element that must be considered is that these men are in competition with 75,000 Americans in the matter of securing employment.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I know. Let us take these boys home. We have the empty wagon going their way. We are having to feed them. They want to go home. Let us give them a ride home. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Would not this be the equivalent of an invitation to other Filipinos to come to this country with the knowledge they would be sent home if they did not make good?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Filipinos desire this legislation. If we can save this burden to the United States, if these men are willing to take the pauper's oath, let us give them a free ride home.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I shall answer the gentleman; that is a practical question. I would agree that under ordinary and usual conditions that would be true; but the gentleman is a practical man; he comes from a great State; he knows these are not usual conditions; he knows that if we keep these seventy-odd thousand people here, we are doing the American people an injustice. There is no doubt about that. We have this space in these ships; the ships must make the trips; these men want to go home; so, let us send them home.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Is there anything in this bill that specifies that a Filipino having taken the pauper's oath cannot again return to this country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is the rule; that is the law at the present time.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. And is it not further true that under the way we are considering this bill, it is not open for amendment?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know what amendments could possibly be offered.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. So, not being open to amendment, it means these Filipinos can come back again and still get the free ride home?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is not the case, I assure the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. What about the residents of the Territories?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Kentucky, if he will bear with me just a minute, that aliens even having as much as $5,000 and $10,000 cash on deposit have a hard time getting into this country.

Now, it is a rule of the Immigration Department that if a man takes a pauper's oath and leaves this country at the expense of the Government, he can never return. It is part of our basic law. That feature does not enter into the consideration of this question.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. But are not the Filipinos subjects of this country and entitled to come here at any time they want to?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; they are not coming here. It is too expensive a trip.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. If they come over here, do they not have to be admitted?

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Speaker, I wish to disabuse the mind of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] by assuring him that should this bill pass, those Filipinos taking advantage of the benefits of this law could not come back again. I wish to assure the gentleman from Kentucky and the House that those Filipinos who take advantage of the benefits of this law will never return to the United States. [Applause.]

May I say to the gentleman from Kentucky, however, that I am sure he does not want to do things which are contrary to the principles upon which this Government was founded. He does not want to curtail the right of the free movement of citizens or the rights of the individual under the American flag. But this is a way in which we can relieve the United States of that portion of the Filipinos who came to this country under the belief that the opportunities here were open to them for their own betterment. They have had a very sad experience, however, and I can assure the gentleman they will never come back.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Let me say a word.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman has not the right to yield time to anybody. The gentleman can only reserve the right to object. When the gentleman uses up his time, he yields the floor. The gentleman has no right to yield a half hour or three quarters of an hour to anybody. If any Member should ask for the regular order, it would stop all debate. But I will not ask for the regular order.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. This is an important piece of legislation and we should hear every gentleman in this House.

Mr. BLANTON. But I think the gentleman should proceed according to the rules of the House.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, may I say this to the House in all sincerity: The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization worked day and night to check the statistics in various communities. We are not trying to insult the Filipino people. They indicated to us, as a voluntary statement, to the effect that they want to go back. They want to go home. They are stranded. If we cannot feed them, then let them go home. It is worth to the Government a million dollars in the way of releasing jobs to American citizens.

What did our committee do in relation to this bill? If you will refer to section 5, you will find that we provided that the Filipino people will more or less pay back to our Government what we are expending to send them home. There is a bill before the Philippine Legislature today asking for an appropriation of $150,000, if I am correct, and the bill is known as H.R. 2647. It is now before their legislature. They are doing everything under the sun to take these people back and to keep them there. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky, may I say that it stands to reason that no person can enter the country under the act of 1917, section 3, when the consul knows or has reason to believe that the person might become a public charge.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If they are coming from a Territory of the United States into the United States, the immigration laws that affect aliens do not affect them.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They do. The gentleman will find that there is no quota from Canada or Mexico.

Mr. O'MALLEY. What is the quota for the Philippines and Hawaii?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It makes no difference. The minute they seek to enter the mother country they have to prove they have sufficient means to take care of themselves in these times of depression. If a man signs a pauper's oath, it naturally follows that he cannot carry the burden of proof that he will not become a public charge.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. That answers one of the questions asked by the gentleman from Kentucky; that is, once he signs a pauper's oath he cannot come back, provided such law applies to Filipinos. But the gentleman from Kentucky raised another question that has not been answered; that is, that the other Filipino people undoubtedly can come over here whenever they get ready, with no quota, and the gentleman knows that to be a fact, and there should not be a muddying of waters on that question. They can come in whenever they want to come in.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then why not do the sensible thing? Why not start right now. Let them go out and then propose some legislation by which we can safeguard all these difficulties.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. And that is what the gentleman has been promising us for a long time, that he would give us a hearing on our bill to stop all immigration from all foreign countries.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will set the bill down for hearing right away.

Mr. BLANTON. Let him do that, because we are going to keep right after the gentleman until the gentleman does that.

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. This bill runs only up to December 31, 1934. The provision for the transportation of Filipinos only runs for about 1 year?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. YOUNG, and Mr. BROWN of Kentucky objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is not a quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-nine Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 84]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHALLENBERGER). Three hundred and sixty Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. O'CONNOR, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

STAGGER PLAN FAVORED FOR C.W.A.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the C.W.A. and include therein a short letter I wrote to Harry L. Hopkins, Administrator of Federal Emergency Relief.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to be able to offer an amendment to H.R. 7527, providing for the staggering or alternating system of employment, which plan gives the greatest amount of employment, which is so much desired at this time. After considering the bill and listening to the limited debate on the same, it appears that it would not be necessary to offer any such amendment, as this power is already within the hands of the Civil Works Administrator; therefore I have written him a letter urging the adoption of this plan, which I am herewith incorporating as part of my remarks upon this subject.

Hon. HARRY L. HOPKINS,
Administrator Federal Emergency Relief,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. HOPKINS: I just had the pleasure of voting for H.R. 7527, appropriating funds for the continuation of the C.W.A. The C.W.A. program was a godsend to the people of my district and was much appreciated by them. I feel that the benefits of this work could be greatly extended to many in my district who have been unable to receive any of this work if the stagger system of employment could be adopted, and I might say there is a great demand in my district for the adoption of such a plan.

After listening to the debate in regard to this matter it is quite clear that the establishment of such a system is entirely within the hands of the Civil Works Administrator, and I therefore wish to urge this system upon you.

In this connection I wish to quote you a telegram I have just received from the mayor of Manhattan, Kans., which reads as follows:

MANHATTAN, KANS., February 4, 1934.

Congressman RANDOLPH CARPENTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.:

City of Manhattan appreciates your help on C.W.A. legislation. Randolph, any move toward staggering or dividing up the work among registered unemployed will be best way to finish up last months of program. Men who have been employed on C.W.A. feel so fairly treated they won't object to sharing others not employed, yet would have much better feeling towards everyone if they can get part time. Always call in any way I can help.

Mayor EVAN GRIFFITH.

Yours very truly,

RANDOLPH CARPENTER.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On January 30, 1934:

H.R. 6976. An act to protect the currency system of the United States, to provide for the better use of the monetary gold stock of the United States, and for other purposes.

On January 31, 1934:

H.R. 6670. An act to provide for the establishment of a corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes.

On February 2, 1934:

H.J.Res. 250. Joint resolution to provide appropriations to carry into effect the act entitled "An act to control the manufacture, transportation, possession, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia", approved January 24, 1934.

UNEMPLOYED FILIPINOS RESIDENT IN CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to House Joint Resolution 118, a joint resolution to provide for the return to the Philippine Islands of unemployed Filipinos resident in the continental United States, to authorize appropriations to accomplish that result, and for other purposes, and consider the same at this time.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, this is a very meritorious bill and one that should be passed.

Mr. O'MALLEY and Mr. JENKINS of Ohio demanded the regular order.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman from Kentucky to withhold his objection and the objection was withheld.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A reservation of objection cannot be made when the regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] demanded the regular order, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] objected. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEAM. As I understand the procedure, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] was first recognized to interpose an objection. I obtained the floor on recognition by the Chair and the gentleman from Kentucky consented to reserve his objection. Upon the Speaker's recognition of me, I have the floor under a reservation of objection by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There can be no reservation of objection when the regular order is demanded. The regular order has been demanded and objection has been heard.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I purposely interposed a point of no quorum for this particular reason. Only yesterday we passed a legislative measure providing $950,000,000 for the continuation of the C.W.A. We passed an appropriation of $35,000,000 for seed loans, and we passed a bill authorizing the expenditure of $200,000,000 to make cattle a basic agricultural commodity and bring about a curtailment of production in order to benefit agriculture.

Now, what do you intend to do here today? This morning we listened to an amendment argued on the floor of the House trying to increase the appropriation to obtain jobs for soldiers and for the unemployed people of America, and, by the same token, a bill comes up for consideration whereby you are eliminating from the industrial markets of America from thirty to thirty-five thousand Filipinos, and by the way of a peremptory objection someone objects and stops consideration of the bill. I do not see where there is any logic in such reasoning. Where is the sentiment against the enhancement of the chances of American labor by preventing the competition of 30,000 to 35,000 Filipinos? Is it from an economical standpoint? Let me refer you to section 5 of this joint resolution which provides that authority is granted to the Legislature of the Philippine Islands to initiate necessary procedure to appropriate from the Treasury of the Philippine Islands sufficient funds to reimburse the Government of the United States such amounts as may be expended from the United States Treasury for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleading from a practical and commonsense viewpoint. I appeal to you from the viewpoint of the soldier. I appeal to you from the viewpoint of the industrial worker. I appeal to you from the viewpoint of American labor. I appeal to you from the viewpoint of the American farmer. Why, for parochial or any other reason, should we put 30,000 to 35,000 Filipinos in the industrial market today, when over 10,000,000 American citizens are unemployed? Where is the sense of this?

This measure has had serious definite consideration by the committee. It has been reported out unanimously, and why should we, in an archaic way, interpose an objection to the passage of the bill? [Applause.]

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAM. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. In other words, there has been objection here by some of the same people who were in favor of getting more employment for veterans, for appropriating more money to continue the C.W.A., and while on the one hand they want more money for veterans and want veterans to get jobs, yet they will keep 30,000 veterans from getting jobs by not passing this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. BEAM. Why, certainly. I think we ought to reconsider our action and consider this bill. I believe it is an economical measure. I think it is beneficial for American labor. It is a measure for the soldier. It is a measure for the great State of California and all the Western States. I think this is a measure for the mining communities of our country and for the great metropolitan areas of our Nation and will make for the success of our labor program and will put American citizens back to work, so they will no longer be the subjects of charity.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAM. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I want to ask the gentleman how it will damage this bill to the slightest extent to allow it to be open for amendment so we can put an amendment in there so that once they accept this trip home, there will not be an open invitation for free boat rides to all the Filipinos who want to come over here, because there is not a word in that bill that will keep any of them from coming over here again.

Mr. BEAM. The basic law of our country provides that once they take the pauper's oath they cannot come in.

Mr. O'MALLEY. There is no such law.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, of course, when the bill is read it is wide open for any amendment that may be offered.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. No; it is not open to amendment. That is what I want it to be.

Mr. O'CONNOR. When the bill is read, it is open to amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. No; it is not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Every bill on the Consent Calendar is wide open to amendment. The gentleman is confused.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, let us analyze this matter from a common-sense point of view and for the benefit of American citizens and in order to promote a better standard of living in this country of ours let us return to the Philippine Islands these 30,000 or 35,000 Filipinos. Let us take our people off the charity roll and let us enact this measure, which is in the interest of American labor and for the benefit of American citizenship in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM. Is it not true that if unanimous consent is given for the present consideration of this bill it comes up open for amendment and open for a vote by the majority of the House?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Unanimous consent was not given for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill would come up for consideration by unanimous consent and would be open for amendment and debate in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WOODRUM. Unanimous consent was refused, but if unanimous consent is given the bill would be before the House for consideration, subject to amendment, either for an amendment or for passage of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But no unanimous consent was given.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection was heard.

REPEAL OF FEDERAL LIQUOR LAW IN HAWAII

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H.R. 6229) to repeal Federal liquor prohibition laws to the extent they are in force in the Territory of Hawaii be transferred from the Committee on Ways and Means to the Committee on the Territories. I have consulted the Chairman of the Committee on the Territories, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN], who says it is agreeable to him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Dickstein resolution, which has been objected to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I object.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER BETWEEN IOWA AND ILLINOIS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H.R. 5659) authorizing Charles N. Dohs, R. R. Hunt, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Mississippi River between the States of Iowa and Illinois at or near the junction of the Iowa and Mississippi Rivers.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, and it was objected to by Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois, and Mr. MEEKS.

PREVENT LOSS OF TITLE OF UNITED STATES BY PRESCRIPTION TO LANDS IN TERRITORIES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H.R. 6863) to prevent the loss of the title of the United States to lands in the Territories or Territorial possessions to adverse possession or prescription.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I think the chairman should explain this bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the attention of the House to a brief explanation of the provisions of the bill and the necessity for it.

The bill in a sentence attempts to put into operation in the island Territories and possessions of the United States the law and policy which obtains in continental United States, which does not permit title being acquired against the United States either by limitation or prescription. The immediate demand for this legislation grows out of a condition in Puerto Rico.

When this Government came into possession of Puerto Rico the military government in charge, under what is known as "military law", provided that the Spanish law should be in operation in that island until changed by Congress. Under the Spanish law adverse title may be acquired by prescription. In 1902 the local government of Puerto Rico abolished the old Spanish law under which title could be acquired by prescription. But the Congress has never enacted legislation to supersede the portion of the old Spanish law under which title by prescription could be acquired.

The enactment of this bill would put into perfect harmony the local law of the island of Puerto Rico and the Federal Government and put into harmony the law of all other territory and continental United States.

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is this law retroactive?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

Mr. LANZETTA. Would it affect the title to property in Puerto Rico already acquired by adverse possession?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think that could happen.

Mr. LANZETTA. If title has been obtained by adverse possession, will it be disturbed by the passage of this bill?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think it could be, because of the constitutional guaranty which is operative against retroactive legislation. Besides it is not a part of the policy of this Government to attempt to enact retroactive legislation, even if there were no constitutional prohibition.

Mr. LANZETTA. My solicitousness was in connection with cases where title has already been acquired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think so. We are only attempting to harmonize the Federal law with the local law, operative in Puerto Rico, and to make the law elsewhere, if there be conflict, harmonize with the Federal law operative in continental United States.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Would the gentleman have any objection to passing this over without prejudice until the next Consent Calendar, so that we can have an opportunity to look into the statutes and decisions upon this question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that. I cannot say that I have no objection, but while I have the floor and the patience of the House, I will be glad to explain anything with reference to the matter, and I think the gentleman is too good a lawyer to have any serious apprehension as to the possible consequences of this legislation.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is there still a military government in Puerto Rico? I do not know, really.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think so.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Can the gentleman say whether there is, yes or no?

Mr. LANZETTA. It is a civil government.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. I know it is not a military government.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then there is no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no prescription or statute of limitations shall run, or continue to run, against the title of the United States to lands in any territory or possession or place or territory under the jurisdiction or control of the United States, including the Philippine Islands; and that no title to any such lands of the United States or any right therein shall be acquired by adverse possession or prescription, or otherwise than by conveyance from the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REMOVAL OF AMERICAN NATIONALS ACCUSED OF CRIME

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5862, to provide for the removal of American citizens and nationals accused of crime to and from the jurisdiction of any officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 591 of title 18 of the United States Code, so far as applicable, shall apply within the jurisdiction of the United States in any country where the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction for the arrest and removal therefrom to the United States, its Territories, Districts, or possessions, including the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, or any other territory governed, occupied, or controlled by it, of any citizen or national of the United States who is a fugitive from justice charged with or convicted of the commission of any crime or offense against the United States, and shall also apply throughout the United States, its Territories, Districts, and possessions, including the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, as well as to any other territory governed, occupied, or controlled by the United States, for the arrest and removal therefrom to the jurisdiction of any officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, of any citizen or national of the United States who is a fugitive from justice charged with or convicted of the commission of any crime or offense against the United States in any country where it exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction. Such fugitive first mentioned may, by any officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction and agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders subject to such jurisdiction, be arrested and imprisoned or admitted to bail, as the case may be, pending the issuance of a warrant for his removal to the United States, its Territories, Districts, or possessions, including the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, or any other territory governed, occupied, or controlled by it, which warrant it shall be the duty of the principal officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in the country where the fugitive shall be found seasonably to issue, and of the United States marshal or corresponding officer to execute. Such marshal or other officer, or the deputies of such marshal or officer, when engaged in executing such warrant without the jurisdiction of the court to which they are attached, shall have all the powers of a marshal of the United States so far as such powers are requisite for the prisoner's safekeeping and the execution of the warrant.
